New tennis courts will be built near the pair of courts behind Milliken Field. The baseball diamond will be relocated and two practices fields are expected to be constructed on the Milliken Field site. Collins said there is the possibility of the addition of a bridge between Milliken Field and the new field. A walkway surrounding the field is also part of the project.

The all-weather track will circle the new lighted field. A 3-foot fence will circle the track and the field will be surrounded by a 6-foot fence.

When you're the defending Division I state champion soccer team you can afford to relax a little. But don't tell that to the Marshfield High girls' soccer team.

In the Lady Rams season opener on Monday afternoon, the champs rolled to an impressive 7-0 victory over Middleboro using a relentless and speedy offensive attack.

There was no loafing, no extra celebrations after goals and no messing around by the players. They simply took care of business on the field.

And while Middleboro is far from a state title contender, the Lady Rams know they have to play every game like it was the title game on the turf in Worcester last fall.

"There's no complacency on our part," said MHS tri-captain Alexa Ricardo. "We know that every team will be looking to knock us off. We won't be coasting or taking anyone lightly."

Ricardo and fellow captains Tyla Brennan and Heather Barrett set the tone on Monday for the Lady Rams. Ricardo had a goal and an assist, Brennan chipped in a pretty assist and Barrett was a defensive monster.

And while the Lady Rams are not talking about a state title repeat just yet, they have a lot of pride.

"We are definitely motivated this year," Brennan said. "We want to keep winning, especially with some of the newspapers not rating us that high."

Brennan is referring to several daily publications like the Globe and Herald that have already predicted the Lady Rams will not be as successful this season in the Atlantic Coast League and the Division I state tourney.

These "experts" claim the Lady Rams are not as talented this time around. However, the first rule in journalism is to consider the source and it is obvious that these "experts" do not know what they are talking about in their predictions.

I don't remember seeing any reporters from the Globe or the Herald until the last two rounds of the Division I state tourney last year. And during the regular season and the first few rounds of the state tourney-nothing.

How can someone write about a team and make predictions when they haven't even seen them play?

Secondly, there weren't any other reporters at the Lady Rams season opener on Monday. I guess we'll see most of them later in the year after their predictions falter.

At that game, I saw a team that totally controlled play. The Lady Rams look great and should be considered the best in the state until they are knocked off. (And they will be tested early as they square off with Duxbury in an Atlantic Coast League showdown on Wednesday night. Last year Duxbury won the Division II state crown after splitting their two regular season

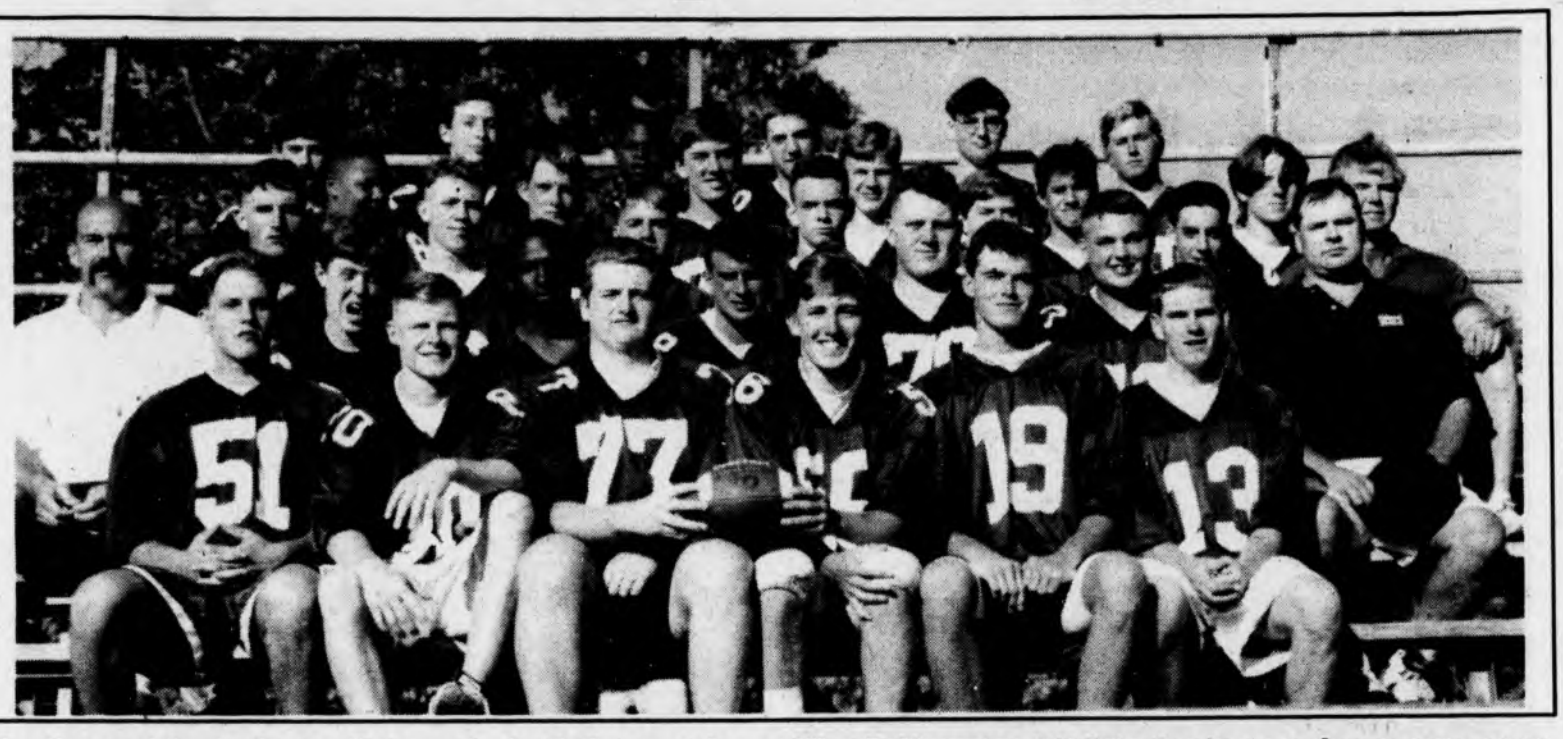
Cohasset Football
with Jim O'Sullivan



The Cohasset Junior/Senior High varsity football team takes on West Bridgewater this Saturday in a non-league away game beginning at 1:30 p.m. Co-captains Brian Sasso and Brian Riley will be looked upon to lead Cohasset in South Shore League action this season.

The fleet young Cohasset Skippers traveled to Hanover High School to take part in the South Shore Football Jamboree, where they were pitted against Hull. The jamboree provides an place for South Shore teams to engage in 24-minute scrimmages, with no kickoffs and teams taking the ball from the 35-yard line.

Cohasset Coach Bob Knurek said of the jamboree, "It's an excellent way to promote league integrity and cohesion. It's a showcase for all of the different players. I think that it will be an awesome way to start the season."

Hull got the better of its Thanksgiving Day rival with a 32-0 win.

On the first play from scrimmage, the Skippers and quarterback Ben Keefe drew the Pirates offside. Senior Mike Dunphy rushed for two yards and was then driven back three. On third and seven, Cohasset jumped offside, bringing up third and 12. Hull's Mike Damon picked off a pass and the Pirates marched down the field, with Damon scoring the touchdown. He also scored the two-point conversion, giving Hull an 8-0 edge.

CHS couldn't gain a first down on their next possession, and the punting squad came on. Hull scored again when Mike Burke took a pass into the end zone and rushed in for the conversion. Hull led 16-0. On their next drive, Cohasset was again forced to punt and Dunphy blasted one for 45 yards. Tough defense by Keefe and Kevin Gentile gave Hull third and 12 at Cohasset's 12-yard line. Keefe's diving interception saved a touchdown for the Skippers, but they couldn't move the ball before the clock wound down to the half.

The beginning of the second half saw Cohasset's Grant Emde break free for 15-yard gain, but it wasn't enough, as Cohasset again had to punt. Hull drove in for another touchdown and the two-point conversion, which gave the Pirates a 24-0 lead. Hull intercepted another pass and, in spite of excellent defense by Brian Riley and Andy Hamilton, scored and converted, ending the score at 32-0. With 1:30 left, Hull's Dave Mitchell picked off a pass and carried it back until he was sandwiched between Gentile and Dunphy, who stopped him cold.

Cohasset's game did have bright spots. As captain Brian Sasso, who was sidelined by a concussion, pointed out, Cohasset's offensive and defensive lines had no players who started last year. Freshman lineman Lucius Caldwell made his varsity debut, and fellow frosh lineman Alex Russell put a positive spin on the outing: "Despite our shortcomings, I am confident that we can overcome them and put together a winning season."

Knurek cited Cohasset's weaknesses as poor wrapping on tackles, the fact that they were too slow to react on both sides of the Fall recreation programs

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept mail-in registrations for fall recreation programs for children ages 4 and 5 and grades K-3. Programs are scheduled to begin the week of Sept. 18, and continue for six weeks through Oct. 26. (Monday group ends Oct. 30, due to Columbus Day.) Programs are as follows:

Monday, grades K-3, soccer skills/games, Osgood Field, 2:50 to 5 p.m. (No class Monday, Oct. 9, final class Monday, Oct. 30).

Tuesday, ages 4-5, soccer skills/games, Osgood Field, 3 to 5 p.m.

Wednesday, grades K-3, arts and crafts, Osgood, 2:50 to 5 p.m.

Thursday, ages 4-5, games and sports, Osgood Field, 3 to 5 p.m.

Each program meets for two hours weekly for a six-week period. Some programs will have to be postponed should inclement weather dictate and you may call the recreation office at 383-6791, after 1 p.m., if you are in doubt of program status. Osgood children will be advised and sent home should programs not meet. The week of Oct. 30 through Nov. 3, will be utilized for make-up classes if necessary.

Children may bring snacks/drinks to programs and all children must be picked up either prior to, or promptly at the concluding program times. Children may stay after school to participate once parental permission is given on the registration form.

Please send completed registration with check payable to Town of Cohasset, Cohasset Recreation Department, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, 02025.

Fees: one child any six week program, $23; Second child, $20. Two day program, one child, $40; second child, $18; third child free.

games with Marshfield.)

One more thing about newspaper polls. I once asked a state champion soccer coach about his team's high ranking one year and he replied, "Those polls don't mean squat. Nobody who is serious about soccer pays attention to them."

I'll take his word for it. He has won more state titles than any reporter I know.

It is plainly obvious that any pre-season predictions must be taken with a grain of salt.

It appears that soccer referees are going to crack down on bad language and poor sportsmanship during the fall high school season.

Before the girls' soccer season opener between Marshfield and Middleboro the refs told both teams that anyone caught swearing or taunting would be given an immediate yellow and red card. (For those unfamiliar, a red card means you're gone from the game.)

It is not known if every ref will take the same approach for every game but it would help prevent some of the ugliness that occurred in some soccer games last season.

A couple brawls here and there can really put a damper on fun soccer. And nothing says class like a player using foul language.

However, some of the worst behavior is often exhibited by the parents and fans at soccer games.

Some parents, still living vicariously through their high school hero children, lose their minds over a close play and often scream the entire game at the refs, the coaches or the other team.

Other times students at the game decide to break up the boredom of having to actually pay attention by heckling the opposing players.

These packs of morons often pick on one player and relentlessly yell things until that player responds.

It would be nice if the fans would be red-carded once in a while. That would be the best step for cleaning up the game.

First of all, I'm hardly an "expert" in sports medicine or physical rehabilitation. You should know that up front. So when I write about how to prevent injuries and treat the ones I have had in the past, my information comes mainly from former high school and college coaches. They know more than I do on the subject, but, again, are not licensed in the sports medicine field.

Secondly, I have no idea what it feels like to take a bone-crunching hit from a defensive player during a kick-off return. My sports injuries were limited to those associated with cross country and track & field — muscle pulls, tendonitis, fallen arches — not basketball, baseball or football.

Still, some injuries do cross over from sport to sport and I believe I can offer some advice based on my own experiences.

Probably the most frustrating injury I ever had was a case of tendonitis in my knee I sustained during the start of the cross country season during my sophomore year in college. I went for a quick, five-mile run in early September without stretching nearly enough. The trails I ran on were littered with rocks and roots. I believe they helped cause the injury.

That evening, the left side of my knee became very sore and painful. The pain was particularly intense when I walked down stairs. I went to a doctor and his diagnosis was tendonitis. The pain became so intense I wound up on crutches for two months, bringing my cross country season to a quick finish.

Although I was on crutches, I was still able to maintain at least some degree of fitness by swimming in the Bridgewater State College pool and lifting weights for my upper body. During my free periods I would go down to the trainer's room and ice the area to control the swelling. Applying ice to an injury is one of the most recommended and effective treatments to the majority of minor injuries. There hasn't been an injury I've had yet where icing hasn't been part of the recovery process.

When you come back from your injury, do so very slowly. The minute you feel a twinge of pain, stop. You're not yet ready to go all-out. Pain is there for a reason. It's your bodies way of telling you there is something wrong. To ignore it is a critical mistake with, sometimes, serious consequences.

Stretching is another area that is oftentimes overlooked. It is important to warm the body up and limber the muscles and tendons up before any strenuous activity. Failing to do this can result in pulled muscles, strains or a number of other injuries.

Be sure to get plenty of rest. Fatigue can be a cause of injury. The body becomes tired and you're not as alert in avoiding potential injury situations.

My best advice? Every athlete should purchase a book that deals specifically with sports-related injuries. Ask your coach for advice. Ask the team trainer what you can do for injuries while you are sidelined. The more knowledge you acquire, the better off you'll be in recognizing the warning signs the next time.

Athletic facility moving along. . .

Lights were originally included in the project when approved at the 1994 annual town meeting, but had to be eliminated because they didn't fit into the proposed budget. Cohasset resident Jane W. Cook then came forward and donated $60,000 towards lighting the athletic facility.

"The plan obviously with the lights is to showcase the sports at night," Collins said.

Voters agreed by a margin of 3-to-1 to raise the tax levy. The Prop. 2-1/2 override was required to help pay for the project, which under law constraints, could not be absorbed with the 2-1/2 cap.

The field will be used for soccer, field hockey, lacrosse, football and field events during the track season. The track is also available for residents to use.

The project is expected to give a tremendous boost to the high school team which has struggled the last several seasons because of low turnouts for the squad. The team oftentimes had to rely on Scituate High's track and field facility for its "home" meets because the track was unsuitable. Poor drainage often forced the team to practice in the parking lot and in the gymnasium. Collins is hoping the addition of the track will lead to more kids joining the squad.

"This puts a whole new face on the track program," Collins said. "They've been working at it all summer."

Chatterton said the entire project is 70-percent complete and praised contractor Bob Delmonico of Delmonico RAD Corp. for the work he has done.

"His expertise has been in fields," Chatterton said. "He has done an incredible job."

Bleachers have been moved to the visitors' side of the football field and the scoreboard girders are in place. Delmonico was busy on Wednesday morning digging holes for the goal posts.

Work on the baseball field has been going smoothly as well. The infield sod was laid on Tuesday, along with cement for the dugout foundation.

Essential weather eye

One of life's most harrowing experiences for the boater, especially the small craft skipper, is being caught far out on the water in foul weather. This is why the Coast Guard Auxiliary, in its public education classes on boating skills and seamanship, cautions skippers of all ages to keep a continuous, wary eye on the weather.

With little warning, a calm, sunny day can be transformed — sometimes in a matter of minutes — into threatening, even dangerous conditions. Line squalls, thunderstorms, local fogs and the like cannot always be predicted.

What should you do at the first warning of approaching heavy weather? When wind and water start to build, it's time to head for shelter. It is also time to get everyone into a personal flotation device.

Your next decision is critical. Do you weather the storm at anchor or at low power? Do you attempt to run for safer waters? In cases of extremely severe conditions, it may be better to drop anchor or ride out the bad weather until it passes.

If you decide to run with the storm, be careful to use only enough power to keep your boat heading into the waves, not letting it pound. A little pitching and tossing is a lot safer than rolling.

As you prepare to ride out the weather, act quickly to make the necessary preparations before the storm hits. Secure all hatches. Lash down loose gear. Prepare anchoring equipment in case it is needed. Make a positive fix on direction toward shore.

Heavy weather normally does not endanger a well-found boat. If the boat has a high freeboard at the stern it might be safer to turn the stern to the sea and head for shelter. Outboards with a low transom should never be run in a following sea (where waves are coming toward the stern) as waves travel at high speeds and can swamp a boat or drown its engine.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary's best advice to skippers is to know your boat, its capabilities and its limitations in rough water, as well as one's own capabilities, know-how and limitations for piloting in heavy weather. A fundamental rule is "DON'T TAKE CHANCES."

Here are a few other tips, especially for the small boat skipper. When your choice in a weather crisis is to run into the heavy seas, obviously the vessel must be slowed down, to avoid taking a tremendous beating, with possible damage to the hull.

Seas should be taken bow-on, at a slight angle of about 45 degrees. This will lessen the pounding. But if conditions make headway impossible, it may be advisable to drop anchor.

As a boater, you must learn to recognize those weather signs that warn of approaching storms. You must know where to obtain the latest weather information and be able to relate it to your cruise plans. The radio keeps the boater constantly in touch with weather forecasts, thereby giving the skipper information necessary to avoid mishaps, even tragedies.

Your next decision is critical. Do you weather the storm at anchor or at low power? Do you attempt to run for safer waters? In cases of extremely severe conditions, it may be better to drop anchor or ride out the bad weather until it passes.

If you decide to run with the storm, be careful to use only enough power to keep your boat heading into the waves, not letting it pound. A little pitching and tossing is a lot safer than rolling.

As you prepare to ride out the weather, act quickly to make the necessary preparations before the storm hits. Secure all hatches. Lash down loose gear. Prepare anchoring equipment in case it is needed. Make a positive fix on direction toward shore.

Heavy weather normally does not endanger a well-found boat. If the boat has a high freeboard at the stern it might be safer to turn the stern to the sea and head for shelter. Outboards with a low transom should never be run in a following sea (where waves are coming toward the stern) as waves travel at high speeds and can swamp a boat or drown its engine.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary's best advice to skippers is to know your boat, its capabilities and its limitations in rough water, as well as one's own capabilities, know-how and limitations for piloting in heavy weather. A fundamental rule is "DON'T TAKE CHANCES."

Here are a few other tips, especially for the small boat skipper. When your choice in a weather crisis is to run into the heavy seas, obviously the vessel must be slowed down, to avoid taking a tremendous beating, with possible damage to the hull.

Seas should be taken bow-on, at a slight angle of about 45 degrees. This will lessen the pounding. But if conditions make headway impossible, it may be advisable to drop anchor.

As a boater, you must learn to recognize those weather signs that warn of approaching storms. You must know where to obtain the latest weather information and be able to relate it to your cruise plans. The radio keeps the boater constantly in touch with weather forecasts, thereby giving the skipper information necessary to avoid mishaps, even tragedies.

Notification snafu won't sink Marina plans

Parking lot plans on Tuesday's agenda

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Although conservation commission members are likely to approve a plan to improve the parking lot at Cohasset Harbor Marina, 33 Parker Ave., last week they asked the applicant to reappear after properly notifying abutters of the hearing.

After considerable discussion, the commission voted three to one, with one abstention, to ask marina owner Paul Trendowicz to notify abutters, telling them exactly when the continued hearing will be held.

The issue is scheduled to be discussed Tuesday, Sept. 19 at 8 p.m.

Commissioners Jeffrey Waal, Susan Cope and vice chairman Edward Graham voted to ask the applicant to reappear, while Veneta Roebuck voted no and commission chairman abstained because he is the attorney representing Trendowicz.

Conservation commission by-laws require that applicants notify abutters either via registered mail, return receipt requested, or by hand, with proof that delivery was at least attempted.

Robert Alvarez, the engineer for the project, did not do this. Instead, he submitted an affidavit with his work proposal, indicating that abutters were notified. His notice did not state the date and time of the hearing, but did explain how abutters could find out that information.

Alvarez told the board that he complied with the state notification requirements.

"I hope you will tear off your by-law," he said.

Roebuck agreed, urging that the notification process be simplified as it can be a burden to applicants.

At the suggestion of conservation commission member Waal, Graham agreed to hold the issue open, but proceed with the hearing. The vote was taken later in the evening.

Board of health member Robert Davenport asked if they had ever proceeded with a public hearing without proof of notification.

"This is the first time we've had something like this," said Waal. "We're going to leave that as an open issue."

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said, "The public should be informed, even for a partial project. Sometimes in the future it comes back to haunt the applicant."

Roebuck replied that state law was complied with.

The work itself appears routine. Engineer Robert Alvarez explained that the parking lot will be regraded with crushed stone and the boundary between the lot and the salt marsh will be clearly delineated.

Since erosion has been a problem, the slope to the water will be altered and rip rap stone will be taken up and reinstalled over a filter fabric.

He said the project would reduce runoff to the marsh.

In addition, plants, such as rosa bagosa, would be planted at the edge of the marsh.

Under wetlands law, property owners have the right to maintain situations that were existing prior to the passage of the law. The marina existed before the law was passed, Alvarez said.

Conservation commission consultant Paul Shea, who has viewed the site, wanted barriers installed to outline exactly where the stone should go. Alvarez agreed to do that.

Trendowicz asked selectmen earlier this year if he could buy part of the town-owned Hagerty property, which is beside the marina. The request is not now under active consideration, but has prompted speculation that Trendowicz is planning to expand the facility.

When Cope asked Trendowicz about the future, he did not rule an expansion out.

"At this time, we really don't have a plan," he said.

The issue of abutter notification generated considerable discussion.

Graham ran the meeting, since Callahan left the room during the hearing, in compliance with the state's conflict of interest law.

Roebuck, said that town counsel Richard Henderson has ruled that she does not have a conflict. Her daughter works for the same engineering firm as Alvarez, but is not a shareholder in the firm, so no conflict was determined.

Walking tours are planned

The Cohasset Historical Commission will present two walking tours of Cohasset's most historic areas. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the 1995 "Harborwalk" will tour the town's maritime area, once the site of a thriving shipbuilding and fishing industry. Altogether, Cohasset's maritime industry provided work for the majority of the town's working people during the "age of the sail." Shipbuilding began at "Ship Cove," now Cohasset harbor, in the early 1700s and continued until the late 19th century.

On Sunday, Oct. 1, a walking tour of historic Cohasset Common and the village center is planned.

On both tours some of the finest examples of early architecture in the town may be seen. Both tours will meet at the Historical Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center, at 2 p.m. on the scheduled days, and the Society's curator will conduct both walks. There is no charge for the tours, but donations at the museum are welcome.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

A GOOD FLOOR PLAN

QUESTION: I have been looking at old homes but they all seem to have jumbled up floor plans caused by adding rooms or changing room sizes. What is your guide to a good floor plan?

ANSWER: A sound floor plan is one where you can get to areas of the house without going through another area (like a bedroom). The different areas should be well separated. The kitchen should be easily accessible from the dining room and recreation area.

Improperly placed or over sized windows can make furniture arrangement impossible. A good floor plan is only appreciated when you have suffered through a bad one.

Title V, rail on Pierson to Person

Thursday, Sept. 14, host Wigmore Pierson's guests on Pierson to Person will be civil engineer Neil Murphy; health agent Jennifer Lamb-Sullivan; banker Robert Gaughen; soil evaluator Chris Podgurski; and septage hauler Michael Spirito.

The discussion will center on current problems citizens are having with implementing Title V restrictions regarding septic systems and cesspools.

The second segment guests will be Terry Fancher and Ron Zooleck from the South Shore Chamber of Commerce reviewing the results of its survey of public opinion regarding the proposed revival of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony railroad.

The Pierson to Person television show is broadcast live each Thursday, 8 to 9 p.m., from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channel 53 in Hingham, and on Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset. The public is invited to be part of the studio audience each Thursday evening and those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Road by 7:30 p.m.

For further information about upcoming guests and additional show information call the Pierson Show's Executive Producer, Robert Belliveau, at 545-2500.

Stress workshop

A workshop on stress management will be held Monday, Sept. 18, 7:30 p.m. at Remedies, Route 53, Norwell.

Annabelle Quig Wallace, a Hingham resident and lifestyle management counselor, will lead the class which is designed to help partcipants recognize stress and its warning signals, and to learn healthy ways to deal with it.

For information or to register, call 982-9369. Reservations are required. A $12 charge is payable at the workshop.

Police Briefs

9-1-1 calls are on the increase

Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said Emergency 9-1-1 calls were up in August. The department answered 142, 9-1-1 calls.

"That was up from 90 in July," he said. "Also during August, I was notified by Chuck Reardon of Mass. 9-1-1 that our first 911 call on June 7 was sent to the television show "Rescue 9-1-1" for a suggested story line.

The first call was a "silent" 9-1-1 call, meaning the caller didn't say anything. With enhanced 9-1-1, the caller's address appears on the screen. It was a domestic abuse incident and thanks to the state-of-the-art system — the police were able to respond even though police said the abuser had ripped the phone off the wall after the caller had dialed 9-1-1.

Noonan also reported this week that dispatcher David Weeks was given a commendation by Police Sgt. John Conte for his professionalism during a recent "very intense domestic situation."

"He was able to keep the woman on the phone and extract some very crucial information from her and transmit it to responding units," Noonan said.

Crime wave hit last month

Police officer David Cogill, who is over six feet tall, holds up some of the marijuana plants police confiscated from the Wolf Pit area of Wompatuck State Park last week. Police burned the plants at the station Tuesday (Sept. 5). Saying the investigation is continuing, police would not comment about possible suspects. This is the second time in two years that police have confiscated marijuana plants from the Wolf Pit area of the park at the end of Beechwood Street near the town reservoir.

Police make 28 arrests

In his August status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said that the month was "extremely busy" for the police department.

"During the month we made a total of 28 arrests," he said. "Seven were for protective custody, five on outstanding warrants, four for operating under the influence of alcohol, two for possession of a Class D drug, two for domestic violence, two for larceny, one for attempted armed robbery, one for a parole violation, one for breaking and entering, one for attempted larceny, one for two counts of assault and battery of a police officer, and one for a motor vehicle violation."

There were also four breaking and enterings, all at businesses, Noonan said.

D.A.R.E. grant is awarded

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the police department will receive a $14,000 grand from the state Executive Office of Public Safety to support the Police Assisting Local Schools (PALS) program in Cohasset.

The money is available through the state Drug Awareness Resistance Education (DARE) grant for FY'96, said Kathleen M. O'Toole, state director of public safety.

In the past, the town has been turned down for a DARE grant because PALS is a program specific to Cohasset and doesn't follow the national DARE curriculum.

Conway seeks volunteers for Sandy Beach cleanup

Jack Conway & Co.'s Cohasset office is coordinating the Sept. 18 cleanup of Sandy Beach as part of the state's COASTSWEEP environmental program.

Conway-Cohasset realtors and community volunteers will gather at the beach at 10 a.m. Sept. 18 to remove trash and other marine debris from the shore. Conway's Cohasset office will donate the cleanup materials — including biodegradable trash bags — as well as handle trash removal from the cleanup sites. The COASTSWEEP program ties in perfectly with the company's Conway Goes Green program, a company-wide environmental program that includes activities such as recycling office materials and soda cans as well as aiding schools and community groups with environmental cleanups. More than 5,000 biodegradable cleanup bags have been donated to organizations in dozens of communities as part of the Conway Goes Green campaign.

An overview of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will be given at the group's Wednesday, Sept. 20, meeting at the Chart House. An hour of networking and hors d'oeuvres will precede dinner at 6:30 p.m.

Any current member who brings a prospective member will receive a free meal for both. Current members who need a "guest," or prospective members needing "hosts," and anyone who would like to make reservations may call Dean Rizzo at 383-1994, Elsa Miller at 383-2626 or the Chamber hotline at 383-1010.

Parent/principal partnership brewin' at Deer Hill

Monthly coffee hours slated

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Mariner

The new principal of the Deer Hill School, Donna Hartlage, will hold monthly coffee hours where she will meet with any interested parents.

Hartlage said the coffee hours, which begin Sept. 21, will give her "the opportunity to share changes in instruction" with parents.

She said she will also use the coffee hour to "listen to the concerns and suggestions from parents to improve the services to children."

"I'm trying to form a partnership" with parents, said Hartlage, who began working at the school this year.

The gatherings are intended to "strengthen the communication between the Deer Hill staff and parents," she said.

Each coffee hour will have a particular focus.

At the Sept. 21 coffee hour, she will discuss the school's new code of conduct, she said.

As part of the discussion, she will talk about "conflict resolution," which is being taught at the school.

"Conflict resolution" teaches students responsibility for resolving conflicts in non-violent ways, she said.

"I'm hoping to come up with a year's worth of topics" for the coffee hours, she said.

Depending on the topic, Hartlage intends to invite other staff to join the coffee hours.

"I'm very excited about the opportunity of working with parents," she said.

The Sept. 21 coffee hour, which takes place at the Deer Hill School, will actually be held twice — at 8:30 a.m. and at 7 p.m. The coffee hours are being held twice to accommodate both working and non-working parents, she said.

. The gathering will last about an hour, she said.

The coffee hours will be held c the third Thursday of each mont at 8:30 a.m. and 7 p.m., she said.

Teacher-student contracts are in vogue

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Mariner

Two junior-senior high school teachers have begun the school year by writing out their expectations for students — and requiring parents to read them.

And at least three teachers from the math and science departments sent home a list of expectations on grading, homework, making up extra work, conduct in class, and cheating, said Ann Whiteley, co-chair of the Parents' Advisory Council.

Two of the teachers are asking parents to show they've read the expectations by signing the list and returning it to school, she said.

"It's wonderful," said Whiteley. "It tells parents right off the bat" what teachers expect of their children, she said.

Whiteley believes there are other teachers who also sent home lists. She said there is no school policy directing teachers to send out the lists and that individual teachers are doing this on their own.

Although teachers have sent out similar lists in the past, "this is the first time it has happened on the first day of school," she said.

Many parents have called Whiteley to say they've received the lists.

Parents are "really appreciative" of the communication from teachers, she said. "A parent doesn't want to be left out."

Now when some children become sick, their parents will know the deadline by which they must make up their schoolwork, she said.

The teachers' communication is creating more of a partnership between parents and teachers, she said.

School Principal Curtis Collins said it is a "terrific idea on the first day or two for teachers to make very clear" what their expectations are.

"We've been talking about this for quite some time," Whiteley said. "I want to see more of it."

On the move

Tenants gear up for big changes at Cushing Plaza

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

While construction of a new Shaw's Supermarket may be months away, the present tenants at Cushing Plaza are already positioning themselves to remain in operation when it begins.

Some of the tenant businesses will temporarily relocate to new quarters while their new shops or offices are built. In most cases, the tenants will have the same amount of space they currently occupy.

However, one tenant business, the Rockland Trust Company, will move only once, according to Shaw's real estate development spokesman Brian Leahy.

He explained that the bank's facility has many components, such as secure teller areas, that are too expensive to construct on a temporary basis. For that reason, the new Rockland Trust branch office will be built south of the Bergson's restaurant. When the bank relocates, it will move into its new building.

The retail establishments have more flexibility, Leahy said. Some may need only new configurations of shelves and other display areas to fit into their temporary shops.

Leahy declined to comment on the specific businesses' plans, saying negotiations are on-going.

However, some present tenants said the plans are more definite.

Betsy Detwiler of the Buttonwood Books & Toys shop said the most recent information she has provides for her business to temporarily move to a store near Walgreen's since Buttonwood's present location will be demolished.

She is not concerned that construction will dissuade her customers from shopping at her store during the construction period, nor is she bothered that moving the business will confuse them.

"I'm confident we'll survive the changes," she said, adding

Andi Merrill, manager of the Cohasset Consignment Shop, believes her store will spend a year in its new location at Cushing Plaza. Shops at the shopping center are relocating temporarily to get ready for the construction of a Shaw's Supermarket.

Squares to be named for Cohasset soldiers

Those killed in Vietnam and Korea to be honored

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Residents will be asked to appropriate $4,500 at the town's November Special Town Meeting to pay for naming nine traffic islands or squares in honor of Cohasset soldiers killed in the Vietnam or Korean wars.

Glenn Pratt and Thomas Wigmore asked selectmen Monday for their support for the project which is being sponsored by the local chapters of the American Legion, Sons of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars. The cost will be about $500 for each memorial which will consist of having a plaque made and mounting it on a post.

The special town meeting warrant article also asks voters to have the next published history of the town be dedicated to these men and tell their story.

Glenn Pratt explained that 21 sites were examined for the memorials and the places ultimately chosen have some association to the deceased soldier such as being near where he

Drought dooms some town trees

Sunday's showers were a welcome soaking, but they may have come too late for some of Cohasset's trees.

Tree & Park Supt. Peter Laugelle said three trees were felled by the weekend rains. In each case, tree department workers found the trees lacked the moisture that would have allowed them to withstand the relatively mild storm.

The three trees, on Atlantic Avenue, James Lane, and Sohier Street, were all 10 to 15 years old.

"There was no moisture in them at all," he said Tuesday.

Tree department workers also found other more mature trees had lost branches and limbs from the storm, again attributable to the weakened conditions of the trees.

Laugelle said his crews are seeing much evidence of "die back" among trees that are struggling from the prolonged lack of rain.

Younger trees planted two and three years ago have sustained the most damage, he said, due to their lack of an organized root system.

Laugelle expects to see more damage during the winter and into next summer. Without adequate rainfall, the trees are more susceptible to dis-

Cohasset's Week

Hazardous waste collection set

A Hazardous Waste Collection Day will be held Saturday, Sept. 30, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Swim Center off Sohier St.

The following is a list of typical household hazardous waste that will be accepted for proper disposal: drain cleaners, metal polish, photo chemicals, dry cleaning fluids, rust preventatives, wood strippers, paint thinner, degreasers, gasoline, brake fluid, pesticides, insect sprays, pool chemicals, cesspool cleaners, fertilizer, bleaches, over cleaners, arts and crafts supplies, floor cleaners, radiator cleaners, wood preservatives, oil-based paint, solvents, sealants, antifreeze, engine and radiator flushes, herbicides, rodent killers, muriatic acid, creosote, batteries and ammonia.

Unacceptable materials include: large quantities of unknown materials, radioactive waste, including smoke detectors, explosives, gun powder, flares and ammunition, pressurized fire extinguishers, unknown gas cylinders and substances regulated by the DEA.

For further information call the Health Board at 383-9900.

State sidewalk money sought

The town has asked state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray to push $1.165 million from a state bond issue to install sidewalks along several town streets. The cost of constructing sidewalks is estimated at about $25 per linear foot, Peter Pearce, spokesman for the sidewalk committee, told selectmen this week.

That estimate does not include money for a lot of blasting, he said.

The proposed sidewalks include: Beechwood Street from South Main to Todd Road; King Street from Beechwood to Rte. 3A; Forest Avenue from North Main Street to Jerusalem Road; Beach Street from Highland Avenue to Atlantic Avenue; Atlantic Avenue from Beach Street to Margin Street; Sohier Street from Fairoaks Lane to Route 3A; Pond Street from Route 3A to King Street; Jerusalem Road from Forest Avenue to Atlantic Avenue; and Jerusalem Road from #685 to Forest Avenue.

Pearce said the committee will present a report at the November special town meeting.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray recently attended a ceremony on The Great Hall at the State House where all of the commonwealth's flags – including Cohasset's – are displayed. The town will ask Murray for help in securing funding for new sidewalks (see related Week item).

United Nations Day observed

In honor of the organization's 50th year, Selectmen have agreed to issue a proclamation recognizing Oct. 25, 1995 as United Nations Day in Cohasset.

Occupational forces to be added to WW II wall

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

The names of those Cohasset residents who served in the occupational forces following "V-J Day" in August 1945 will be added on a special panel to be installed in the World War II Honor Roll at the harbor after all.

Leaving the names off when the Memorial was constructed caused sparks to fly among veterans in town and prompted selectmen to direct organizers to find a way to include all World War II veterans who are recognized as such by the federal government, which designated Dec. 31, 1946 as the official end of the war for benefit purposes.

The main part of the honor roll includes the names of those who served during the time of actual hostilities "from Dec. 7 1941 to August 14, 1945."

Austin Ahearn presented selectmen Monday with design plans for the added panel and also for the World War I and Mexican War Honor Roll which is the next phase of the project.

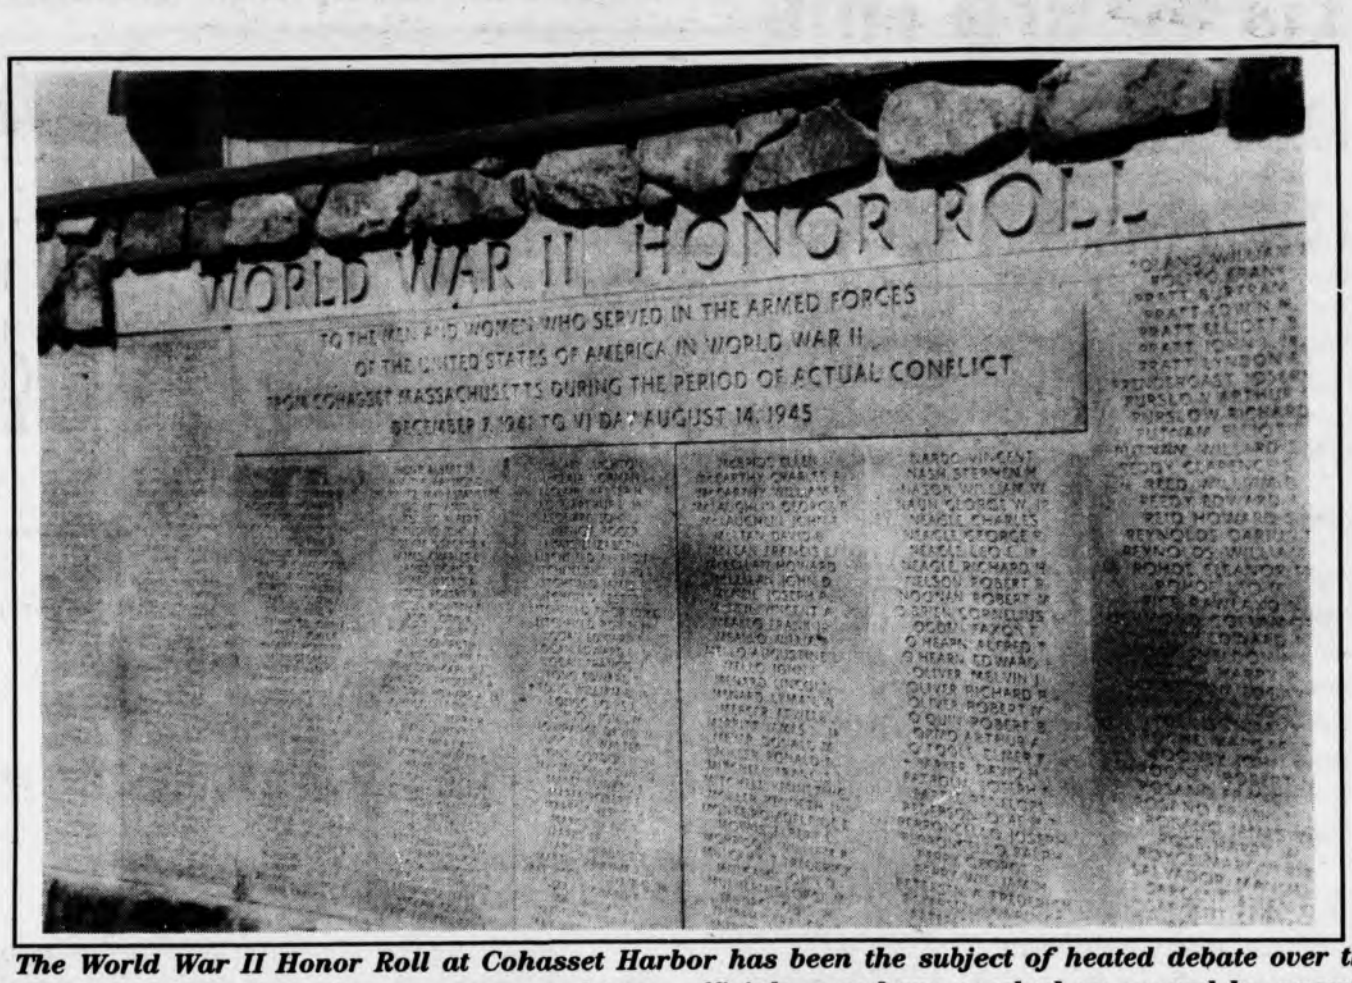
While supporting the next phase, selectmen were not as enthusiastic about the new panel for the occupational forces because they want the World War II Honor Roll to be as uniform as possible.

But short of dismantling the Honor Roll with includes fieldstone and steel supports – the only way to add the names now is to extend the wall and add the panel which will be inset into the fieldstone.

There is no consensus on what the heading on the additional panel should say, Ahearn said, noting the title "occupational forces" would not be popular. "Those who served from V-J Day to War's End" was another option.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said he would ask the Memorial Committee to come up with a heading at its next meeting in early October.

The memorial project is privately funded.



The World War II Honor Roll at Cohasset Harbor has been the subject of heated debate over the past two years. But veterans groups and town officials may have reached an accord by agreeing to add a panel which will include the names of the occupational forces who served from August 1945 until Dec. 31, 1946.

Squares to be named for soldiers grew up.

Seven out of the nine soldiers' families, which were able to be contacted, approved of the locations.

"They think it's great," Glenn Pratt said.

Wigmore and Glenn Pratt pointed out that the plaques require little maintenance. The World War II plaques have been up for nearly 50 years and the World War I plaques since the 1920s and still look good, they said.

The squares proposed to be named are as follows:

- Craig M. Simeone Square (junction of Pond Street and Lantern Lane).
- Allen F. Keating Square (Summer Street and Blackhorse Lane).
- John Paul Lyon Square (North Main Street and Joy Place).
- William C. Laidlaw Square (westerly junction of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road).
- Dennis J. Reardon Square (Elm Street and Highland Avenue Ext.)
- Peter Cogill Square (Doane and Church Streets).
- R. Edward Maree Square (junction of Parker Avenue at the boat ramp and the town parking area).
- Peter J. Albiani Jr. Square (Jerusalem and Gammons Roads).
- C. David Strout Square (Jerusalem Road and Red Gate Lane)

Selectmen will ask the historical commission to look into getting started on volume III of Cohasset's town history. The town has published two prior histories, the latter of which was written by the late Burtram Pratt, father of Selectman Peter Pratt who said his father left extensive notes which will provide a valuable resource for the third volume.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

'Tis the season for yellow jackets

While there may seem to be more yellow jackets buzzing around, the present condition is nothing out of the ordinary, according to the University of Massachusetts Extension office in Hanson.

However, Tree & Park Supt. Peter Laugelle disagrees.

"I've spent more money on hornet spray this year than I can remember," Laugelle said Tuesday.

In an average summer, his department spends $50 to spray nests the workers discover during their routine duties. This year, Laugelle said, he's spent $250 on insecticide to kill the nests that have been discovered around the playgrounds, particularly in fence posts.

Trash barrels also attract the pests which he believes are searching for other sources of food. The dry weather conditions have decreased the number of flowers and the amount of nectar in smaller blossoms, which has sent the yellow jackets "doing after everything," he said.

Horticulturist Deborah Swanson at the UMass Extension office agreed that this year's drought has provided ideal conditions for yellow jackets, wasps, and hornets, but she does not believe there has been a population explosion.

Swanson explained that in the normal life cycle of yellow jackets, hornets, and wasps, the population peaks in the late summer. This peak coincides with ripening of apples, peaches, and pears, which attract these insects. The sweet fruit pulp is a favorite food for hornets and wasps, who sometimes leave the hollow skin hanging from the tree after a feast on the fruit.

Yellow jackets are one of the most aggressive types of wasp, she said. These are the pests most commonly seen hovering around open soda cans and pickle jars during backyard cook-outs. However, they are highly beneficial to gardeners since they also eat earwigs and caterpillars. For this reason, homeowners should resist the temptation to destroy a yellow jacket nest, unless it is located near a children's play area or in some other inconvenient location.

the trees are more susceptible to diseases and insect infestation, as well as winter storms and heavy snowfall.

Many residents have noticed trees dropping their leaves earlier than normal, and without the brilliant fall hues. Other trees have undergone the seasonal color changes, but this transition has taken place as much as a month early, and the reds, yellows, and oranges are not as vivid.

Much the same situation exists in nearby Hingham, where Assistant DPW Supt. Joseph Stigliani reports two large elm trees have finally succumbed to Dutch Elm Disease. The drought was the final blow to the trees that had been able to withstand the ravages of the disease. His department is trying to save a third elm tree that has undergone a deep root injection of fertilizer in an attempt to boost its resistance.

Prior to Sunday's rain, which was the remnants of a Pacific hurricane, less than one inch of rain had fallen in the area in more than a month. The annual rainfall remains at a deficit of nearly one foot below the yearly average of 30 inches by mid-September. While the drought has been most noticeable during the summer gardening season, it actually began last winter with snowfall totalling only 16.6 inches for the entire season, as compared with the average of more than three feet.

Tenants gear up for big changes at Cushing Plaza

that her customers "will come looking for us."

The only change she anticipates after the plaza is completed is to expand the shop's hours to remain open during the early evening.

"We want to maintain the character of a small town store," she said.

Detwiler is also enthusiastic about the improvements to Cushing Plaza which she believes will encourage more customers to shop at the stores there.

Similarly, Andi Merrill of the Cohasset Consignment Shop is also optimistic about the renovation of the plaza, and believes her business can function during the construction period.

The consignment shop will also be relocating temporarily, while the present building is razed and the new one is built. While Shaw's has not set a schedule for the beginning of construction, Merrill believes her store will spend a year at the temporary location. At 5,000 square feet, her temporary store is almost twice the size of the former shop.

"The renovations at the plaza outweigh any of the inconveniences," she said.

Merrill also said Shaw's has been cooperative to minimize the disruption of the tenants' businesses.

"They know what they're doing," she said.

Radio Shack's manager Paul Faiella said his store will close after January 15. When the plaza construction is completed, the electronics store will return, however he does not know exactly when or where.

None of the present businesses knows for sure where they will be located when construction is finished. Plans for individual merchants' locations at the plaza are still being negotiated, Shaw's Leahy explained.

Papa Gino's will also close temporarily, according to manager Patrick McDonough, but, like Radio Shack, expects to return when the building is finished. He expects that the pizza restaurant will be "roughly the same size that we have now."

At present, the major stumbling block in the path of issuance of a building permit is resolution of the restrictions on a fast food restaurant at the plaza. Bergson's restaurant is the only place on the plaza site where a restaurant can be located, and limitations have been placed on the volume of take-out food sales. Shaw's wants flexibility to allow another restaurant there if Bergson's should ever close.

Cohasset planning board chairman Alfred Moore said he is confident that matter will be resolved.

At a meeting last month, the zoning board of appeals raised no objections to requests by Shaw's for other changes in the plans for the reconstruction of the shopping plaza, including drainage, parking, and traffic flow out of the parking lot.

Town meeting is Nov. 6

It's now official: Cohasset voters will be asked to attend a special town meeting Monday, Nov. 6.

Monday night selectmen approved the date and agreed to open the warrant, to begin accepting potential articles for the town meeting, on Sept. 18.

The period for submitting articles will end Sept. 25.

New fire captain to be named tonight

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Selectmen will decide at a special meeting at 6 p.m. tonight who will be the town's newest fire department captain.

They interviewed fire-fighters William J. Protulis and James P. Runey on Monday.

Both men are Cohasset residents.

A 1968 Cohasset High graduate, Protulis spent some time in the private sector working as a mechanic, body shop manager and running his own business before joining the fire department in 1978.

Protulis, who has been the department's master mechanic since 1983 and hasn't taken a sick day in eight years, has been directly involved with the purchase of two fire pumper trucks and the town ambulance.

He said he has saved the town money by taking on a lot of the department's maintenance projects.

"I have a good work ethic and am dedicated to the town," Protulis said.

Although he is not an Emergency Medical Technician, Protulis does have enhanced 9-1-1 dispatcher training and said he is willing to become an EMT.

Runey, who grew up in Scituate, was a plumber before joining the call firefighter force in 1975 and the permanent department the following year.

Serving as acting captain in 1982, Runey updated the street directory for the 9-1-1 and helped train the town's new civilian dispatchers.

He said he's taken about 2-1/2 sick days in 20 years and those were taken for his wife's difficult pregnancies. Runey served 11 years as an EMT and gave that up when he moved onto the engine.

"In my role as the driver, I know all the addresses and the department likes me in that role," he said.

Both men said they feel they have the leadership qualities to be captain and support the need for call firefighters to augment the permanent force.

Bike ride and fun fest set

The public is invited to join in the 5th Annual Herb Koch Bike Ride and Fun Fest Sunday, Oct. 1 from 1 to 5 p.m. Beginning at the former Central Junior High School in Hingham, participants can choose an 18-mile bike ride, an eight-mile children's bike ride (helmets are required for both) or a five-mile walk.

Basketball, volleyball, softball, a kite flying contest, spoon and egg relays, potato sack races, refreshments and prizes are all included in the $18 per adult, $2 per child fee ($36 maximum per family). Children must be accompanied by an adult.

Proceeds will benefit the Congregation Sha'aray Shalom Herb Koch Memorial Fund.For further information call 749-8103.

Walking tour date changed

The Cohasset Historical Society's "Harborwalk '95," originally scheduled for last Sunday, has been rescheduled for this Sunday, Sept. 24, at 2:30 p.m. The tour will meet at the Maritime Museum, Elm Street, Cohasset Center, and participants will walk to historic Cohasset Harbor and Government Island. Admission is free.

On Sunday, Oct. 1, the second Society walking tour will meet at the Maritime Museum at 2:30 p.m. to walk Cohasset's famous Town Common and the Village Center. Cohasset Common was recently nominated to the National Register of Historic Places and is one of the finest examples of an original New England town common.

For further information call the Society at 383-1434.

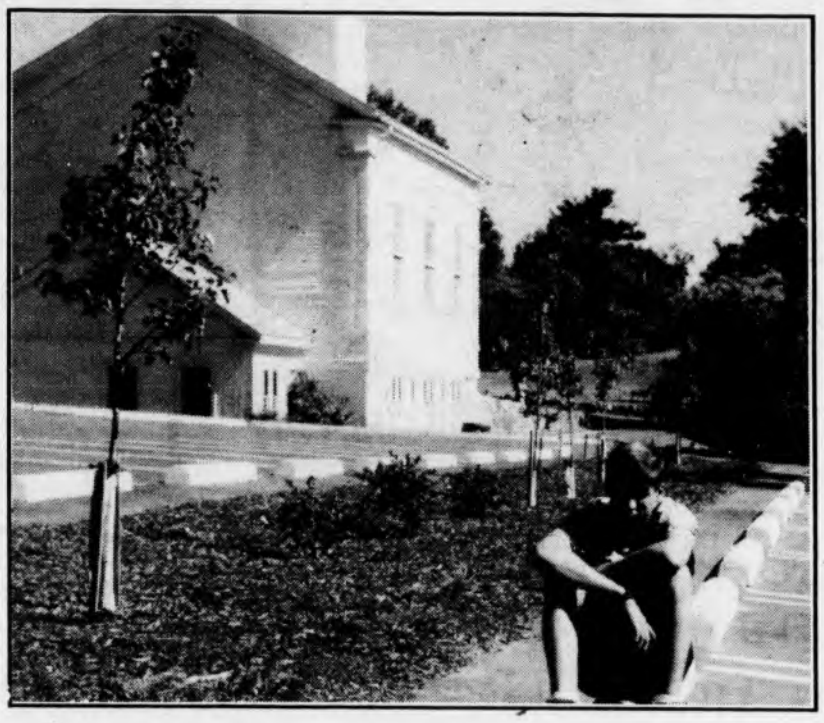
Todd Bestick completes parking lot project

Todd Bestick, a ninth grader from Cohasset and a member of Troop 44 of Norwell, has completed his Eagle project on his way to Eagle Scout rank.

Todd's project was to line the parking lot and to plant an island in the middle of that parking lot at Church Hill Methodist Church on River Street in Norwell.

Todd had to plan how to do the work and to get help form fellow scouts and friends to help him carry out the work. He received help from the personnel at A.J. Tomasi Nurseries and a donation of mulch and loam from C. McPhee Construction.

Todd must now write the project up for a "board of review" before he can be awarded the rank.



Todd Bestick poses by his Eagle Scout project which involved lining the Church Hill parking lot and planting the island at the Norwell site.

L'Shana Tova Tikatavu

(May you have a sweet year)

By RABBI STEPHEN A. KAROL

It's hard to believe that September is here already. And you know what that means – it's "start-up" time. Schools are back in session, a few having begun at the end of August. Our children are starting their new schedules in public and private schools, in daycare centers and with sitters, in extra-curricular activities during the week and in family outings on the weekend.

Tens of thousands of college students have arrived in the Boston area from all over the country to begin another year. And for some sports, music and theater fans, a new season has started or is anticipated.

When you're Jewish, all this and more comes to mind in September. But what is crucial for us in particular is the start of our new year, number 5756 to be exact. Rosh Hashanah actually starts Sunday night, the 24th, and continues all day Monday, the 25th. For some of us who adhere more closely to our tradition, there will be a second day of observance on the 26th. This begins the 10-day period known as the "High Holy Days" – a time to pray, to be connected to a community, to allow yourself to admit that you make mistakes and do things that are wrong, and to be encouraged by the belief that you have the ability to be better.

The 10 days end with Yom Kuppur, this year occurring on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 3, and ending at sundown Wednesday, Oct. 4. Otherwise referred to as the "Day of Atonement," it defines "sin" clearly, basing the concept on practices of long ago. The Hebrew word for "sin" is the same as the word which described shooting an arrow at a target and missing. What that means for us is that sin involves knowing what your target (your ideal behavior) is, and missing it by not living up to your potential. The good news is that you can get another shot.

Although our tradition warns us that "one sin leads to another," it also reminds us that "one good deed leads to another." The choice is ours, and our choices can become habit-forming.

Near the beginning of our first Rosh Hashanah service, there is a prayer in which we ask God to "grant us a year of life and peace, joy and exaltation, redemption and comfort." Actually, those wishes could appear in any liturgy, not just ours. But, knowing the Jewish liturgy best, I am aware that this prayer sets the tone for the High Holy Days. For, while it asks God to answer our request, it also is the "start-up time" for us. It is time to believe in ourselves, in God and in others. It is time to be in partnership with others and with the source of life.

I hope that you are looking forward to the coming year as much as I am. And, whatever you believe, I pray that it will be "a year of life and peace, joy and exaltation, redemption and comfort." That is a universal message which all of us can share.

Rabbi Karol is the spiritual leader of congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Marine center proposal is clarified

To the Editor:

Contrary to a statement in last week's Mariner, the Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) has not "proposed leasing the former Cohasset Colonials showroom and establishing a marine biology research and instructional facility in the house." A preliminary draft proposal for some level of support for this project was presented by Kevin Ulmer to the CEF board of directors. It was referred to our finance committee to develop a more detailed proposal which would specify the project's financial requirements and its benefit to the public schools.

The CEF would like to take this opportunity to clarify its project review policies for the public. Our Mission Statement says, "In cooperation with the faculty and administration, the Foundation will identify projects beyond the scope of the traditional school budget which improve educational opportunities for all students. The Foundation will develop innovative resources, both private and public, to accomplish this."

The CEF accepts recommendations for projects from the school superintendent, who serves ex-officio on the Board. The superintendent develops the proposals in cooperation with the school principals and classroom teachers. CEF directors may also recommend projects to the board and the superintendent, capitalizing on their contacts with other local education foundations and schools, as well as with Cohasset residents and with the business community. A CEF project review committee reviews all proposals and makes recommendations to the Board. Projects are cross-referenced with the PSO. Finally, a vote of the full board determines which projects the CEF will support.

As a policy, the CEF works in cooperation with other town organizations. For example, our Naturalist Project benefits from a collaborative local effort. The two nature trails behind Osgood and Deer Hill Schools were designed by Cohasset resident Margaret Cotter; they are maintained by the schools and the tree and park department and will be complemented by descriptive signs, courtesy of the Cohasset Garden Club. The project will be funded by a $10,000 grant from the Cohasset Conservation Trust. The trails are open to the public, and the trail guides developed through the project will also be available to the public.

Projects under consideration by the CEF, in general, should serve a broad range of students and have a long "shelf life." The educational activities offered by the projects should be fully integrated into the general curriculum. Professional development for teachers will be included, if necessary, as teachers should be trained to use the equipment or program.

Current CEF projects include the new Osgood Computer Lab, the Naturalist Residency program for Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, a new Foreign Language Lab for Cohasset High School and a year-long Artist Residency program for the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools.

In a recent townwide mailing, we invited the Cohasset community to see exhibits of our projects and to meet Cohasset's school principals, teachers and CEF directors at a reception Sunday, Oct. 1, from 4 to 7 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center. The reception will benefit our H.S. Foreign Language Lab project. A tax-deductible donation of $20 per person is requested; checks should be made payable to the Cohasset Education Foundation and sent to the CEF, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025. Please come and share our support for "Educational Excellence Through Community Partnership."

Tobacco permits may help snuff out sales to minors

Program could be national model

By ALICE COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

It's been three weeks since tobacco permitting went into effect in Cohasset giving the local health board more power monitor local retailers and cut down on the sale of tobacco products to minors.

The permits which cost 15 Cohasset retailers $20 each are similar to liquor licenses and can be suspended or revoked if merchants violate state and local tobacco regulations on sales to minors, displays and signage.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said retailers have been cooperative in obtaining the permits.

The push for permitting began earlier this summer when Cohasset merchants fared poorly in tobacco compliance checks staged by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program.

In the Collaborative's most recent sting, Director Dawn Sibor said 10 out of 17 attempted purchases were made in stores and two out of three attempted purchases were made in vending machines – the third machine was only unsuccessful because it was empty. Vending machines and free standing tobacco displays were also banned in town Sept. 1, she added.

With a compliance rate of just 41 percent, Godzik said the board felt they needed to do something.

"Youth access to tobacco is an important issue," Godzik said.

The permitting regulations vary among the Collaborative's 14 towns, but in Cohasset, merchants who are caught selling tobacco products to minors will be fined $100 for the first offense, $200 and or a permit suspension of not less than one and not more than seven business days for the second offense, and $300 and or a suspension of not less than seven and not more then 30 business days for three or more violations within one year.

"We don't ever want to have to use these fines," said Sibor, who stressed that the Collaborative is there to educate and not to penalize merchants.

"Tobacco permitting really has nothing to do with the merchants," she said. "We're trying to limit access to youths and keep them from getting hooked,"

Up and running since early in 1994, and financed by a 25 cent excise tax on tobacco, the Collaborative's Tobacco Control program has an annual budget of $300,000 and serves 14 South Shore communities. With education and enforcement of state regulations on tobacco sales, the collaborative is trying to help achieve the commonwealth's goal of reducing tobacco use 50 percent by 1999.

In many respects Massachusetts and the South Shore are ahead in the tobacco regulating game and recent reports indicate that the state's tobacco control programs could serve as a national model for the Clinton administration.

The collaborative has helped many of its member towns institute smoke-free policies for work places and municipal buildings and has offered cessation programs for town employees and their spouses.

On-going training sessions for merchants and their employees help keep businesses up to date on the laws and bring about better compliance with them Sibor said.

"There's no question that the merchants are more aware of the laws and while non-compliance rates are still high in some areas, the rates have gone down," she said. "We've done a lot of innovative things and we're constantly evolving and changing our strategies.

"I think we've made a real impact."

Tobacco education training for retailers

The South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program in cooperation with police departments will be sponsoring free tobacco merchant education training for area retailers in all 14 of its member towns. The training sessions will be offered on Tuesday, Sept. 26 in the second floor hearing room in the Abington Town Hall from 2 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. and on Thursday, Oct. 5, in the Osborne room at the Norwell Town Hall from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

All merchants who sell tobacco products and have not attended previous merchant education training sessions or employees who have been hired since the end of June, 1995 are encouraged to attend one of these sessions. For further information call the South Shore Boards of Health Tobacco Control Program at (617) 829-4301.

Fundraiser for education Oct. 1

The Cohasset Education Foundation is sponsoring a fundraiser in support of its Language Laboratory Project on Sunday, Oct. 1, at the South Shore art Center, 116 Ripley Road, from 4 to 7 p.m.

Foundation projects will be showcased, including the Skillful Teacher Program, Naturalist in Residence and Osgood Computer Laboratory. A module of one type of language training facility under consideration will be on hand for examination. Teachers, principals and administrators of Cohasset schools will be attending.

Students participating in the PSO Diversity Committee will provide a musical background for the event. Refreshments will feature a varied selection of foods and wines from around the world.

Rick Flynn, CEF director, said the fundraiser will provide an "opportunity to increase the visibility of the Foundation and its goals to increase support for the schools."

Contact Rick Flynn (383-6754) or Kevin O'Donnell (383-6113) for tickets. For further information about CEF, call 383-2833 or write to the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 to obtain a copy of CEF's brochure or additional information.

All donations are tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment for Cohasset public school students.

Anti-landfill activism is urged

To the Editor:

The battle against the proposed "Area V" expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill has just reached a critical stage, with the filing Aug. 31 of the Site Assignment Application for the expansion with the Department of Environmental Protection and the Board of Health.

This Site Assignment Application should be rejected by DEP because, according to DEP's own studies, there is no need for additional landfill space in Massachusetts. The expansion will threaten our public drinking water supplies, will bring back seagulls along with garbage and trash, will increase odors, noise, traffic and wetlands damage, and will result in a 200+ foot high mountain of trash that will be forever visible from Route 3A.

I urge all residents of Cohasset to read this application, which is available for review at the Board of Health and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and to submit a written comment opposing the expansion to the DEP by Oct. 15. If we can get this application rejected, then we can stop this landfill expansion once and for all.

School plans to be aired

Voters at the November special town meeting will hear a report on the study of school facilities, which might include options for either a new school building or repair of the Osgood Elementary School.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said last week that town meeting could be asked to appropriate more money to continue the study. At the very least, town meeting will receive an update, which was required by the last year's town meeting vote authorizing a study.

Kidder also said that the grade configuration could be changed, with the creation of a middle school for grades 6 - 8. A new middle school building could be proposed, he said.

He said that planning must be underway now, since the Osgood school is out of date and crowded, while school enrollment is growing.

borhoods. I brought my camera as well. We have been worried about Greenbush in our neighborhoods for so long, I thought it would be a good use of time.

Work is well under way there, as you know. The workmen have cut a swath about 30 feet wide. It passes through a few residential areas but mostly wooded or old industrial areas. I did talk to one young mother who told me about how she came home form work one day and one-third of her lawn was gone. The workers had cut down trees and dug up bushes. Thirty feet of lawn is all that separates her family from the tracks.She is now trying to sell her house. She was very upset and had little good to say about the T. "They always get what they want," she admitted. "Good luck to you up in Cohasset."

This woman confirmed what I have heard in the press and around town: that there is a growing resentment against the T in Kingston and Plymouth. The reality of the train is hitting people where it counts, in their homes and neighborhoods.

As I drove north through Scituate and Cohasset, I realized what a train would look like here. The Greenbush corridor is much more dense. Houses, schools and more houses are situated right along the old railbed. There are too many busy road crossings. This area clearly presents a different environment. A train would not only intrude on thousands of people from 5:30 a.m. to 11 p.m., it would be a safety problem.

I cold see a 30-foot-wide "path" right up the middle of these homes. I was shaking. The T says "only" 24 trips per day. That's bad, but what's to stop them from putting on more? Weekends? Freight? When will it stop? Where do you draw the line?

Most people don't work in Boston, yet we'd all have to suffer for them.Hingham and Cohasset can use Braintree T service or the boats. Scituate will have a boat test soon and that should be fun! If Marshfield is so determined to get a train, then I think they need a spur, as you have suggested in the press. How many from Marshfield would commute anyway?

Please consider what is at stake. Why tear up healthy neighborhoods in Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham for a minority who would actually use the train to commute to work? I am convinced many want a train because the "may" want to go in to town once and a while. That is not good enough! The citizens of the corridor will not give up what they have so that others can shop in town! Many citizens here will take anything as long as it is "free." Greenbush is not free! Furthermore, I'm not so sure that the good citizens of Norwell or Duxbury would be in favor of a train ripping through their quiet downtown area. It's ok here, but not in their town÷ No thanks!

Love of trails comes naturally to Cohasset kids

Grant used to enhance grade-school science

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Cohasset Mariner

A questionnaire given to Cohasset fourth-graders asked them to name their favorite field trip.

Although they had gone on a lot of field trips, including the Museum of Science, the State House and the Pilgrim village in Plymouth, they said their favorite one was going on the nature trail right outside their school, according to Margaret Cotter, who designed the elementary schools' two nature trails.

"Kids love being outside," she said.

A $10,000 grant was awarded recently to increase the use of the nature trails in the science curriculums at the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools, said Anne Lane, a member of the board of directors of the Cohasset Education Foundation.

The money will be used to hire staff from the Massachusetts Audubon Society who will train teachers to use the trails for hands-on science projects, according to the CEF, which was awarded the grant this summer.

CEF is a non-profit education foundation which funds major projects in the schools that are beyond the scope of the school budget. The funds were donated by the Cohasset Conservation Trust. The Deer Hill and Osgood Schools each have a nature trail on a 50-acre, wooded tract that lies between the schools.

The nature trails were developed by the schools and the Massachusetts Audubon Society about six years ago for educational use, said Cotter, who designed the trails as a final project for a graduate program in landscape design at Radcliffe College.

There is a "spectacular vernal pool" near the Deer Hill School with a "wetland community that is essentially perfect," said David Clapp, who is the director of the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore sanctuaries and who has begun to work on the trail project.

Different kinds of frogs and salamanders live in the vernal pool, according to Cotter.

The tract on which the trails lie is "as diverse a bit of woodland as you can find in eastern Massachusetts," Clapp said. It includes ash, hickory, three species of oak and American hornbeam, he said. Students could learn to identify the trees and find out what lives in the forest, he added.

According to Clapp, "Both trails have remnant signs of colonial life." Some of the trees pre-date the Civil War and some may be more than 200 years old. There are also old building foundations from the colonial era as well as old stone walls.

Students may end up working with pre-colonial maps and other early records to "piece together the history of the parcels," he said.

According to Cotter, the tract also has "a lot of dramatic glacial outcroppings and a lot of different plant communities." The Osgood School's trail crosses James Brook twice.

Lesson plans are now being developed that will be incorporated into a curriculum guide that can be used in future years, said Lane, who wrote the grant.

Ellyn Einhorn, an educator on the staff of the Audubon Society, will spend one day each week at the schools working on the project, continuing for the next 30 weeks.

While the Osgood School's trail has "worked out quite well" as an educational tool, the Deer Hill School's trail has become overgrown from "lack of use," Clapp said.

And while Osgood teachers have received a considerable amount of training on the educational use of their trail, Deer Hill teachers have not had that training, according to Ruth Fennessey, curriculum coordinator at the elementary schools.

The focus of the Audubon Society's efforts will be to get the Deer Hill School up to the same level as the Osgood School, said Clapp. The trail will need to be cleared and educational activities developed for Deer Hill.

Clapp said that if there is enough time and money the Audubon Society will also work to enhance the educational program at Osgood, and he is optimistic that will be the case.

Clapp also hopes that Audubon Society staff will have the chance to take the school children themselves on educational excursions on the trails. Officials are hoping that the Department of Public Works will assist in the clearing of the trail at Deer Hill again this year as they did last year.

The Cohasset Garden Club has donated funds to create signage that will identify and describe points of interest. The tract on which the nature trails lie is owned by the town of Cohasset and the trails are open to the public.

The Audubon Society will also create field guides for the trails, which will be made available to the public. Residents who would like to assist in the trail clearing are asked to call Ruth Fennessey at 383-2804.

News about SHARE signups

SHARE is a nonprofit community-building organization offering a nutritious food package ($25-$35) value) to anyone for $14 plus two hours of volunteering in his or her community.

SHARE is not a government program and is funded solely by the price of the food package. By pooling thousands of dollars across the nation, SHARE purchases food at wholesale prices and passes the savings on to participants. Volunteers distribute the food through a network of 430 host organizations throughout New England.

The next monthly D-Day for Cohasset is Saturday, Sept. 23 from 8 to 9:30 a.m. at the Deer Hill School at 206 Sohier St. Registrations will be accepted that day with $14 dollars in cash. Those who sign up will receive a blank volunteer service receipt that must be filled out and signed after volunteer service has been completed. Food packages may then be picked up the next month at the host site. Food stamps are accepted.

PSO calendars are here

PSO calendars have been mailed to the homes of all Cohasset students. Any family who has not received a calender or knows of a family new to Cohasset who has not received one, is asked to contact Sarah Markert at 383-6124. The calendar lists school and community events and provides important school information.

Vo-Tech meeting

The South Shore Vocational Technical High School Parent Association will hold its first meeting of the 1995-96 school year on Thursday, Sept. 21, at 6:30 p.m. in the school library. Parents are welcome to attend the meeting. The agenda will include committee chairpersons, fundraising, the school's second annual auction and concession stand information.

PSO help is sought

This school year the P.S.O. will sponsor many different fundraising events. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events, or help out in any manner, please call one of the fundraising committee members, Tomi Bukowski, 383-6771, Ed Connolly, 383-1248 or Ellen Sanchez, 383-6911.

Fund-raiser is slated

It's time again for the PSO gift-wrap fundraiser. Students will offer top quality products for sale to family and friends. Fifty percent of all proceeds collected are kept for the schools.

Order dates are Sept. 15-29. Tomi Bukowski can be called for further information, 383-6771.

Student visits Slovakia

Thirty-three law students including Cohasset resident Nicholas P. Lelecas, attended the University of Tulsa's Summer Institute in Law in Bratislava, capital of Slovakia, held from July 10 to Aug. 9.

The institute, in its third year, is hosted by Comenius University in Bratislava, capital of Slovakia, formerly a part of Czechoslovakia.

Students enrolled in one or two courses, choosing from among comparative constitutional law; comparative criminal law; comparative evidence law; and comparative commercial law.

Students attended lectures by speakers from the Slovak legal community and visited governmental institutions in Bratislava and in Prague, the capital of the Czech Republic. Comenius law professor Peter Kresak, a former judge who helped draft Slovakia's new constitution, was also among the institute's faculty.

New members are welcome

The Cohasset Teen Center has been welcoming seventh-, eighth- and ninth-graders back to the center for the fall season, and have all been treated to pizza during the past few weeks. The Center will continue to be open every Friday and Saturday night from 7 to 10 p.m. unless there is a conflict with a high school event. Special events nights will be publicized at the high school and through local newspapers.

The Center, located at 24 South Main St., has soda and candy machines, a TV set with cable hook-up, a VCR, couches, pool table, pinball game and a computer and offers a place for youth to drop in and socialize in a safe, supervised environment.

Proposals for a Teen Center director are now being accepted. Applicants are encouraged to submit their ideas about the position and possible Teen Center programs along with salary requirements to Rosemary O'Connell, c/o Cohasset Youth Resources, P.O. Box 11, Cohasset 02025 by the end of September.

The Center is supported entirely by generous donations of individuals, organizations and businesses in the Cohasset community and is governed by Cohasset Youth Resources, a volunteer board of directors. Tax-deductible donations to cover monthly operating costs are always appreciated and may be sent to the above address.

The Center will be closed this Friday because of the high school dance, but will be open this Saturday and subsequent Fridays and Saturdays from 7 to 10 p.m.

Community gardeners to meet

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Sept. 26, at Walton Rodgers Hall in St. Stephen's Parish.

Jan Sacks and Marty Schafer of Carlisle will present the first program this season, Planning a Perennial Garden – From Rare and Unusual to Old Favorites.

Coffee is served at 9 a.m. and the meeting begins at 9:30 p.m.

Alzheimer's seminar offered

A seminar entitled "Behavioral Management and the Alzheimer's Patient" will be held Tuesday, Sept. 26, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at the Harbor House & Rehabilitation Center, 11 Condito Road, Hingham for caregivers, including both family members and healthcare professionals.

Dr. Paul Raia of the Alzheimer's Association of Eastern Massachusetts will be the featured speaker. He will provide information on current Alzheimer's research, a new care option called "habilitation" and the utilization of support groups and institutions.

To reserve a seat call Claire Brids at 749-4774. Seating is limited.

Tracing roots was a labor of love

Portugese history in Cohasset chronicled

By LAURA RICKETSON DOHERTY
Cohasset Mariner

Reading has always been a way to open the door to new experiences and information. And that is exactly what happens in a recent publication by Roger Leonard, a native whose family has lived here for many generations.

"We Protect" is an historical account and social study of the Portuguese in Cohasset. Although it was 13 years in the writing, Leonard maintains that his book was a labor of love which he enjoyed more than anything else he has ever done.

"I wanted to leave something behind," he says. "This is my contribution."

It was not an easy task. All funding and research were solely his responsibility. Painstakingly, he began collecting background information on index cards. He divided these into chapters, and with the help of his wife, Karen, began preparing his material for presentation. In addition, he found it necessary to hire an editor to assist with desktop publishing.

There was a five-year time period when the project was in limbo, but when he moved to Quincy, he became increasingly convinced that it was his duty to perpetuate the memory of his ancestors or that valuable information would be lost forever.

This was a lofty goal. Leonard not only meets it but in so doing also provides an extremely valuable account of other aspects of Cohasset's history.

Antoine Martin is said to be the first settler to arrive from the Azores sometime before 1840. He came on a merchant ship owned by Captain George Nickerson. Eventually he married a widow, Mrs. Matilda Jacobs of Scituate, and settled down to subsistence farming.

The story of these Azorean Portuguese and their families, as told by Leonard, is one of determination, hard work and adaptability. Many worked at mackerel fishing, which was so vital to the economy of the town. They traveled as far south as Cape May, New Jersey and north as far as Newfoundland.

The life of Captain Joseph Enos (1851-1935) is but one example provided by Leonard. Born in Fayal, Azores, he emigrated to Cohasset at the age of 12. Despite the minimum age requirement of 21, he became master of the Ephraim Snow schooner, Watersprite, when he was only 19. Eleven Portuguese became master mariners and some eventually owned their own ships.

Others worked as barbers, farmers and shopkeepers. The stonewalls along Beach Street and brick walls on Sohier Street opposite Deer Hill School remain as examples of their craft as stonemasons. Of special interest is Anna Paul, who was known as a healer. From flowers, seeds and roots she concocted extracts for the treatment of such illnesses as laryngitis, fever and corns.

The largest Portuguese neighborhoods were on Stockbridge, Margin and Border Streets. Many of the bungalow-type houses stood on pilings over the marshes. The townspeople called this area Tonytown after that very common and traditional name of the Azores, "Antoine."

Other non-Portuguese families also lived in this area where often the inhabitant had their own way of deciding justice in legal difficulties. The story of how one family was able to deal with the theft of their carefully stored firewood makes fascinating reading.

Despite the fact that many Portuguese surnames were arbitrarily Anglicized by immigration officers, many remain in evidence today. The suffix "es," for example, is a common feature in such Cohasset names as Rodriques and Gonsalves. The trigraph (three letters with one sound) "eir" is found in Ferreira, Monteiro and Pereira. Often the prefixes of D'os, Da, D or De were removed as in Da Rosa, Rose or Da Roya, Roy.

Maritime history and safety are closely connected to the endeavors of many Portuguese. The discoveries of Enos Ledge and Jason Shoals so important to navigation are credited to two of Cohasset's Portuguese. Others served as lighthouse keepers and lifeboat volunteers for the Massachusetts Humane Society.

As a matter of fact, Joseph Antoine was one of the first casualties of the original Minot's Light. Just before the stilt-like structure was swept over, he and another keeper wrote out a message: "The lighthouse won't stand over tonight – she shakes two feet each way, now." The note and the bottle it was stored in were washed into Hingham Harbor and are now the property of the Hingham Historical Society. It has been said that the ghost of Joseph Antoine cries out to warn sailors just before Northeast storms.

There are many other interesting stories in the book – of the importance of the Catholic church, the crowning ceremony, of swimming lessons on what was once a sandy beach at Government Island. The book's title was taken from the emblem of the Minot's Ledge Portuguese Benevolent Association, founded by the author's great-grandfather to raise funds for medical and death benefits. Started in 1889, it occupied the site on Summer Street next to the American Legion until about 1942.

The book's title was taken from the emblem of the Minot's Ledge Portuguese Benevolent Association, founded by the author's great-grandfather to raise funds for medical and death benefits.

It is clearly evident that much thought went into "We Protect." Leonard recounts how he debated where to put page numbers, how to present chapter headings. Sometimes he intentionally uses old expressions like front room, millers and water closet to give his work a homespun feeling. He hopes that when, in the future, people read his account, they will say, "This is a real nice book. I wonder who this Roger Leonard was." I have no doubt they will.

Copies of "We Protect" are available by sending a check for $12.60 made out to him and mailed to 39 Bancroft Road.

The grounds at the home of Albert and Paula Meallo at 187 South Main Street are a study in perfect landscape planning, design and execution.

The house is painted British tan with cocoa shutters and a dark, hunter-green front door. A curving brick walk leads the visitor to the front stoop where a raised brick terraced area is home to a dark green iron settee and chair. This curved bed is filled with pale pink, salmon-colored and bright red-orange impatiens with accents of grey Dusty Miller. The curve of the walkway is repeated on the front yard using fieldstone creating a small raised bed, planted with hosta and red cockscomb. A wooden barrel planter is home to bright red geraniums with pale pink geranium accents.

Paul Pratt Library Corner

Library story hours are noted

Registrations are currently being accepted for the Fall series of preschool story hours at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The series will begin on Oct. 5 and 6, on Thursday and Friday mornings at 10 a.m.

Children may sign up for a six-week session on either of the two days.Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and simple fingerplays, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 to participate.

To register, call the Children's Librarian at 383-1348.

Museum passes are available

Friends of the Cohasset Library have made available passes to the Museum of Fine Arts, the Boston Children's Museum, the Museum of Science and the New England Aquarium. Lucille McLoughlin has donated passes to Plimoth Plantation. To reserve passes, contact the library.

Photographs are on display

'Photographic Vignettes,' an exhibition of black and white photography by Jeremy Barnard, will be shown through Oct. 3 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Barnard has been producing award-winning photographic images for more than 25 years. His images include works from Maine as well as continental Europe and their environs.

Barnard's awards are many – including "Best of Show" for 1994 in the All New England Exhibition in Cohasset and "Best of Show" in the South Shore Art Festival's Black and White Exhibition.

Barnard – who resides in Georgetown, Mass. with his wife Arlene and son, Ian – remains addicted to the magic of the prints as they emerge. Artist/writer David Raymond commented that "his work is poetic in unexpected ways."

Hard-hitting Skippers win first

Aggressive play stops Wildcats, 14-0

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

Head coach Bob Knurek's Cohasset Skippers stormed into West Bridgewater Saturday afternoon to challenge the Wildcats. After a first half played between the teams, the Skippers gained a 14-0 lead and held onto it, earning "Coach K" his first win as Cohasset's varsity coach.

Heading into the game, Knurek was guardedly optimistic but stressed that the Skippers had the ability to win.

"We are ready physically, we have high intensity, but I'm concerned with our consistently," he said. "We have everyone back who was hurt. (Brian) Sasso, (Greg) Stevens and (Mike) Dunphy are all back.

"West Bridgewater is a young team and they pass a lot. They depend on their linebackers on defense and they're smaller than us. If we can perform consistently for four quarters, we will win."

Cohasset elected to receive and Andy Hamilton returned the kick to the 27-yard-line of Cohasset. Hamilton then carried for 2 and rumbled for a first down. Junior Grant Emde burst through a gaping hole created by the line for another first. Hamilton took a pass in the flat and Emde's nifty moves gained him 15 yards down to West Bridgewater's 25. Dunphy knifed for a yard, then took a pass from Keefe. He was hit, bounded off, was hit again, and still managed to reach the marker. However, a 10-yard penalty brought the play back and the Skippers couldn't get the first.

Cohasset's stifling defense, led by Brian Duffy, Pat Reynolds, Brian Riley and Sasso forced the Wildcats to kick. The punt was short and gave the Skippers possession on their own 37. Emde sped around end for a 15-yard gain. Dunphy fought for a few and Keefe's quarterback keeper was good enough for a first down.

Keefe's pass to Dunphy after a penalty gave the skippers fourth-and-10. Despite Dunphy's effort, CHS couldn't convert. Time ran down to the end of the first half with Cohasset and West Bridgewater locked in a scoreless tie.

The Wildcats got the ball first in the second half but Sasso stuffed the run and Kevin Panos was swarmed by a group of eager Cohasset tacklers. Panos fumbled and Duffy pounced on it. Hamilton slashed for a few yards and a facemask penalty pushed Cohasset all the way to the WB 11-yard-line. Matt Conley snared a pass at the 6, but penalties drove the Skippers back 10 yards. Despite gutsy runs by Emde and Dunphy, the Skippers gave the ball over on downs.

Girl booters have tough games coming

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

In another league, the Cohasset High girls soccer team would probably be near or at the top of the overall standings.

But the South Shore League isn't "any other league." With teams the calibre of Norwell, Hanover, East Bridgewater, Scituate and Abington, the Skippers rarely have an easy day on the field. This year, however, head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark is confident the team can qualify for the Division 3 South Sectional tournament with the quality of players she has. Cohasset also has the MIAA's new tourney qualification ruling in its favor that a team must finish with a .500 record to qualify. The mark is well within the Skippers' range and they should see postseason action this season.

Cohasset took a giant step in improving its program, and gaining some overdue respect from team's around the league, when it eliminated

Football win throws Lakers into a tizzy

You didn't have to be a football fan to get caught up in all the excitement as Silver Lake finally ended its three-year football losing streak with a win against Duxbury on Friday night.

The Lakers had run into some tough times in recent years on the gridiron. With many top athletes playing soccer and having a tough schedule in the Old Colony League, the Lakers found themselves winless in Kingston.

But that has all changed thanks to the big 25-20 win over Duxbury Friday night.

The Lakers and second-year coach Jeff Knight have begun the long process towards respectability on the football field. Nobody thinks the Lakers are going to charge right to the Division I Super Bowl but snuffing out the 20-plus game losing streak their first time out of the box this year shows the players are serious about their football.

The win over Duxbury also was the opening night for sophomore quarterback Jon Bond.

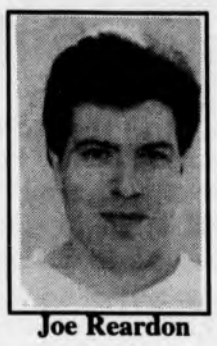
Standing 6'6" and weighing 180-pounds, Bond showed great poise in the pocket and a rifle arm. If he can get protection from the Laker line, he will light up OCL football fields for the next three years.

Sure, he's raw but you don't see many 6'6" players with his athleticism. (Bond even played on special teams and got a few licks on the Duxbury return man.)

Bond is also the tallest Laker on the field by at least a helmet and has nice offensive talent (backs Tucker Apple and Matt Guvremont, receiver Mike Doyle and end Kevin Blakeman) to go with him.

And with daring coach Knight at the helm, it looks like the Lakers aren't afraid to chuck the pigskin around the field.

Dave McKee



Joe Reardon

They may not win the OCL this year but the Lakers should be great fun to watch.

Losing sure isn't fun.

—David McKee

If you only focus on the games, you really miss a lot of the action in high school sports.

The typical soccer, field hockey or football game takes around two hours to complete. But for those involved, the game and its consequences can linger a whole lot longer.

Take last Wednesday night's huge girls' soccer game between Marshfield, the defending Division I state champ, and Duxbury, the defending Division II champ.

Because Duxbury High has lights, the game did not start until 7 p.m. (Usually varsity games start at 3:30 p.m. leaving the players 90 minutes to make the transition from students to athletes when the school day ends at 2 p.m.)

Around 6:30 p.m. both Marshfield and Duxbury took to the field for warm-ups. After a few last-minute stretches and some final words from the coaches, the game began promptly at 7 p.m.

After 45 minutes of running time, the first half came to an end with both teams scoreless.

At this point the players headed off the field for a 15 minute half-time break. Most teams either go to the locker room for the break or sit in a circle around their coach near the goal cage.

After the break, the 45-minute running time second half began. Duxbury scored two quick goals to take the lead before Marshfield cut the lead to 2-1 with about 15 minutes to play.

However, time ran out on Marshfield and Duxbury won the game by a goal. It was now close to 9:30 p.m. on a school night.

Immediately after the game ended both teams went through the ritual of congratulating each other.

This is accomplished with the biggest conga line of high fives you'll ever see. Lasting all of 15 seconds, the 20-plus players from each team lined up with their right arms extended. As they briskly walked in unison, they all slapped each other's hand, saying, "Good game, Good game."

After the high five conga ended, emotions began to run wild.

Players from Marshfield began crying and hugging each other while players from Duxbury were skipping with glee.

For the next 20 minutes, most of the Marshfield players did not leave the sidelines. It was now close to 10 p.m. Any homework that was wasn't already finished would have to wait.

Finally the Lady Ram players headed toward the team bus after a few more minutes.

Near the bus they were met by parents and friends. More crying and hugging followed.

"It was a very emotional game," said MHS tri-captain Tyla Brennan, who was still crying 30 minutes after the game. When asked why, she said, "I'm the type who can't stop crying once I start."

MHS tri-captain Alexa Ricardo, who was teary-eyed as well, was asked why she took the loss so hard.

"Because this is the last game the seniors will play under the lights here and we really wanted to win," she said. "I haven't been on a team that won here and I was really hoping to get it this time."

Ricardo was then asked what thoughts were going through her mind about the Duxbury game.

Without a second's hesitation, she said, "Revenge. We want to beat them when we play at home. We are really looking forward to that game." She stopped just short of guaranteeing a Marshfield win.

The players finally took a seat on the bus and went home.

It was 10:30 p.m. It was getting late.

With the number of road races on the weekend calendar year-round, Marshfield 20K Road Race director Rich Boretti believes it's "hard to say" just how many runners will take on the challenging 12.4 mile course this coming Sunday.

Last year a field of 250 runners gathered behind the starting line at Heaven The Restaurant on Route 139. Weather, Boretti says, will be a factor in the turnout for the 22nd running of the race. He is hoping for a field of at least 200.

Proceeds from the race help support the Marshfield Road Runners Club Turkey Trot and its youth summer track series.

The loop-within-a-loop course offers challenging uphills and several downhill plunges. The scenery is a mix of quiet, tree-lined streets with very little traffic and farms where cows curiously watch the runners stride by. The race begins at 12 noon and

Good defense by Riley, senior lineman Nate Caldwell, Stevens and Reynolds couldn't prevent a drive by the home team. West Bridgewater drove until Reynolds picked off a pass and ran it in for the touchdown, giving the Skippers a 6-0 lead with with 3-1/2 minutes left. For Reynolds, it was his first touchdown in his first game.

Reynolds' great defense continued on the kickoff. He streaked downfield to bury the hapless kick returner. Kevin Gentile nailed West Bridgewater's Sean Donahue with a bone-crusher, bringing up second and 19, then stuffed another run. Duffy picked up another fumble, giving his team the ball 19 yards away from another touchdown. Hamilton bulled his way for two yards and Dunphy added six more. On his next run, Dunphy somehow kept his feet and broke through for the score. His dive on the two-point conversion gave the Skippers a 14-0 lead.

West Bridgewater was dominated again on its next drive when Mike Coates and Reynolds combined for a sack and sophomore Jamie Buick made a nice tackle that made it third and 15. Duffy recovered his third turnover by leaping to pick off a pass at Cohasset's 35. Hamilton's two rushes into the line netted him five yards and Dunphy stayed on his feet after six, count 'em six, hits. But, he was bruised for naught as the play was called back. On third-and-9, he gained four, but CHS was forced to punt. The kick sailed to the 50 and the Wildcats again tried to move the ball.

Junior Jared Batts provided good defense and Dunphy and Sasso combined to break up a pass, giving the Wildcats fourth down at their own 48. The Skippers' defense held and Emde sprinted for a first down.

Cohasset couldn't get the first and Dunphy punted again. The high, spiraling boot travelled to the 13, where Gentile delivered another monstrous hit. Pressure on the quarterback by Conley and Buick forced bad passes and Gentile broke through for a sack as time expired and Cohasset had its first win.

Knurek was satisfied with his team's win with him at the helm and praised the Skippers' efforts. "We controlled the line on both sides, only inexperience and penalties kept us out of the end-zone in the first half. During halftime, we told them to focus on concentrating. The skills were there and we controlled the game in the second half.

"I feel good because the kids deserved this. They worked hard and earned it."

The Skippers face the Hanover Indians Saturday at Milliken Field beginning at noon.

'Last Call' softball champs again

By KEVIN DOOLEY
Special to the Mariner

Sunday, Sept. 10, the "Last Call" softball team won its second straight Cohasset men's softball league championship with a sweep of the 2 out of 3 final series.

The first game resulted in a 16-6 romp while the second game ended 19-9; although Giacomizzi & Sons of Marshfield led 6-0 going into the fifth inning.

M.V.P. of the finals was David "Lefty" Patrolia, the team's pitcher. His regular season record was 12-2 (the team's was 13-2).

Members of this year's champions included: Paul Bilodeau, Kevin Dooley, Tom Dooley, Joe Dooley, Dennis Dooley, Jay Fiori, Mark Froio, Dana Infusino, Joe Masci, Dave Patrolia, Gary Smith and Rick Goff.

This year's squad owes a special thanks to Cohasset patrolman Jack Conte for his efforts in clearing the construction equipment from both the parking areas and the playing field in time for last weekend's festivities.

Dance classes

Registration is still being taken for the following dance classes with Tiffany Madeiras at the South Shore Community Center:

Mondays: 9 to 10 a.m., pre-school ballet and tap (ages 4 and 5); 10 to 10:45 a.m., creative movement (ages 3 and 4); and 10:45 to 11:45 a.m., pre-school ballet, tap and jazz (ages 4 and 5).

Thursdays: 2:45 to 3:45 p.m., pre-school ballet and tap (ages 4 and 5); 3:45 to 4:45 p.m., ballet and modern dance (grades K-4); and 4:45 to 5:45 p.m., street dance (grades 1-4).

All classes will have a performance at the end of the ten-week session. Please call the community center at 383-0088 to register.

Abington from the tournament and beat the Green Wave for the first time ever.

The Skippers had an easy time of things on Monday when, on the strength of Kathy Fitzsimmons' hat trick, rolled past Norton by a score of 2-0.

Cohasset is now headed into a tough, three-game stretch against SSL opponents. The Skippers were scheduled to play Scituate on Sept. 20, before meeting Abington for the first time this season in an away game on Sept. 22 at 7 p.m. O'Day-Clark's troops face an even stiffer test when they take on Amanda Ganong and the rest of last year's league champion Hanover team in another night game at the Indians' field on Sept. 26. Two days later Cohasset faces a struggling Hull squad. The Pirates are still searching for their first win in three years.

Cohasset will still just be six games into its 17-game season after the Hanover contest, but the direction the Skippers look to be on will become clearer.

You make that phone call to the 10-year-old soccer star to set up an interview. That's where it all starts.

First the 4-year-old sister answers and struggles to hold the phone to her ear. Once she is finished conducting her own interview with the person on the other end of the phone, you finally hear the 10 year old yelling at her – though not nearly as loud as she was yelling during the inevitable screening process – as he tries to unclench the Kung Fu grip she has on the phone.

Now it's time to ask the soccer star if he is available on a Saturday morning for an interview. He stammers for a moment then passes the receiver to mom. Dad never gets the phone. Mom knows the kids' schedule minute by minute throughout the day. Dad ranks just in front of the 4 year old in the daily goings-on department.

So you try to find an open hour on Saturday. Well, there's soccer at 8 a.m. and then a travelling league game at 1 p.m. Late afternoon is out because he has to try out for the winter youth basketball league. Sunday, mom says, is a relatively lite day. There's just the karate lesson at noon, followed by a trip to the sports store to buy a pair of rollerblades. Sunday evening at 5 p.m. is penciled in and you hang up the phone, feeling as though you've played two soccer games in one day. Even Deion Sanders knows there is a limit as to how many sports to play.

Oh yes, the point of the column. The next time your child complains that he is bored" or you find him hanging out at mall with the Dead End Kids, grab him by the ear and march him right to the next (pick one) soccer, basketball, hockey, karate, skating, swimming, gymnastics, boxing or lacrosse registration and fill out a slip and pay the fee.

Like they say on the commercial: "Life is short. Play hard." And kids have more opportunities open to them now than they ever did.

Cohasset Business

Change is key to success in the food business

Local restaurateur makes a hit in Hingham

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

When it comes to the food business local restaurateur Edward Kane has the Midas touch.

Born in Boston, Kane, now a "Cohasseter," got his start in the restaurant business by working in his parents' Quincy tavern, Kane's Place.

'I hire great people. We have a good team, they're trained well and they're really dedicated people.'

– Ed Kane

After getting his feet wet in the family business, Kane – who has a degree in economics from Harvard – decided to open his own restaurant.

With partner Arthur DeCarli, Kane transformed Pages, a restaurant with a 40-year history in Hingham into Stars on Hingham Harbor.

Now entering its seventh year, Stars was an overnight success for Kane and his partners when it opened in 1989.

Looking back, Kane, 34, said "we really winged it at Stars."

Originally a $25,000 renovation, he said Stars has gone through three major design changes, leading it from its late 80's blue-and-mauve interior to the brighter shades inside and to the bold-colored awnings that hang there now.

Change is critical for restaurants, said Kane, who considers himself a good student of the restaurant business.

And making the right amount and kind of changes is the challenge, he said pointing out that restaurant owners often make the mistake of changing too much, too soon, making the restaurant unrecognizable to the customers or they fail to change at all.

"It has to evolve enough so that people recognize the evolution but are not confused by it," Kane said.

Stars' great success – it brings in more than $2.5 million annually – provided a spring board for Kane's second venture, Tosca.

The up-scale Italian restaurant which Kane calls his flagship, opened in March 1993 and it's still tough to get a reservation on a Saturday night.

After Stars took off, Kane said he wanted to try another restaurant, something different. Kane chose the old granary built in 1910 on North Street, for the site of his new restaurant and hired Peter Niemitz to do the design ,which Kane refers to as "Cosmopolitan-Urban." Kane's wife, Patty and Stars chef Greg Acerra joined Kane in the new venture.

Formerly Amonte's, Kane had big ideas for the building and along with Niemitz worked to open it up by giving it more space horizontally.

"We wanted to open it up and exposes the tress work, beams and ceilings."

In addition to removing the mezzanine level and expanding the space, Kane said the restaurant was reversed with the focus changed from the back of the restaurant near the Station Street parking lot entrance to the front of the building on North Street, allowing passersby to look in the windows and see in and diners to be seen.

Dozens of interior decorating features distinguish the restaurant, from the authentic 1920's posters and parchment lights to the magnificent wood work in the wine room.

Niemitz's design earned Tosca second place among 400 applicants nationwide in a restaurant design award given during the Hotel, Motel and Restaurant show in New York, Kane said.

The renovation at Tosca cost about $1 million, not including the $750,000 Kane and his partners spent on the building.

Featured on "Chronicle," in Boston magazine's "Best of Boston" issue and countless other programs and publications, Tosca has been a booming business from the beginning – clearing $2 million in its first nine months. Kane expects that his company Eatwell Incorporated will earn $3.5 million in revenue this year from Tosca alone.

Ed Kane, owner of Stars and Tosca, is a Cohasset resident.

And while Tosca opened less than three years ago, it has already evolved and changed.

"We went from northern Italian to regional Italian," said Kane,who noted that the menu at Tosca will continue to change. Kane does not anticipate making any major modifications in the design of the restaurant in the near future other than repairing the hardwood floors that were damaged in last November's fire.

Kane estimates that there was about $110,000 in damage from the kitchen fire that began when the rotisserie was left unattended. Smoke and water damage from the automatic sprinkler systems caused more problems than the actual fire, Kane said. Tosca reopened just five days after the fire and continues to thrive.

Combined Kane estimates that Stars and Tosca will bring $6 million this year but this young restaurateur isn't resting on his laurels.

Last fall Kane hired a management consulting firm to help set corporate goals and last winter Kortenhaus Communications signed on to do the company's public relations.

"We wanted to position ourselves as an up and coming restaurant group," Kane said, and Kortenhaus is helping to open doors for the company.

Kane is taking advantage of this ongoing momentum to expand.

Kane's newest Hingham venture, the Fireking Baking Company will supply his two incredibly successful dining spots with fresh breads, pastries and pasta and will offer local diners another option for eating and drinking out or in.

Directly across North Street from Tosca and behind Stars, Kane's bakery/bistro, which is slated to open in November, will accommodate 41 inside and an additional 30 outside for terrace dining alfresco on a seasonal basis. In addition to the bakery's market area offering the freshest, crustiest breads (Kane is importing a $50,000 French steam injected oven for crusty bread baking) , Fireking will feature a French style wine bar with many fine vintages and beer along with all sorts of savory bistro items.

Unlike Tosca and Stars, Kane said he doesn't expect Fireking to be a big money maker. After a $650,000 renovation, Kane expects to break even at Fireking, and said that the real benefit of the bakery will be to upgrade the quality of the products at the restaurants. Fixing up the old garage style building across the street, which was formerly the site of Quinn's Bicycle Shop will improve the area aesthetically and increase Kane's property values. With his offices slated for the 19th century colonial adjacent to Fireking, Kane's niche in the "cove" will be complete.

And Kane is setting his sights beyond the town line, too.

In addition to looking to Braintree and other South Shore towns for possibly a chain of bakeries, Kane plans to open a New England clam-bake, barbecue style outdoor restaurant in Hull – next to the former nightclub Vogue (formerly the Surf). The 2.3 acre parcel with ocean views and a casual family focus, is sure draw Nantasket beach-goers and will likely give the very popular seafood restaurant Jake's a run for its money. Kane is shooting for May 1996 for the grand opening.

A cross between Bar Harbor and Nantucket dining spots, the clam bake restaurant will seat 400, offer live entertainment and will be open May to September. So far, Kane has no set plans to renovate the large building for a year-round restaurant. He plans to wait and see how this seasonal venture pans out first.

"We hope to spin off enough profits to to something with the building," Kane said.

Kane is cautious with this Hull venture and is watching that community's revitalization closely.

What's the secret to Kane's success?

Besides a whole lot of vision, Kane says it's his personnel.

"I hire great people. We have a good team, they're trained well and they're really dedicated people," he said.

Kane's 130 employees enjoy profit sharing, matching health benefits and special recognition in the company's "Employee of the Month" program.

Talented chefs and skilled management keep things running smoothly and Kane's wife, Patty, has a big role in the business as the Manager of the managers, he said.

Tosca's new chef 'extraordinaire' is Ken Oringer, the 29 year-old gourmet, who– when he worked at Silks in San Francisco – was voted one of the top five chef's in California. Kane said the search for a new chef at Tosca after Tim Quinn left was a long one, but fun.

"We flew chef's in from all over the country, showed them around Boston, and let them come down and cook for us. It was a lot of fun," he said.

Community service is another thing that sets Kane and his businesses apart from many others in town and he attributes a great deal of his success to that commitment to the community. Whether it's donating gift certificates to Jay Tolman's MDA telethon raffle, providing the food for a local road race, or chipping in for the Lion's Club Fourth of July fireworks display, Kane said community involvement is a big part of his business and has gained the company a lot of respect.

Ferries must face winter seas in Scituate boat trial

By Marilyn Jackson
Cohasset Mariner

Scituate selectmen are urging state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes to conduct a commuter boat trial run from Scituate to Boston for at least three months.

Last month local officials met with an aide to Kerasiotes and floated the proposal, with the idea that the experiment could begin in October at a cost of about $40,000 to $50,000.

State Rep. Frank M. Hynes, D-Marshfield, told selectmen Tuesday the funds for a longer trial run would have to come from the proposed $2 billion transportation bond bill which the governor will file with the legislature.

About $50 million is earmarked for expanded commuter boat service as it now exists, both on the North and South Shores, said Hynes.

Years ago, former state Sen. Allan McKinnon and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray as well as Hynes supported the concept of commuter boat service beyond the inner harbor, not only to Scituate but beyond.

"The time has come to test ferry service on the open water in winter conditions for a significant period of time, perhaps up to six months, but certainly no shorter than three months," said Hynes, suggesting that the experiment run from mid-December to mid-March.

"But," he cautioned, "a boat is not a supplement to a train."

Scituate selectman Joseph Norton agreed. "I would like to see a test. This is not anti-train. It's another method of transportation."

Norton, who drafted the letter to Kerasiotes in support of the test run, said its tone was "as vanilla as possible." Several months ago Norton had dropped his support for the train.

"I don't want the state to spend excess money, but we're not further ahead than we were 10 years ago" when the rehabilitation of the Old Colony Railroad's three lines was first proposed.

Since then, construction has begun on both the Plymouth and Middleborough lines.

The Greenbush line has been subjected to further environmental review on both the state and federal level; in addition, other transportation options that were rejected in the earlier stages, such as expanded commuter boat service and a guided busway, are undergoing further study.

Hynes suggested that in order to have a valid test, the commuter boat should run twice in the morning and twice in the afternoon. But, he said, Kerasiotes may choose different options.

"He may not suggest worrying about onshore facilities or the numbers to make such a run economically feasible. He may just want to see if the boat can travel into Boston under 40 minutes and not run into trouble."

School space plans aired

Town meeting presentation is Nov. 6

The Cohasset elementary schools are eight classrooms short of what's needed, according to an interim report by the Cohasset School Building Committee.

And by the year 2005, the elementary schools will need 14 additional classrooms, according to the report, which was discussed at the Sept. 21 Cohasset School Committee meeting and again at this week's selectmen's meeting.

The School Building Committee is investigating issues related to the physical plant at the town's three public schools, including the availability of classroom space, the adequacy of school facilities, and the physical condition of the 70-year-old Osgood School, and is considering various courses of action, including constructing a new school or renovating existing schools.

School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder said he hoped the six options would be narrowed down to two or three by Nov. 6, when they will be presented to Town Meeting, he

Conservation board tries for special status

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Last week the Conservation Commission unanimously voted to ask selectmen to designate its members as "special municipal employees."

But at their meeting this week, selectmen aren't sure that's a good idea.

State Ethics Commission guidelines allow individual town governments to decide what positions or jobs constitute receiving the "special" classification.

And although special municipal employees are not exempt from the conflict-of-interest law, according to the state, there is more leeway.

The issue arose because two conservation commission members may have the appearance of a conflict, selectmen said.

Hull wants the Strait scoop on shared pond

Armed with information, a large contingent of residents and officials from Hull met with the Cohasset Conservation Commission Sept. 21 at Cohasset Town Hall. The commission called the meeting to discuss the ongoing midge and water level problems at Straits Pond.

And while Hull would like to know within 30 days what Cohasset intends to do about the Pond's problems — Cohasset officials will only promise that steps will be taken.

"There was a tinge of animosity in some of the statements (made)," Conservation Commission Chairman Thomas Callahan told selectmen Monday.

"Our community will follow up on our side. I pledged to go forward

School articles are proposed

Among the warrant articles which will be voted on at the Nov. 6 Town Meeting, several concern funding in the schools.

The Cohasset School Committee voted Sept. 21 to place three of the articles on the Town Warrant.

Town Meeting will be asked to decide how to pay for an additional first grade teacher this year, schools Superintendent Dr. Stephen Hart said.

"There was a significant increase in the first grade population of about 20 students" this year, he said.

To keep class size in the low 20s, an additional first grade section was added, he said. The cost to the town will be $26,000.

The article was not considered at the March Town Meeting because the schools did not yet expect to add another section, he said.

Another article will ask Town Meeting to authorize $8,200 in funding for the the state-wide early retirement program. At the time of the March Town Meeting, that amount was not known, he said.

A third article will ask the town to approve the method of funding the education of Cohasset students at South Shore Charter School in Hull, he said. Currently, the state "bills" Cohasset by reducing local aid to the town. The cost to the town is not yet known, but will be known by November, he said.

Offsetting that cost is an increase of $80,000 in state aid to the Cohasset Public Schools this year under the Education Reform Law, Hart said.

Free tech help is offered

The Cohasset Public Schools will be getting some free assistance for technology-related projects and programs.

The school system will participate in the Massachusetts Tech Corps project (MTC), which places volunteers with computer expertise in the schools, the Cohasset School Committee decided at its Sept. 21 meeting.

Volunteers work on projects such as repairing computers, programming software, and teaching skills, said Dr. Michael Savage, executive director of the South Shore Educational Collaborative and a regional coordinator of the MTC.

The program is run by the Massachusetts Software Council, a trade association representing the state's software industry.

The volunteers are employed by private companies and have expertise in computers and computer software, Savage said.

The program, which began in January, is currently running in 12 school districts, said Joyce Plotkin, executive director of the Software Council. The council will announce the participation of some 42 other school districts in the next few weeks, she said.

Participating in the program will cost the town nothing, Superintendent of Schools Stephen Hart said.

"It's a no-lose situation," he said.

Condo associations rule over building changes

Planners offer clarification of regulations

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Last week, the Cohasset planning board okayed the request of a condominium owner to enclose the deck at the rear of his unit.

In Hingham, the zoning board of appeals has had at least one inquiry regarding an addition to a condominium unit.

While it is too early to tell if a trend is developing, officials in both towns believe that the condominium associations have as much to do with changes to buildings in these communities as do the building and zoning officers.

Condominiums in Cohasset remain under the jurisdiction of the planning board board, chairman Al Moore said this week.

In the case of the enclosure of the deck at Wheelwright Farms, the building commissioner turned the matter over to the board for clarification, he explained.

The board's decision turned on the fact that Charles Fink was not altering the footprint of the building. The deck was an existing feature of the unit, and was dedicated exclusively for the use of that one unit. It is not a common area, Moore said.

"And it had the blessing of the condominium association," Moore noted.

He added that any changes proposed to enlarge the building's footprint would be reason to reopen the entire subdivision application, with all the accompanying filings, hearings, and notifications.

Enlarging the living area of the unit "is not a problem to us," planning board member Robert Sturdy added.

Cohasset building inspector Robert Egan in this case, enclosing the deck did not violate any setback restrictions.

Sturdy also said that the original subdivision plan for Wheelwright Farms, which the Cohasset planners approved in the late 1980s, showed larger units. What was actually built is about 20 per cent smaller than what the board permitted at that time.

Large homes that were multi-family rental units and converted to condominium ownership present a different considerations.

Hingham's zoning administrator Mary Jean Shultz said the owner of a condominium on South Street recently inquired about enlarging an existing studio unit to a one-bedroom unit by enclosing a sunporch. In this case, the unit was converted to individual ownership in a multi-family house.

Before any alterations can be made under these circumstances, Shultz said, a ZBA hearing may be necessary because this project is the alteration of non-living space to living space. The town's zoning by-laws prohibit any increase of a non-conforming use.

But it is possible to enlarge a condominium unit without changing the footprint of the building.

The zoning, planning, and building officials in both towns say there are no provisions to prevent enlarging units by combining two or more. A condo owner desiring more space could buy the adjoining unit–above, below, or next door–and connect the two for one larger unit. The boards have no authority over the interior configurations of rooms, they said.

The individual condominium associations at each complex would be the first hurdle, the officials said. Beyond that, the town would have jurisdiction only as far as building code enforcement.

Officials also noted that approvals for the condominiums focused on the acreage and capacity of septic systems. If the total number of bedrooms did not increase by combining two or more units, then the likely total occupancy of the complex would not increase.

"The common septic system is the determining factor," Sturdy said.

Managers at condominium complexes in Hingham and Cohasset agreed that it would be possible to combine units in this way, but said the associations must approve such proposals. In addition, the by-laws of the associations prohibit any alterations of common areas.

Hingham's zoning administrator Mary Jean Shultz said condominiums have a set of "self-imposed regulations" under the condominium by-laws. Some of those regulations were factors in the special permits granted by the town at the time the condominiums were approved.

For example, at the time the board approved The Meadows on Union Street, the special permit stipulated that basements could not be used as bedrooms. While these areas could be finished for living space – such as a sewing room or den – the number of bedrooms in each unit could not be increased, Shultz explained.

Cohasset planning board chairman Moore said he is not overly concerned with combining units, but would be more troubled if applicants tried to divide one unit into two since that would impact other areas of the development, such as parking and traffic.

Cultural grant is announced

Local public programs in the arts, humanities and science will receive grants from the Massachusetts Cultural Council, a state agency. The grants will go to area cultural organization artists and towns, helping the cultural life of communities to thrive and increasing the role of cultural development in education reform and economic development.

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) and Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) have announced that the Cohasset Cultural Council has received a grant totaling $3,150 to be used for cultural programs and a children's ticket subsidy program (PASS).

The local Cultural Council of Cohasset is accepting applications for arts lottery/PASS grants for the 1996 cycle. Application deadline is Monday, Oct. 16.

Application forms are available at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. or by calling Ellen in the selectmen's office at 383-9000. Completed applications should be mailed to: Nancy Connolly, 68 Doane St., Cohasset 02025. Notification of LCC grants will be made by Dec. 15.

Hull wants the Strait scoop on shared pond

but I will not listen to deadlines."

Cohasset officials invited representatives from neighboring communities Hull and Hingham. While Hull responded with numbers, Hingham officials were conspicuous by their absence, prompting both Cohasset and Hull officials to express their disappointment.

Scanning the overflow crowd, Callahan said he hoped that the meeting would not "get into any name calling or finger pointing."

Hull Town Manager Philip Lemnios explained what Hull had done over the summer to help alleviate the midge problem as well as expenses incurred by the town in doing so. He further sought to calm the fears of some of Cohasset's Jerusalem Road property owners by explaining that the water level of the pond was not the primary reason for excess backyard water, which a few owners had been experiencing recently. Lemnios told the commission that during an investigation prior to the meeting, Hull officials, with the help of one Cohasset property owner, traced a water trail leading from his property to a malfunctioning septic system on an adjoining residence.

Currently Jerusalem Road is not on Cohasset's sewer system.

Cohasset selectman Peter Pratt stated: "The highest priority of the sewer commission is to the area of Jerusalem Road going towards West Corner and the Hull line."

But when prodded by Hull officials as to when they can expect Cohasset to start sewerage work, Pratt apologetically responded, "How soon can the fixes on the Cohasset side take place? We don't know."

Conservation chairman Callahan admitted that his committee's biggest problem is in coordinating efforts with Cohasset's other boards (sewer commission, board of health and selectmen), but pledged to schedule a meeting with the sewer commission to discuss the situation.

Jerusalem Road resident Walter Schroeder thanked Hull officials for their efforts and chided his community's leaders for their lack of effort.

"I want one board to take hold of the bat and step up and take a swing at it," he said.

While pointing out that the strict new state regulations of Title 5 concerning the upgrading of septic systems is a concern to property owners, who now favor waiting for town sewerage. Schroeder further stated that the lack of joint effort amounted to "square hole and round peg solutions between the two towns. Who's right, who's wrong, who knows."

When asked if they could expect a fair sharing of monetary funds to help defray pond expenses (the past two years Hull has spent $16,311.18 compared to $3,620 by Cohasset), Hull officials were told that Cohasset's annual budget allocates only $2,000 a year for pond maintenance.

Hull selectman Carl Katzoff openly bristled over the slowness of actions taken by Cohasset and threatened that Hull would take over the total managing of the pond if Cohasset could not be more expedient in their efforts.

One resident, pleased with the evening's proceedings, said, "A monologue has been opened between Hull and Cohasset, and hopefully Hingham will join in."

Lemnios concluded the meeting by saying, "Putting sewer in is not the be all and end all, but it would be a start. Sewer the area and close the septic systems."

Conservation board. . .

man Thomas Callahan, an attorney, is representing the owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina, a property which abuts the town-owned Hagerty parcel. Paul Trendowicz, who owns the Marina, would like to buy the Victorian house which was used as the showroom for Cohasset Colonials which formerly occupied the site. Callahan has appeared before selectmen arguing for Trendowicz's proposal.

And conservation commission member Veneta Roebuck's daughter is employed by a design/engineering firm that has done business with the town.

Although he did so with a "heavy heart", Selectman Peter Pratt said he is opposed to the request for the classification.

"I'm extremely worried about precedence," he said.

Pratt said the thought it was "wrong" for an attorney who sits on a town board to represent a private client before other town boards or agencies.

"I agree with (Tom and Vee) 99 percent of the time....the toughest part of this business is when you disagree with friends," he said.

"Special" classification would allow Callahan to represent Trendowicz before the planning board, for example, where if he did so now, he would be in violation of the ethics law, selectmen explained.

It would also relieve Roebuck of having to recuse herself from official discussions on matters that the company, her daughter is employed with, is involved in.

Meeting regular Bob Davenport, who sits on the health board, agreed with Pratt.

"You might as well allow the building inspector and wire inspector and everyone else to do business with the town," he said.

Seemingly to favor the designation, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said both Callahan and Roebuck are "dedicated people" who do a lot for the town.

Meeting regular Bob Martin agreed with Brown saying it was a "dicey situation" and didn't think town officials should be denied of making a living.

"There are enough laws, enough problems – do not exclude capable, honest people from serving the town," he said.

Each town maintains a special municipal employee list which may be updated or changed at any time by the powers that be in that town, according to the ethics commission. The list can include elected or appointed officials and some part-time and intermittent positions.

At Selectman Michael Sullivan's suggestion, selectmen agreed to table action on the conservation commission's request until their meeting Monday (Oct. 2).

In a related matter, Brown said he though Roebuck and Planning Board Chairman Al Moore were in conflict serving on both the Hagerty committee and their respective boards now that plans for the site could reach the permitting stage.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby agreed saying Moore and Roebuck would be "both judge and jury" on Hagerty matters.

But Sullivan said that was an issue selectmen should take up separately from the one concerning special employee designation.

Hazardous waste collection set

A Hazardous Waste Collection Day will be held Saturday, Sept. 30, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Swim Center off Sohier St.

The following is a list of typical household hazardous waste that will be accepted for proper disposal: drain cleaners, metal polish, photo chemicals, dry cleaning fluids, rust preventatives, wood strippers, paint thinner, degreasers, gasoline, brake fluid, pesticides, insect sprays, pool chemicals, cesspool cleaners, fertilizer, bleaches, over cleaners, arts and crafts supplies, floor cleaners, radiator cleaners, wood preservatives, oil-based paint, solvents, sealants, antifreeze, engine and radiator flushes, herbicides, rodent killers, muriatic acid, creosote, batteries and ammonia.

Unacceptable materials include: large quantities of unknown materials, radioactive waste, including smoke detectors, explosives, gun powder, flares and ammunition, pressurized fire extinguishers, unknown gas cylinders and substances regulated by the DEA.

For further information call the Health Board at 383-9900.

ADS AND DISCLOSURE RULE

QUESTION: I understand the truth-in-lending law requires lenders to give customers a plain statement of credit charges involved in any transaction. Does this also apply to real estate advertising?

ANSWER: Yes it does! It has helped clear up many previous misunderstandings when advertisers would mention some, but not all of the financial costs of a property for sale. Do you remember when ads used to read like this: "FOR SALE – 3-bedroom home, only $60,000 with $6,000 down."

Now, if you advertise down payment, you must also state the monthly payment and the interest rate. Tell all or tell nothing.

Town meeting presentation is Nov. 6

said.

The School Committee will ask for input from Town Meeting on the options and request additional funds to study the remaining options more thoroughly, he said.

The report proposed five "viable" options for addressing problems with the physical plant at the schools, all of which involve either constructing a new school or making additions onto existing schools.

In its report, the School Building Committee said that if the elementary schools were renovated to meet minimum educational standards, a cafeteria, school libraries, and other facilities would need to be created or expanded at the schools. To make room for the new or expanded facilities, several classrooms would need to be shut down, resulting in a system-wide shortage of eight classrooms, the report said.

In particular, the report said, the Osgood School would need to create a 1,300 square foot cafeteria and 600 square-foot kitchen, expand its library by 700 square feet and its gym by 600 square feet, and create separate art and music rooms.

To create space for these new and expanded facilities, four classrooms would have to be shut down in Osgood, leaving the school with 12 classrooms, the report said.

The Building Committee also said that to meet minimum educational standards, the 1,350 square-foot library at the Deer Hill School "should be expanded," because it is less than half the size of the state guideline of 3,000 square feet.

The library would be expanded into where Deer Hill's Classroom 103 now stands, causing the school to lose one classroom, the report said. Deer Hill would be left with only 15 classrooms.

Thus, if the schools were renovated to meet minimal standards, the elementary schools would be left with a total of 27 classrooms, which is eight classrooms short of the 35 classrooms that are needed, said architect David Soleau of the Boston firm Earl Flansburgh and Associates.

Earl Flansburgh and Associates was hired by the town to assist the School Building Committee.

The elementary schools currently need 35 classrooms, assuming the average class size is 22 students, said Dr. John Calabro, vice chair of the School Building Committee.

If Osgood were no longer used as a school, Cohasset would be short 20 classrooms, Soleau said.

Shortage to increase

The classroom shortage will increase over time, the report indicates.

Because of increasing school enrollment, Cohasset will will be short 14 classrooms in 2005 if both elementary schools were renovated to meet minimum standards, Soleau said. In that year, the schools would need 41 classrooms, the report said.

The report also said, "The Junior/Senior High School has adequate facilities for the anticipated student population through 2005. No changes are necessary to meet state guidelines."

The Building Committee and its architects also addressed the question of where new construction could take place.

The 4.1-acre site on which the Osgood School sits is too small to accommodate an addition onto the exterior of the school, Soleau said. The school needs over 10 acres to accommodate the size of its population, he said.

Schools need room for parking, bus turnarounds and outdoor play areas, said Dr. John Calabro, vice chair of the Building Committee and an education consultant.

"There is very little room to add to the building physically," he said.

However, additions could be made to either the Deer Hill or Junior/Senior High School, Soleau said.

Conditions of schools

The Deer Hill School and the Junior/Senior High School are in "fairly good" condition, he said.

Those two schools are in "a lot better condition" than the Osgood School, said School Building Committee Chairman Richard Silvia.

The doors and windows of the Osgood School "need to be replaced," Silvia said. "The plumbing, heating, ventilation and electrical systems all function but are old and tired," he said.

In evaluating the condition of the town's school buildings, the School Building Committee and Earl Flansburgh and Associates were assisted by civil engineers that the architects had hired, and by many town officials, including building inspectors, wiring inspectors, the Board of Health, water commissioners, and Fire and Police chiefs, said Richard Silvia, chairman of the School Building Committee.

State funding

Renovations and additions at the Deer Hill School or Junior/Senior High School would be eligible for 60 percent reimbursement from the state, while renovations and additions at the Osgood School would not be eligible for that reimbursement, Soleau and school officials said.

Constructing a new school building would also be eligible for 60 percent reimbursement from the state, officials said.

Under the School Building Assistance Act, the state can choose to finance 60 percent of the cost of school building construction projects.

The state Department of Education has sent a letter to the Cohasset School Department saying that it would not provide financial assistance for renovations or additions to the Osgood School, said School Building Vice Chairman Dr. John Calabro.

The state does not want to assist in construction projects at the school because of its wooden structure and because of the building's age, he said.

"The town would have to pick up the whole cost (of construction projects at) Osgood," he said.

Options for future

The school building committee and the architects proposed five "viable" options on how to address the classroom shortage, the inadequacy of school facilities and the condition of the Osgood School.

Some of the options involve constructing a new school building, some involve creating a separate middle school at the Junior/Senior High School building, and some involve converting the Osgood School to a non-educational use.

Silvia said that the options were only "preliminary," that they could be "drastically modified" and that a different option might ultimately be chosen for development.

In the first two options (Option 1 and Option 2), the Osgood School would be retained as a school.

• Option 1: the Osgood School would be renovated completely. Osgood would house grades PK through 1 and would have 11 classrooms. An addition would be made to the Deer Hill School which would double the number of classrooms there to 30 classrooms. There would also be additions made to Deer Hill's library, cafeteria, and facilities for art, music and physical education. Deer Hill would house grades 2-6. The Junior/Senior High School would house grades 7-12.

• Option 2: a less extensive renovation would be made to Osgood. Osgood would house grades PK-K and would have 5 classrooms. An addition

Application deadline is June 1

School officials say that if Cohasset meets the June 1 School Building Assistance Act application deadline, there is a good chance that the town will be "grandfathered" if the SBCA were rewritten to reduce state funding. That means the town would still be eligible to receive 60 percent funding from the state (see page one story on school space).

would be made to the Deer Hill School which would double the number of classrooms there to 30 classrooms. There would also be additions made to Deer Hill's library, cafeteria, and facilities for art, music and physical education. Deer Hill would house grades 1-5. The Junior/Senior High School would be converted into separate middle and high schools. The middle school would house grades 6-8, while the high school would house grades 9-12. One additional classroom would be added to the middle school.

In options 3, 4, and 5, the Osgood School would be converted to alternative use.

- Option 3: A new 23-classroom school building would be constructed which would house classes PK-3. Three classrooms would be added to the Deer Hill School, which would house grades 4-6. Additions would also be made to Deer Hill's art, music, and physical education facilities. Deer Hill would house grades 4-6. The Junior/Senior High School would remain as it is now.
- Option 4: A new 29-classroom school building would be constructed which would house grades PK-4. The Deer Hill School would house grades 5-6 but would otherwise remain unchanged. The Junior/Senior High School would also stay the same.
- Option 5: Fourteen classes would be added to the Deer Hill School, which would have a total of 29 classrooms. Additions would also be made to Deer Hill's library and art, music and physical education facilities. The Junior/Senior High School would be converted to a middle school housing grades 5-8, and a high school housing grades 9-12. Six additional classrooms would be added to the middle school.

A sixth option, considered less desirable, was proposed which would create a "huge school" out of the Deer Hill School, Soleau said. In this sixth option, Deer Hill would have 41 classrooms and house grades pre-K through 6. The junior-senior high school would remain as it is.

"In our opinion," the report said, "this would result in too large an elementary school population at a single site and should not be actively considered."

Under Option 6, Deer Hill would house between 709 and 781 students during the next ten years, the report said.

"The larger the school, the less personal the school can become," Hart said. In most cases, school systems want to downsize elementary schools so they can have "more of a family feeling," he said.

Middle school?

The middle schools under options 2 and 5 would be physically separated from the high school, School Committee chairman Ralph Kidder said. In both cases, the junior high wing at the high school would be converted to a middle school and the corridor attaching the junior high wing to the high school would be blocked off or otherwise severed, he said.

But Silvia said the connecting corridor would be needed sot that middle school students could travel to the high school cafeteria and gym.

In both cases, the middle school would have its own entry, its own library and its own art and music facilities, the report said.

Concern was raised at the Cohasset School Committee meeting that under Option 5, fifth-graders would come in contact with 12th-graders.

"You must assure me that 5th-graders won't be with 12th-graders," said Ann Whiteley, co-chair of the Parents' Advisory Council at the Junior-Senior High School.

New school site

The architects and their civil engineers investigated 11 sites where a new school could be sited and recommended that any new school building be sited on a 77-acre town-owned tract that lies between the two elementary schools, Silvia said.

"It is a good-sized site that is well located in relationship to other schools and the center of town," said Calabro.

Sewage connections to the site are "projected to be handy," Silvia said.

School officials want to finalize any building plans so they can meet the June 1, 1996 deadline for applying for state funding.

The School Building Assistance Act (SBCA), the legislation which provides 60 percent state funding for school construction projects, is scheduled to expire at the end of June, said Kidder.

Whenever the SBCA expired in the past, the state Legislature would re-authorize it for five years, he said.

However, this year, the Legislature extended the SBCA for one year after concerns were raised about whether the state could afford to fund it, Kidder said.

If the Legislature votes to extend the SBCA once again, it may choose to fund less than 60 percent of the cost of school construction projects, he said.

Grinnells make a new life on a Caribbean island

We want to say thanks to Joan Kovach for sharing with us news about the Grinnells. Joan writes:

"On the first of September, when most Cohasset families were taking care of buying new shoes and finding backpacks in preparation for the new school year, one Cohasset family was boarding a plane bound for the Caribbean Islands and their new life.

"The Grinnell family, formerly of Sohier Street, packed up their belongings and headed for Virgin Gorda, one of the British Virgin Islands, where Dick will operate the Misty Isle Yacht Charter Company along with a local partner.

"Dick, a well-known and respected architect and builder is responsible for many fantastic local home additions and renovations, for two new homes he designed and built in Scituate, and for the tasteful refurbishment of the Lightkeeper's House on Government Island, for which he was the main architect.

"Robin, an artist and language teacher who substituted in local schools, also lent her skills to the conservation commission, the Cohasset Garden Club, the Artist of the Month program at Cohasset Schools, the METCO Committee and many other community activities.

"Noel, their oldest son, is a freshman who has been involved in many youth sports including the Cohasset ski team. Now he will commute to an island school via boat.

"Dean is a sixth grader who played in soccer and basketball leagues last year and who could organize a group of classmates to go fishing or sledding in a moment.

"Emma, who met President Clinton last year, and who was always ready with a gift of beads she'd made or a fresh bouquet, is now a third grader, making friends in a new and beautiful neighborhood.

"The entire family has been active in many aspects of Cohasset life, and they are sorely missed by neighbors and friends. They have reported that despite a series of hurricanes in the Caribbean, their harbor fared well, and their new life is coming along."

Let's hear it for tenth-grader Elizabeth M. Hills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David W. Hills of Cohasset, for achieving "high honor roll" status at The Mercersburg Academy in Mercersbury, Pennsylvania.

Elizabeth was recognized for her "distinguished performance" in Junior English, Introduction to World History, Math 20, and Biology and she received a Cum Laude certificate for outstanding performance on the National Latin Exam.

At The Mercersburg Academy, awards for underclassmen are announced at the beginning of the following year during Opening Ceremonies at the boarding high school.

Obituaries

John H. Winters Jr.

John Harris Winters Jr., 82, of Cohasset, died Sept. 22 in Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. Mr. Harris was a lifelong resident of Cohasset.

He retired in 1976 after 28 years with the Norfolk County sheriffs department, where he served as a deputy sheriff. He was a former member of the Cohasset Police Department and a former Cohasset tax collector.

Mr. Winters was the husband of the late Ruth (Glines) Winters and leaves a daughter, Martha Winters Powell of New Canaan, Conn.; a son, John H. Winters III of Cohasset; four grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

A memorial service was held Sept. 26 at the Second Congregational Church, Cohasset. Burial was private.

Donations in his memory may be made to the New England Home for Little Wanderers, 20 Linden St., Boston 02134.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Discretionary Law

Setting policy is probably the most important task that any board of selectmen undertake.

This week, to use meeting regular Bob Martin's words, selectmen were faced with what could be a "dicey" situation.

Under the state Conflict of Interest Law, selectmen have the power to use their discretion by giving certain positions or jobs "special municipal employee" status.

Essentially "special" designation allows the employee to do business with the town.

This week the conservation commission requested special municipal employee status for its members, two of whom have or could have the appearance of a conflict of interest.

Commissioner Thomas Callahan, an attorney, represents a local business that wants to buy a piece of town property. And his fellow commissioner Vee Roebuck's daughter is a member of a small company which has done business that has come before the conservation commission.

We think selectmen did the right thing this week by taking time to think this over.

With a state guideline like this, selectmen have to be concerned about perceived as well as real conflict of interest.

Selectman Peter Pratt rightly said he was worried about setting a precedent.

As much as selectmen may like these commissioners personally – they should not agree to this designation on the basis of individual character or how hard the person has worked for the town.

They should be objective and use their common sense.

These guidelines recognize that in a small town sometimes jobs overlap. For example in some towns, part-time fire-fighters have "special municipal employee" status so they can also help plow the streets when it snows.

Mr. Pratt said the "toughest part of this business is when you disagree with friends."

It takes courage to take the hard line on this matter. But we think that may be necessary to avoid even the appearance of a "good old boy network" in town.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Forest Avenue issue is clarified

To the editor:

During the past few weeks, the highway department has received numerous calls regarding the condition of Forest Avenue. These calls have stated the obvious disrepair of this road and the callers inquiring as to when the highway department plans to fix it.

This is not a highway department project and we are not responsible for its condition or repair.

This project was done by the CJP & Sons Corporation as ordered by the Cohasset Water Commissioners. It is in their contract with the Town Cohasset to put the road back in its original condition. The water commissioners are now negotiating with the engineers and the contractor to do this.

Any calls regarding this issue should be made directly to the water department. The highway department does not have any information regarding the timetable for these repairs.

Article on Chamber is appreciated

To the Editor:

I would like to thank you and James Lowenstein for the recent article in the Cohasset Mariner. The article was well-written and I know helped contribute to the success of the meeting.

We had about 75 members and potential members attend. We had a great meal and a very productive evening, with everyone benefitting from the meeting.

Existing chamber members as well as potential members learned of the various benefits and activities of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. The board of directors also received a lot of great input from those who attended.

We hope to have more of these open meetings so that we may continue to increase awareness of, and involvement in the chamber, and we hope to add 10 new members as a result of the meeting. A great time was had by all and we hope to have many more!

Once again, thank you for writing the article and helping contribute to the success of the evening.

Train survey missed the point

To the Editor:

Your headline article "Survey shows train wanted" from last week's issue (9/14/95) was laughable for its "conclusive evidence." The "facts" and the survey's "objectivity" may not be quite so clear. Consider the following:

- The survey company, Atlantic Marketing, has an "excellent reputation," but also an excellent conflict of interest whose key clients include the State Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (EOTC) and the MBTA, both of which stand to gain financially and politically from the Greenbush train project.
- Commuters were "clearly targeted" in the survey with 77 percent of the respondents commuting into Boston. So much for the randomness of the survey! A survey should measure the attitudes of all residents of the Greenbush corridor, not just commuters. Many residents in the corridor do not commute to Boston and would prefer not to have noisy, inefficient, and expensive trains go through their town.
- There were no questions regarding commuter boat options or the recently proposed rail extension through the South Weymouth Naval Air Station. Wow! I guess we should assume that everyone hates the boats!

Let's restate the real facts one more time to clear up this mess.

- The voters along the Greenbush line do not

Fire union head unhappy about interview process

New fire-fighter captain named last week

At a special meeting last Thursday, selectmen appointed fire-fighter James P. Runey as the town's newest fire department captain.

But that news was overshadowed for some members of the fire department who think that another fire-fighter was snubbed during the interview process.

Under state Civil Service rules, selectmen receive names of the top three finishers on the captain's exam. The board interviewed two, but one of the three, Paul Bilodeau, withdrew his application opening up another spot.

According to fire-fighters' union president Frank Mahoney, eight or nine firefighters took the captain's exam and only four scored high enough to qualify. The fourth, fire-fighter/EMT Tom Finegan asked selectmen for an interview after Bilodeau withdrew his application.

Finegan contacted selectmen but was not granted the interview before the vote Thursday.

"It's a shame he didn't get the chance to be interviewed," Mahoney said. Mahoney conceded that Finegan's interview probably wouldn't have changed the outcome – but stressed that the consideration of granting the interview would have gone a long way toward boosting morale.

He explained that Finegan put a lot of time into preparing for the exam and passing it was an accomplishment.

Selectmen said Monday that interviewing Finegan would not have changed their decision. They explained that under civil service rules, they have to take the top scorer or justify why they by-passed those who scored higher. They said they would also have had to petition civil service for the extra name (Finegan's) which would have taken time.

Runey, a Cohasset resident, starts his new position this week. The spot has been vacant since fire-fighter Arthur Pompeo, who served as acting captain, retired last November.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

want the train. Hingham and Scituate voted against the train by significant majorities in town referendums. Cohasset was evenly split. However, when all the votes are totaled, the core region to benefit (towns further away from Boston) say no.

• The Greenbush line will only reduce traffic on Route 3 by one percent and reduce traffic on Route 3A by three percent. That will do nothing to help resolve Boston's ability to meet Clean Air Act obligations. Greenbush is not worth even the minimal price of $215 million for the no Hingham tunnel option. Whether the cost is paid by the towns, the state, or the federal government, it is just poorly spent money, particularly for old technology.

• The South Shore's economic development challenges will be helped more by expansion of Route 3 and/or by a redesign/expansion of the Route 3/Route 93 interchange. The $215 million - $300 million Greenbush funds would be better allocated to those transportation enhancements, to a train spur nearer to Route 3 and/or to faster, modernized boat alternatives.

• The U.s. Secretary of Transportation is against grade crossings and wants to reduce them. Greenbush will have the most grade crossings of any rail line in the northeast, strongly contradicting the national goal.

Let's be careful to deal with objective facts when dealing with so much money. The Greenbush line does not represent the most modern, progressive and economical mode of transportation. It is a restoration project and represents a step backward for coastal towns along the South Shore. After significant debate within all the key communities impacted, and after plenty of time for people to get organized, the voting conclusively suggested that the MBTA assess other more productive solutions. Weld made the right decision to go back to the drawing board: The mandate just wasn't there and still isn't.

Hedlund proposes tax credit for septic system upgrades

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) is sponsoring legislation that would provide a tax credit for homeowners who upgraded septic systems between March and August as a result of Title 5 regulations.

The legislation would apply to homeowners who would not have been required to upgrade under the recently revised August regulations but were required to do so under regulations released in March. The bill states the tax credit would be in the full amount of the upgrade and would be allowed to be carried over for a period of seven years.

Hedlund hopes to introduce the bill in the House of Representatives soon. It reportedly has received broad-based support.

Town meeting is Nov. 6

It's now official: Cohasset voters will be asked to attend a special town meeting Monday, Nov. 6.

Monday night selectmen approved the date and agreed to open the warrant, to begin accepting potential articles for the town meeting, on Sept. 18.

The period for submitting articles will end Sept. 25.

It's Happening

Free flu clinics are offered

Two free flu clinics, sponsored by the Social service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health, will be held on Saturday, Oct. 21, and Saturday, Oct. 28, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to those 65 years and older and people with chronic heart and lung conditions. The vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician must evaluate the case. First-time vaccinations only will be available through the clinic.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is providing tetanus vaccine and urging all people who have not had a tetanus booster in the past 10 years to get one at the flu clinic.

All three of the vaccines can be administered simultaneously with little or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further information call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Tap dancers to perform

The largest group of tap dancers to assemble for a benefit on the South Shore will meet to "step, shuffle, step" at the South Shore Community Center Sunday, Oct. 8 from 2 to 5 p.m. The event, which is a fundraiser for the SSCC, is expected to attract dancers from several area schools as well as amateur theater groups such as Hingham Civic Music Theatre.

Master dance teachers Caroline Mahar, Sandra Combs, Lillian Fisher and Michelle Jablonski will each teach a 15-minute routine to beginner, intermediate and advanced groups of dancers. Mahar has been dancing and teaching for more than 50 years and is a well-known choreographer and dance event planner on the South Shore and in Florida, her winter home.

Mahar's daughter, Sandra Combs, literally followed in her mother's footsteps and is a respected member of the South Shore dance community in her own right. "This is nothing short of a tapomania. Everyone who owns a pair of tap shoes and can be there, will be there," Combs said.

Dancers will donate $10 to dance and receive instruction from the four instructors.

The SSCC houses a nursery school, a gymnastics program with an enrollment of 300, a three-lane bowling alley, the Council on Aging, "The Business Center" and "Women's Counsel." For further information about the fundraiser or the SSCC, call 383-0088 or 545-5462.

Cooks tour set for Oct. 7

Old Ship Church will sponsor its 41st Cook's Tour of Hingham Kitchens Saturday, Oct. 7, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Proceeds from the event will be used to help maintain Old Ship Church, which was Hingham's first meetinghouse. The building was erected in 1681 and is a national landmark. The tour will feature eight kitchens and is popular with those who are developing ideas on how to construct or remodel their own kitchens.

This year the event will take place during a weekend, so that couples who both work outside the home will be able to attend. This year's tour organizers also wanted a restaurant kitchen on the tour to give people a behind-the-scenes look at how professional kitchens work and what equipment they use. Tosca Restaurant has agreed to put its prep and pastry kitchens o the tour from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Tour chairpersons Cara Laren and Catherine Mayes have focused on kitchens with a view this year, and most kitchens in this year's tour have incredible views from the sink or eating area of beautiful perennial gardens, the ocean or swimming pools.

A kitchen book listing the houses on the tour with a map will be available the morning of the tour at Old Ship Parish House, 107 Main St., Hingham. The books contain descriptions of each kitchen, recipes and a list of contractors, carpenters, cabinet makers and kitchen designers whose work will be presented on the tour.Culinary gifts, baked goods and coffee will be available for purchase at the Parish House.

Tickets are $10 and may be purchased in advance at Hingham Public Library, Springer's Department Store and Buttonwood Books in Hingham Center as well as at French Memories in Cohasset. Tickets will be available, along with guide books, the morning of the tour at Old Ship Parish House.

Walking tour is Sunday

On Sunday, Oct. 1, the Historical Society walking tour will meet at the Maritime Museum at 2:30 p.m. to walk Cohasset's famous Town Common and the Village Center. Cohasset Common was recently nominated to the National Register of Historic Places and is one of the finest examples of an original New England town common.

For further information call the Society at 383-1434.

Costumes program is Oct. 19

The Cohasset Historical Society's Costume Committee will present a special lecture and tea titled "Les Petit Dames de Mode" or "The Little Ladies of Fashion" by designer John R. Burbridge Oct. 19 at 1 p.m. The program will be held at the South Shore Art Center, Ripley Road. Reservations for this unusual event are available for $20 through the Historical Society, and should be made by Oct. 12.

Burbridge, retired senior designer for Priscilla of Boston, is honorary curator of the costume section of the Essex Institute in Salem, has designed and created a modern version of the French fashion dolls that were used by dress designers in the 18th and 19th centuries to display their wares in European courts and later to spread new fashions from France to the United States. The collection of 29" dolls is costumed in exquisite detail. Burbridge's fascinating and informative illustrated lecture provides a glimpse at the style and elegance of a vanished society that was "so grand."

"The wonderful variety of styles and silhouettes within that time span offer – from a designer's point of view – an irresistible challenge," Burbridge said. "Victorian and Edwardian ladies of wealth and position lived in an insulated world quite apart from the real one...surrounded by servants, one assured one's place in the order of things by means of an endless round of social calls and carriage drives, and by the arranging of teas, receptions and dinners."

They "kept an army of dressmakers, ladies' maids, milliners, purveyors of textiles, jewelers, makers of fans, gloves and parasols engaged in a whirlwind of activity to keep Madame and her daughters property turned out for all occasions in fashionable splendor," he said.

Call 383-1434 for more information.

Open rehearsals Tuesday evenings

Open auditions for Thurber play

Hull Performing Arts, Inc. will hold open auditions for James Thurber's "A Thurber Carnival" Tuesday, Oct. 3 and Wednesday, Oct. 4, at 7:30 p.m. at The Box, 265 Nantasket Ave., Hull.

The wacky comedy is based on the short stories of Thurber and includes "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," "The Unicorn in the Garden" and"The Last Flower." For further information call 925-9086. The group is a non-profit, tax-exempt community theater.

Animals to join benefit walk for Wildlife

Oct. 14 on Boston Esplanade

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Mariner

This won't be your typical "pledge walk."

Yes, there will be plenty of people who will walk to raise money for a good cause.

But there will also be other creatures participating in the walk, including a python, two owls and a red-tailed hawk.

Welcome to the New England Wildlife Center's first annual Walk-A-Thon for Wildlife, which takes place Saturday, Oct. 14 on the Boston Esplanade.

The Walk-a-Thon benefits the New England Wildlife Center (NEWC), which is a private, non-profit animal hospital in Hingham that treats only wild animals.

The event on the Esplanade will also include a folk music mini-concert sponsored by 91.9 WUMB and a crafts fair, according to a press release from the Wildlife Center.

NEWC's primary mission, says NEWC Executive Director Gregory Mertz: "is to try to improve the conditions between which man and wildlife co-exist."

The hospital treats some 3,500 wild animals a year, including 175 different species ranging from hummingbirds to snapping turtles to hawks and owls, he said.

The animals are brought to the hospital mostly by private citizens, who may seek treatment for birds which have slammed into a window of their homes or animals which have been hit by cars, said Mandy Cannistraro, an educator and weekend supervisor at NEWC.

Some animals have been found sick by people strolling through the woods, and some have been found shot, she said.

"It's amazing how many people find these animals," she said.

The hospital does not treat pets, she said.

Hospitals for wild animals are "pretty few and far between," said Mertz, who is also a veterinarian.

NEWC also brings healthy animals to elementary and secondary schools where it conducts education programs, Cannistraro said.

The hospital also conducts a few "humane research projects" such as documenting the levels of PCBs, organophosphates and heavy metals in wildlife, Mertz said.

The research projects involve the gathering of information only, Cannistraro said. The research projects do not involve experiments on animals or sacrificing of animals, she said.

NEWC, a private hospital, has a yearly budget of $250,000 which is funded totally by donations, Mertz said.

A few hospitals for humans donate large amounts of old medical supplies to NEWC, Cannistraro said.

"Our finances are in kind of a critical shape right now," Mertz said.

September and October are very difficult months, because the hospital has not yet begun its annual fund-raising campaign, which starts in November, said Lee Lipoff, president of the NEWC's board of directors.

"We are managing. We are surviving," she said. But, she added, "We need the walk-a-thon to be productive for us."

Families and individuals are encouraged to participate in the walk-a-thon, which takes place along the Charles River on the Esplanade, Cannistraro said. People may choose to walk any distance they wish, whether it be a half mile or several miles, she said.

Also participating in the Walk-A-Thon will be Clack the barred Owl, Monty the Burmese Python, Alarius the grey-horned Owl, and B.J. the red-tailed hawk, she said.

The animals will be carried by handlers, and the python, which weighs almost 100 pounds, will be carried by two handlers, she said.

If people want to support NEWC but don't wish to go on the walk themselves, they may make a pledge to support one of the animals on their "walk," she said.

The animals, which are "education animals" and are comfortable in groups of people, will be "walking" for short distances, she said.

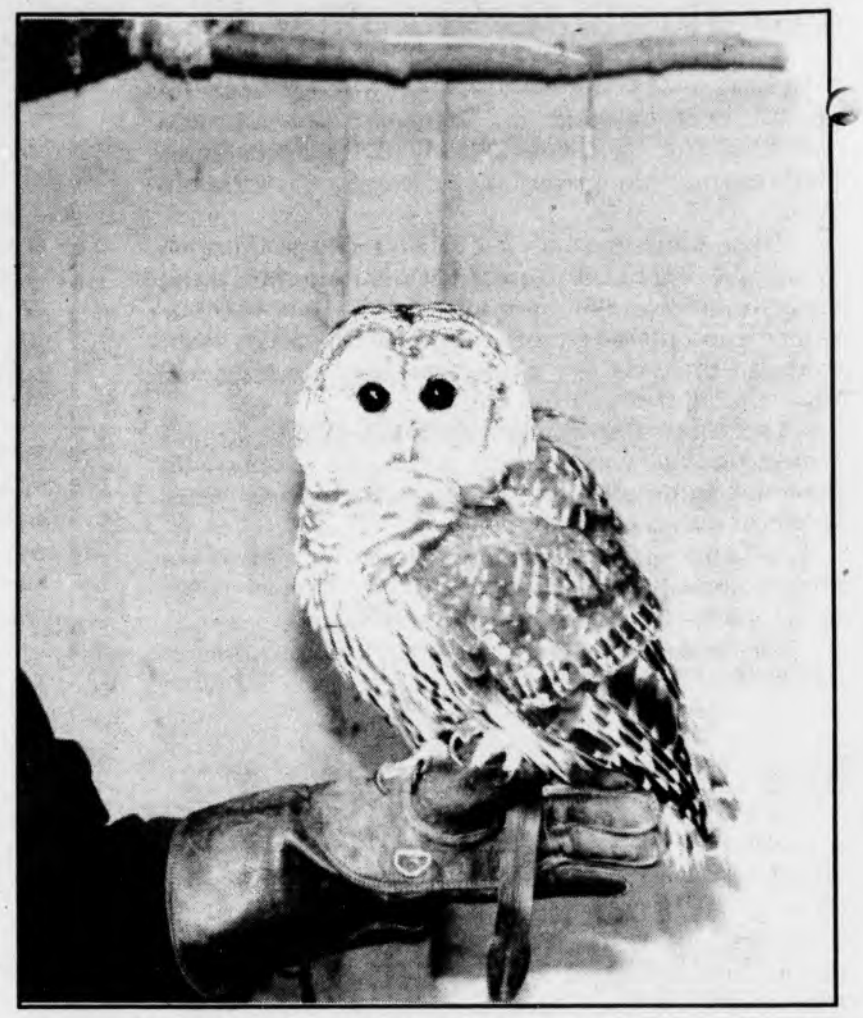
Vicki Croke of the Boston Globe's "Animal Beat," will be walking along as well, NEWC said.

Many other four, two and no-legged creatures will be present at the festivities on the Esplanade, NEWC said.

People will have an opportunity to learn about the animals at the event, Cannistraro said.

The folk music concert and crafts fair will take place at the Esplanade's Lederman Field, which is where the Walk-A-Thon begins and ends. The festivities begin at 10 a.m. at Lederman Field.

For more information about the event or how you can help out, call (617) 749-5387.



Sam, a barred owl, will attend the first Walk-a-Thon for Wildlife to benefit the New England Wildlife Center in Hingham. The NEWC is a private, non-profit animal hospital in Hingham that only treats wild animals.

Girls look to shake mild soccer slump

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There's no doubt the Cohasset High girls varsity soccer team has enough talented players to earn a spot in the Division 3 South Sectional tournament when the smoke clears and the final South Shore League standings are in.

But the Skippers have been in a funk of late and it has head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark wondering when her team is going to break out of it and get back to their old selves.

Cohasset has had problems putting the ball in the net since the start of the season. O'Day-Clark thought the Skippers had finally shook the slump when Kathleen Fitzsimmons scored all three of Cohasset's goals in last week's 3-0 win over Norton.

Clicking all game with Kansas City transplant Amber Hopeman, Fitzsimmons blasted home the hat trick and Hopeman assisted on every goal. "She's a phenomenal player," O'Day-Clark said of Hopeman.

The head coach was happy to see her team win decisively in the style of which it is accustomed. "It was good for them to get a win under their belt and play their game."

O'Day-Clark credited the play of netminder Katie Campbell, who has been indispensable to the team this season. "Katie has kept us in a lot of games because the defense hasn't really stepped up yet," O'Day-Clark said.

However, the Norton win didn't shake the Skippers' slump. In the following game against Scituate, Andrea Grew blasted home a pass from teammate Andrea Freman to give Cohasset a 1-0 lead. The Skippers weren't able to muster another tally, but it looked more and more as though their solid

Skippers stopped short

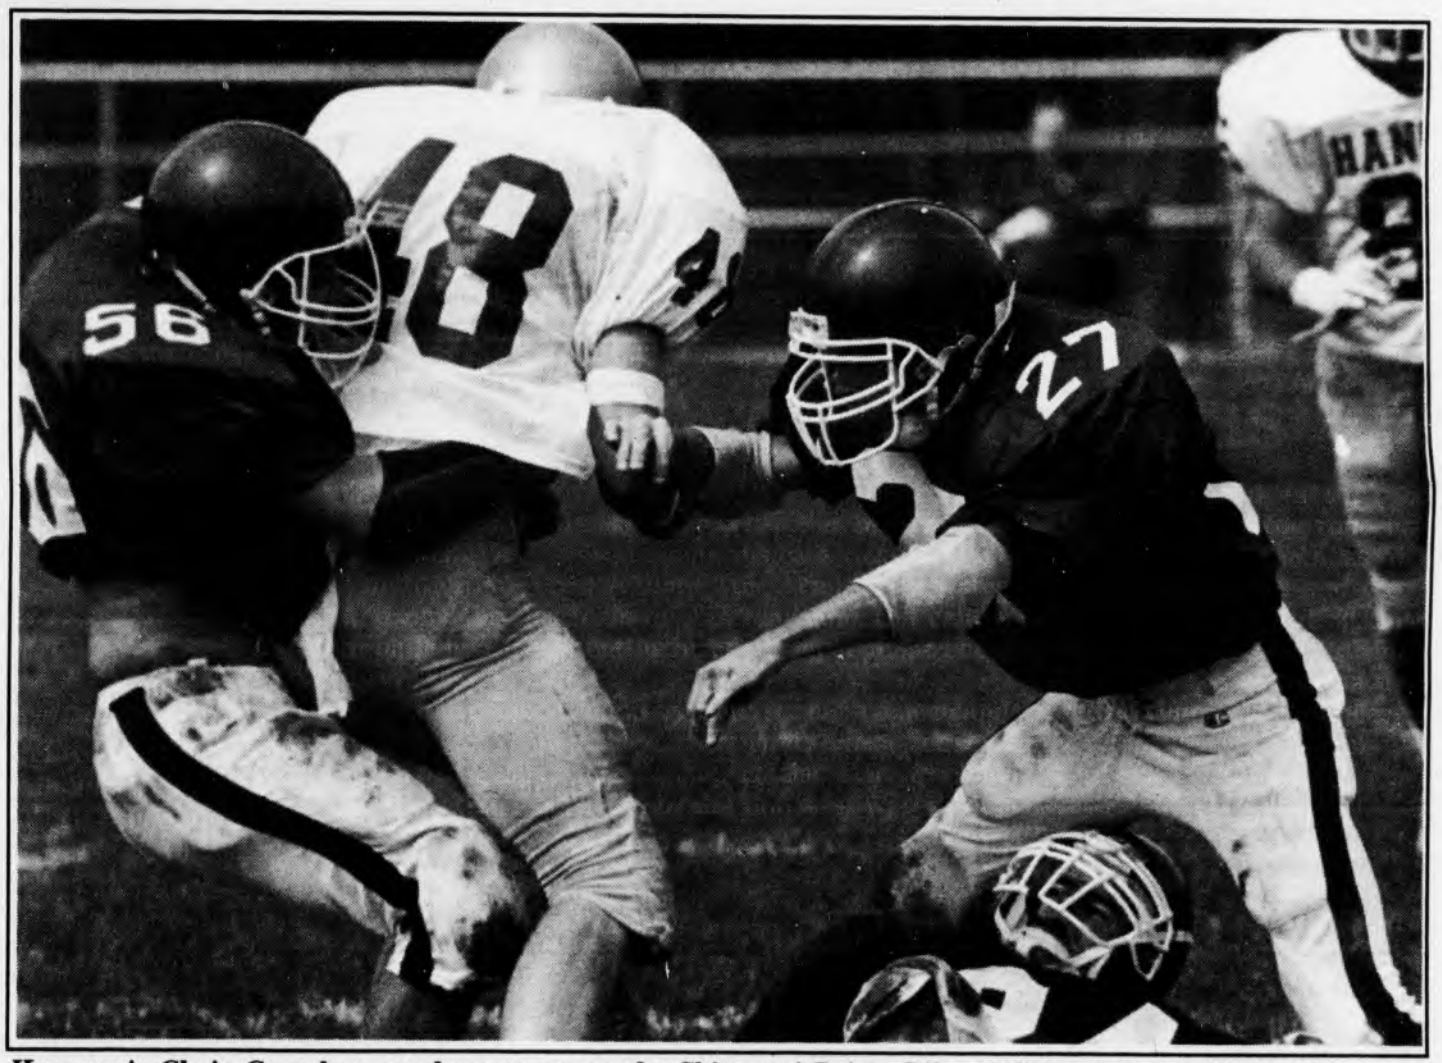
Hanover overpowers Cohasset, 42-0

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers hosted the Hanover Indians Saturday and suffered what headcoach Bob Knurek called a "learning experience." This lesson came in the form of a 42-0 loss, bringing the Skippers' record to 1-1, after last week's 14-0 triumph over West Bridgewater.

Right from the start, the home team looked overmatched as it faced a bigger, faster and, most importantly, a more experienced Hanover squad. Cohasset's young team has only eight players who played varsity football last year.

The Indians struck quickly, gaining a 7-0 lead on their first drive with a 10-yard run by Mark Wheeler. The Skippers' Andy Hamilton took the kickoff for Cohasset, but the Skippers couldn't get started, as they fumbled on the first snap, giving Hanover possession at the CHS 40 yard line. The Indians capitalized, gaining 30 yards on their first play from the line of scrimmage, finally stopped by hustling senior linebacker Brian Riley. Joe Kerissey bulled in for the touchdown and the extra point, making the Hanover edge 14-0.



Hanover's Chris Carr has nowhere to go as the Skippers' Brian Riley (56) and Grant Emde (27) move in for the tackle.

Staff Photo/Buzz Wadsworth

Once again, Cohasset's offense couldn't get anything started, despite the offensive line's efforts and gutty runs by Grant Emde. Hanover's offense rolled, however, and Brendan Cronin capped the drive with the score and conversion, putting the Skippers in a 21-0 hole.

On its next possession, the Skippers' offense once again sputtered and stalled and was forced to punt. The Indians scored again, this time a touchdown from Wheeler, making it 28-0.

Cohasset gained its only first down of the game on its next drive, a pass from Mike Dunphy, playing quarterback in place of the injured Ben

FleetCenter draws mixed marks from VIPers

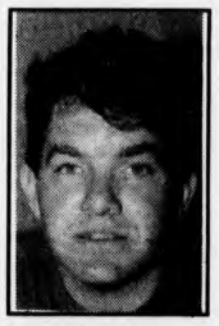
The New Boston Garden (pardon me, the FleetCenter) officially opened on Monday with a press tour to end all press tours and I was one of the hundreds who walked through the new digs to check out the scenery.

While I'm not an architect (and don't play one on TV) I managed to get a pretty good look at things.

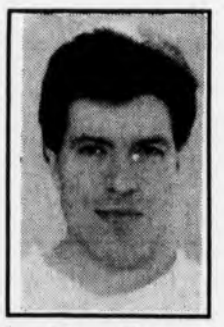
The following are some FleetCenter impressions:

*There will be no more worries about parking as there is a five-level parking garage beneath the new home of the Bruins and Celtics. (It has 1,150 spaces in total the FleetCenter people proudly pointed out.) However, it will cost $15 to park your vehicle. Yikes. Stick with the T. Two tokens cost under $2.

*I expected lush dressing rooms for both the Celtics and Bruins. Boy was I disappointed. The Bruins locker has 25-cent hooks to hold up the players equipment and one measly shelf per player. As of for the Celtics, their lockers are a little better with no hooks and an actual cabinet that opens and closes. Wow. I had more space at my locker in junior high.



McKee



Reardon

*The FleetCenter sure doesn't look like it holds the estimated 17,565 fans for hockey and 19,580 for basketball. I expected a vast area instead it is a cozy little place that doesn't look any bigger than an average Division I college basketball arena. (However, the seats are quick roomy and have cup holders.) Turns out the FleetCenter is 50-75 feet narrower than the average sports arena. Also the FleetCenter must have been slipped in with a shoe horn as it located only nine inches from the old Garden and eight feet from the Storrow Drive ramp.

*Not everyone in attendance was defense would make the lead stick.

It did for a while, but Scituate found the back of the net with less than 15 minutes to play to muster a 1-1 tie, and set Cohasset a step back in the process.

"We had our opportunities," O'Day-Clark said of the vastly underrated Sailors' team. "They're big but I can't believe how many players they have. They're a good team. They're having the same problem we're having; putting the ball in the net."

As if the loss wasn't bad enough, Hopeman tore a muscle in the back of her calf on a freak play and will be lost to the team for "at least a week" O'Day-Clark said.

The most discouraging game of the week came against Abington, the team Cohasset knocked out of last year's tournament. This time around it was all Abington as the Green Wave was able to establish their game early while the Skippers couldn't get a rhythm going.

"They're a very disciplined team with a good coach," O'Day-Clark said of Abington and its head coach Jeff Kent.

The Green Wave didn't look especially sharp in the first half, but still ended up leading 1-0. Abington then came out stronger in the second and Cohasset watched as the lead grew to 2-0.

O'Day-Clark said the difference in agressiveness between the two teams accounted for the Green Wave's early lead. "They go to the ball and they beat us to the ball," she said. "That was a disappointing loss for us.

"They have a very disciplined team. They know what they want."

Ali Kinchla broke Abington's bid for a shutout when her goal cut the lead to 2-1. But the Green Wave was able to add two more goals against the Skippers, who played an uncharacteristically lethargic game.

Cohasset was scheduled to play defending SSL champions Hanover on Tuesday and Hull on Thursday. O'Day-Clark surely wants to get the Skippers back on the right track against the tough Indians' squad. Hull, one of the league's weaker teams, did not win a game last season but has played better so far this autumn than last year.

But O'Day-Clark can't worry about their play. She has her own work ahead of her.

"We have to come together as a team," she said. "When we're on, we're on. When we're not, we're not."

Miriam Merliss enjoys her plate of food at the annual high school soccer breakfast at the Deer Hill School.

in love with the FleetCenter. Towards the end of the evening, Celtics great Bob Cousy (You know the play-by-play guy who sounds like Elmer Fudd) strolled in the grand opening party. Yours truly sauntered over to NBA Hall of Famer who played thousands of games in the Old Garden and asked for his autograph.

As the Cooz signed, I asked if he wouldn't mind answering a question.

"Sure kid, but make it quick, I gotta run."

"What do you think of the place," I said with notebook ready.

"It's functional. It works." He then turned and walked away. Ouch. I guess he was disappointed it wasn't called the CoozCenter.

*There were many of Boston's media "elite" at the event. Some of those spotted included Herald Inside Track columnists (and South Shore residents) Gayle Fee and Laura Raposa. I spoke with one of them (I think it was Laura) about their nice work on local boxing bum Peter McNeeley.

Also in attendance was Channel 7 sports guys Gene LeVanchy and John Dennis. LeVanchy was low-key and joked around with those he came into contact with. Dennis had his big "ANNOUNCER VOICE" going and could be heard from 25 feet away. Relax John, there wasn't a camera rolling.

Also there was NESN sports guy Bob Rodgers. Rodgers, who also happens to coach the Silver Lake baseball team, went out of his way to introduce me to NESN's lovely Dawn Mitchell. (Thank you Bob I owe you a nice feature article or two during baseball season.)

Mitchell said she grew up in Duxbury and attended Whitman-Hanson High. I could have talked to her forever. However, she quickly went off to mingle. Sigh.

Also there was WEEI's sports talk show host Glenn Ordway in the mix. Ordway who bills himself as "The Big O" on his lame afternoon radio show stands only 5' 7" but is at least that wide. I suggest he call himself "The Big Spaghetti-O." Can you say sit-ups?

Also spotted in the crowd was Boston Globe columnist Dan Shaughnessy (wearing the ugliest shoes I've ever seen) and Sports Illustrated's Gerry Callahan (sipping many brewski's and wearing the loudest tie in history.)

*And lastly, this may have been the only time I attend an event at the FleetCenter if the ticket prices quoted are correct. Who wants to drop $40 bucks to watch the Bruins play the Calgary Flames or the Celtics tip off against the Denver Nuggets?

* * * * *

Lets face it, some people have sports running through their veins. And when they find themselves caught in the predicament of having no high school game to attend or no college or pro team on television, sports withdrawal sets in. But fear not sports fans, you can always get your fix just by going to your local video store and picking up a sports-related movie. It's usually not the real thing, but it's entertaining and you get your daily requirement of sports viewing in.

And so, with the sports-starved individual in mind, I've compiled a list of some movies you may want to rent for an evening. Some are far better than others, but, darn it Jim, I'm I sports reporter not a movie critic.

• Hoosiers – Blue-collar actor Gene Hackman is superb as the no-nonsense basketball coach at a small high school in the mid west who teaches his players the meaning of the words hard work and discipline as they strive for the state title. Equally impressive is Dennis Hopper who plays the team's alcoholic assistant coach with mix of self-doubt and enthusiasm. Probably the best of the basketball lot.

• Blue Chips – Nick Nolte and Shaquille O'Neal together in a movie? Hey, why not. Nolte is a college coach who is pressured to build a winning program, and does, thanks to Shaq. One interesting footnote to this film is that Shaq was so impressed with the play of Anfernee Hardaway, who had a bit role, he helped convinced Orlando Magic management that Penny was the player they should go after in the '93 basketball draft. It paid off big. Goodbye Chris Webber, hello Anfernee!

• Major Leagues – Filled with gags, this movie's a lot of fun as the, then, lowly Cleveland Indians battle for the pennant. For a good laugh, I'd take Berenger, Sheen and Snipes over Belle, Lofton and Ramirez anytime.

• Unnecessary Roughness – You know you have a bad movie when super model Kathy Ireland plays the role of a kicker on a football team. Mr. Attitude Problem Scott Bakula leads a group of college misfits to gridiron respectability. Take a quantum leap right past this on the video shelves.

• Brian's Song – James Caan and Bill Dee Williams play Chicago Bear teammates Brian Picollo and Gale Sayers. This tear-jerker tells the story of the relationship between the two as Picollo is dying and Sayers tries to keep his mind on the game. Actual footage of Sayers in action shows just why he is now a member of the Football Hall of Fame.

• Slap Shot – Hilarious Paul Newman vehicle which features the now-famous Hanson Brothers. With long hair and dark-rimmed glasses, the three siblings bang, check and punch their way into your hearts. The language is a little rough and you wonder where the referees are when complete mayhem erupts on the ice.

• Mr. Baseball – It was a bomb at the box office, but Tom Selleck is actually quite likeable as a Major League baseball player who shows the Japanese a thing or two about playing ball the American way when he does a stint in the far east.

• Bang the Drum Slowly – Robert DeNiro and Michael Moriarty play a dying catcher and a pitcher with a heart. Keep plenty of tissues close by during this one. The same goes for Brian's Song.

Some others you may want to check out (again, I'm not a critic): The Babe, The Mighty Ducks, The Air Up There, Bobby Deerfield, Youngblood, Rudy, Pride of the Yankees, The Program, Vision Quest, The Jericho Mile, Field of Dreams, Angels in the Outfield, The Fish Who Saved Pittsburgh, All the Right Moves, The Bad News Bears, The Natural and Dorf on Golf.

Keefe. Dunphy hit a leaping Pat Reynolds. Reynolds, a newcomer who has been a good addition this year, miraculously leapt between two defenders to snare the pass. Unfortunately, the offense couldn't move the ball any further and was forced to punt. Reynolds sprinted downfield and buried the hapless kick returner at the Hanover 40.

The Indian offense again scored, this time via the air. Quarterback Brad Baronas hurled a perfect 30-yard spiral to end Jim McDonough, giving hustling Skipper defensive backs no chance.

Hanover's kickoff was returned by junior Kevin Duffy, who was mistakenly identified by a certain young reporter as his older brother, Brian, in last week's article. Duffy was hit hard, but still managed to gain the Skippers a few yards. Once again, though, they could not score and time ran down on the half with the score 35-0.

The start of the second half saw the Skippers defense stuff Hanover's offense for the first time in the game. Cohasset's offense looked briefly rejuvenated when Kevin Gentile carried for six and Dunphy ran for five, giving Cohasset the first down. But, on fourth and 8, Dunphy's efforts would earn him only five yards and the Skippers turned over on downs.

The Indians' Dave Kemp broke free for 35 yards and appeared destined for the end zone until Dunphy dragged him down from behind. Senior Kevin Smith made a nice tackle and it looked as if the Skippers' defense would make a goal-line stand. Hanover proved to be just too strong, and scored on a quarterback sneak by sophomore Kevin Bradley, making it 42-0. Smith returned the kickoff, but the offense couldn't get itself rolling and was once again forced to punt.

Cohasset's Brian Sasso, a senior captain who was one of the lone bright spots for the Skippers, pounced on a Hanover fumble, giving the Skippers the ball at their own 17 yard line. Time ran out on the home team, however, and the scoreboard read 42-0 as the clock hit zero.

Despite its inability to get their offense going, the Skipper defense played a stronger second half, limiting the Hanover squad to only one touchdown.

Knurek, who is usually not one to make predictions, had one for next week's game against Scituate: "It's not gonna get any easier."

Sasso, who has moved to linebacker this year, said, "The first drive was not what we expected, and things just got out of control from there. In the second half, we were playing for pride." Sasso seemed to have a positive outlook about the Scituate game. "We have to come out more intense, more focused on the game," he said. "I think that we'll definitely pick up a win."

Cohasset will face off against Scituate Saturday at noon on Milliken Field.

New Garden party for Bruins fans

FleetCenter opens with local star Kevin Stevens leading way

By David McKee
Cohasset Mariner

The FleetCenter, the sparkling new home of the Boston Bruins, took almost 29 months and $160 million to build. However, the project wasn't truly finished until team owners traveled to Pembroke earlier this month for an important $15 million part: a 6'3", 230-pound all-star left wing named Kevin Stevens.

On Monday evening the new Boston Garden, officially known as the FleetCenter, opened its doors for the first time.

By next week, the Bruins and Stevens will take to the ice and begin writing a new chapter in this area's hockey history.

Even FleetCenter project director Larry Moulter was caught up in Bruins fever over the new building and the recent trade for Stevens.

"Everyone is excited about the opening and the Bruins look to have a team that will really turn on the fans," he said at Monday's press opening. "The trade for Stevens was a great move and he should have a big impact."

Stevens, 30, who played youth hockey in Pembroke and high school hockey at Silver Lake before moving on to Boston College, the U.S. Olympic team and the Pittsburgh Penguins, always wanted to play for the Bruins.

And earlier this summer after hearing the Penguin owners wanted to make some roster moves to reduce their payroll, Stevens began working on a deal that would bring him back home.

"Kevin's been hearing trade talk for three years," said Arthur Stevens, Kevin's father who is a postman in Kingston. "He wanted to get back here very badly and figured if they're going to trade him, he might as well come to the Bruins."

In early September after months of negotiating, the deal was finalized.

"I've had easier times before in my life, but you do everything for a reason," Stevens said at his first press conference. "I'm very happy to where I am now. I've always dreamed of playing for this team."

As soon as the trade was made, Arthur Stevens began to sense the excitement from area hockey fans.

"When the deal was done we received over 90 phone calls that first day from people who wanted to talk to Kevin," Arthur said. "It was unbelievable. And along my route people would stop and want to talk hockey with me or would ask me to get Kevin's autograph. They did it before but since he came to the Bruins, it is much more intense."

Stevens has been a postman in Kingston for the last five years. His route is near Route 106. He lives on the Cape with his wife Tricia. Kevin and his wife live in Duxbury.

"We're just tickled pink that Kevin is playing for the Bruins and living in the area," Arthur said. "It's the best move for him and his wife (who hails from Marshfield.) I think it is going to be a good fit."

If Stevens can keep popping in 50-goal seasons, the FleetCenter may have to change its name to "The House That Kevin Built."

Located only nine inches from the old Garden, the FleetCenter is a 17,565 seat hockey heaven.

The sight-lines for the new arena are spectacular from all sides and there isn't one obstructed view seat in the house.

In addition, the new ice surface is regulation size compared to the smaller Garden ice.

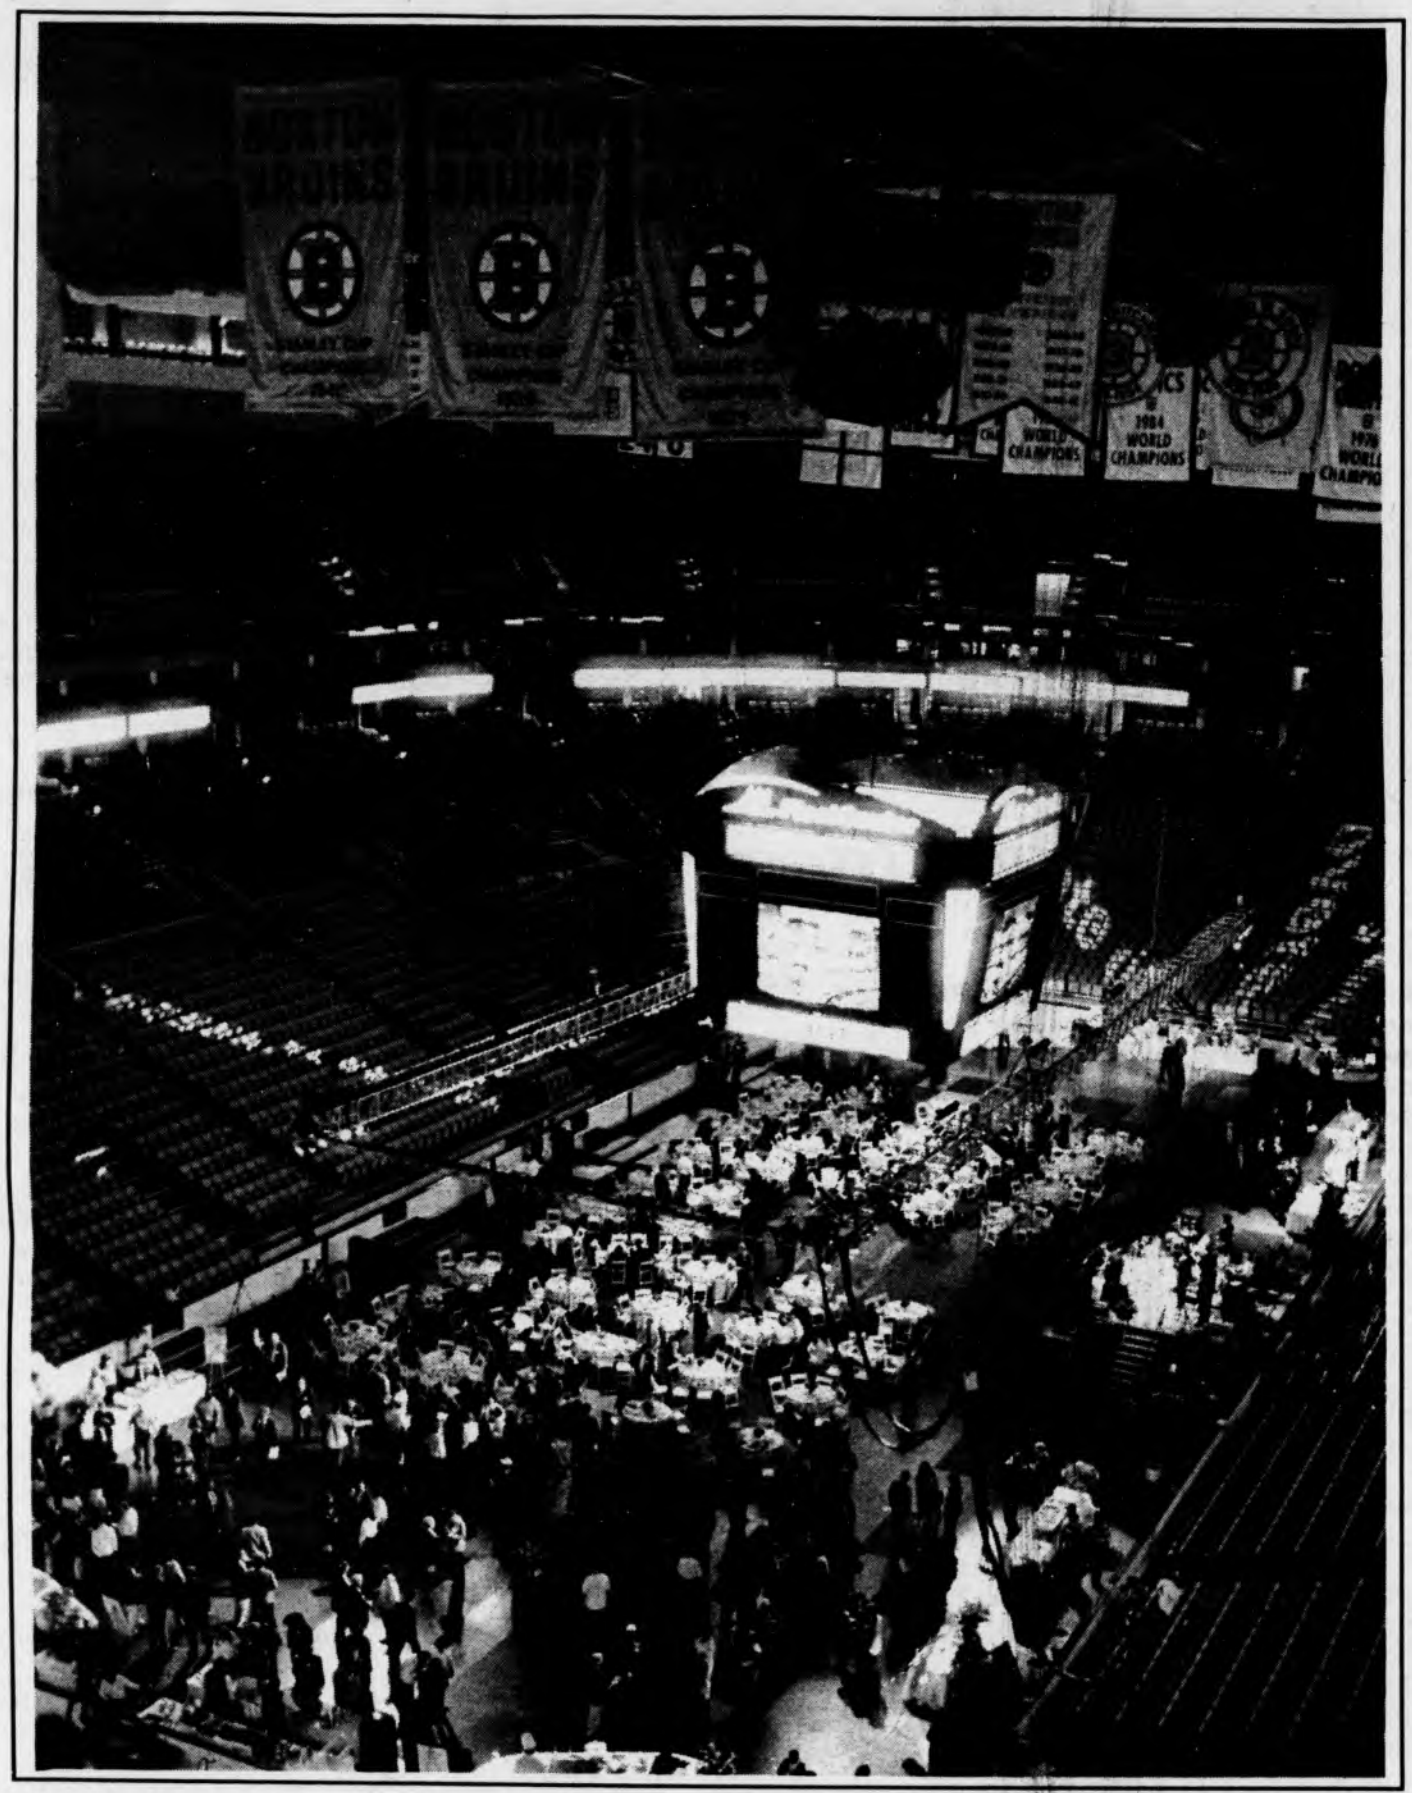
"The first proposal to build a new arena came in 1966," Moulter said. "And it took close to 30 years to finally make it a reality. We even had a therapist on staff to help everyone deal with the angst and aggravation over the last few months."

The FleetCenter has more comfortable seating, better food and better technology than the Boston Garden. The ticket prices are a bit higher but Delaware North, the team and arena owners, are hoping the fans will pay extra for more comfort.

Stevens would like to skate around the FleetCenter sometime this summer with his third Stanley Cup in his grasp.

"It's really nice to be home, nice to go into a new building, nice to get the chance to play in Boston," the all-star wing said. "But I want to win a Stanley Cup. I probably wouldn't have been that interested in a trade if it wasn't going to be into a situation where I thought I could win another one."

And starting next week, Stevens will get his chance.



The FleetCenter opened its doors Monday with a press preview night. Here is an overhead shot of the new home of the Bruins and Celtics. The arena officially opens next week.

• Marilyn Jackson named managing editor

Veteran South Shore newswoman Marilyn Jackson has been named managing editor of Mariner Community Newspapers. The appointment, effective Oct. 1, was made by David M. Levine, editor-in-chief of the group of 15 newspapers that covers the South Shore.

"This is a very exciting time for our company," Levine said. "Under the leadership of our publisher, Margaret Smoragiewicz, we have embarked on a major expansion of Mariner Newspapers, with new publications planned, such as the recent creation of a weekly for Duxbury, The Bottom Line. With Marilyn's appointment, we are building a newsroom management team ready to meet the challenges ahead."

Levine said that Jackson will be responsible for day-to-day newsroom operations, special projects and will have direct responsiblity for running the Marshfield Mariner, flagship newspaper of Mariner Community Newspapers.

Jackson, a lifelong South Shore resident, began her newspaper career at The Patriot Ledger, where she was a general assignment reporter, court reporter and community editor.

She joined Mariner Newspapers in 1985, serving at various times as Marshfield editor and editor of the Scituate Mariner and South Shore Business Journal.

A graduate of Katharine Gibbs School, she was an intern at The Patriot Ledger while attending Boston University. She also attended Massachusetts College of Art.

An award-winning journalist, she is a member of Investigative Reporters and Editors Inc.

Dove pins to go on sale

Dove pins representing the traditional symbol of peace, designed by Mary Jane Doubleday, will go on sale at King Jewelers of Cohasset beginning Oct. 13 to raise funds for DOVE (Domestic Violence Ended), a non-profit agency providing help for abused women and children in Greater Boston and on the South Shore. The launch of the sale of the pins was timed to coincide with Domestic Violence Awareness Month, which is October.

The pin is a faithful representation of the DOVE logo that Doubleday designed exclusively for King Jewelers. Valerie King and her partner, Toni Lyn, who acts as a sales representative for designer jewelry, came up with the idea of the pins, which will be available in silver, gold and a limited edition of gold with a diamond inset. They will retail for between $68 and $450, with proceeds benefitting DOVE, accompanied by an additional donation made by Doubleday Designs and Toni Lyn & Co.

DOVE is based in Quincy and has been helping abused families for 17 years. The organization provides free shelter, advice and counseling services to women and children in need.

King said she became aware of DOVE through a coworker, whose mother works at the shelter. "I felt that businesses could reach out to the communities they lived and prospered in and give something back."

For the past two years, King Jewelers has run fundraisers for DOVE on Mother's Day, raising $1,400 in 1994 and $1,840 in 1995.

Business planning is workshop topic

A workshop on Business Continuation Planning, presented through the South Shore Women's Business Network, will be held Thursday, Oct. 12 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. at the Weymouth Savings Bank, Weymouth Landing. Various aspects of estate planning relating to a closely held business will be discussed.

Former Hingham resident Karen Watson, a financial planner, and attorney Carolyn Kelliher, currently of Hingham, will be guest speakers.

Unemployment rate drops

In terms of job-related statistics, August was an encouraging month for Massachusetts since its unemployment rate was 5.1 percent, which marked a decrease from the July rate of 5.8 percent.

The overall August work numbers were broken down as follows: 3,173,400 (labor force); 3,012,200 (employment); and 161,100 (unemployment).

Other good news, according to the state Department of Employment and Training, was that in comparison to these new statistics, the statewide jobless rate had been 5.6 percent a year ago.

In Norfolk County, the August unemployment rate was 4.3 percent (326,202 employed and 14,744 unemployed.) This represented a decrease from the July rate of 4.8 percent and the 4.9 rate of a year ago.

In Plymouth County, the August unemployment rate was 5.7 percent (216,963 employed and 13,035 unemployed.) This represented a decrease from the July rate of 6.4 percent and the 6.0 percent rate of a year ago.

In Cohasset, the August unemployment rate was 2.3 percent (3,816 employed and 88 unemployed.) A month earlier, the jobless rate had been 2.6 percent. A year ago, it was 3.9 percent.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

A border of salmon and white impatiens line the front walk leading to the front door of the home of Ronald and Patricia Massa at 140 North Main Street. Sunlight filtering through the leaves of nearby maple trees dapple the flower boxes filled with pink New Guinea Impatiens. Fast-approaching fall is evident to all in the angle of the afternoon sunlight.

PAC meeting set for Oct. 3

The Parents' Advisory Council will hold its regular monthly meeting Tuesday, Oct. 3, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill teachers' lounge. Discussion will center on students' needs at the beginning of a school year. All parents and guardians of students receiving services under Chapter 766 are invited to attend. For further information call Ann Whiteley at 383-9310 or Jo Ann Pilczak at 383-0268.

An invitation to join DHMPA

The Deer Hill Music Parents' Association has extended an invitation to all new fourth-grade band and chorus parents to join the organization, which had more than 75 members last year.

Sign-up sheets will be available at Open House Oct. 6. To promote the spirit of the school band and chorus, decals will be on sale for $2 that night. For further information call Jane Henderson at 383-6535.

PSO help is sought

This school year the P.S.O. will sponsor many different fundraising events. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events, or help out in any manner, please call one of the fundraising committee members, Tomi Bukowski, 383-6771, Ed Connolly, 383-1248 or Ellen Sanchez, 383-6911.

PSO calendars are here

PSO calendars have been mailed to the homes of all Cohasset students. Any family who has not received a calender or knows of a family new to Cohasset who has not received one, is asked to contact Sarah Markert at 383-6124. The calendar lists school and community events and provides important school information.

Author looks for clue to link two Cohassets

By KLANCY DE NEVERS
Special to the Mariner

Long curious about the place that gave Cohassett Beach, Washington, its name, I had the opportunity last Sunday (Sept. 24) to visit the village of Cohasset on Massachusetts' South Shore.

Both Cohassets are summer resort areas 25 miles from their "towns" – Cohasset from Boston, Cohassett Beach from Aberdeen, Washington, a small lumber town on Grays Harbor in western Washington.

A brisk breeze blew in from the North Atlantic as I walked around the town center, admiring tall-steepled churches, Cape Cod houses, a pond in the grassy common – in short, a New England village quite different from the summer compound of my childhood in Washington.

KLANCY DE NEVERS
Looking for link

My interest in Cohasset arises from my role as co-editor of "Cohassett Beach Chronicles: World War II in the Pacific Northwest," by Kathy Hogan, which is a collection of newspaper columns written by Hogan during the war. The columns were published under the title, "The Kitchen Critic," in the Grays Harbor Post, a weekly paper edited by my father.

I felt like a detective as I made my hurried visit to Cohasset, looking desperately for hints of a link with Cohassett Beach, Washington. The sea air smelled right, but it felt strange to ha[illegible] sea on my east.

Massach[illegible] as settled two centuries before the first settlers arrived on the Northwest coast. Did some forgotten Eastern fisherman or hotel keeper tire of codfish and move to the westernmost edge of the continent, where I grew up?

The many similarities between the two locales shouldn't be listed until I've paid tribute to the obvious differences. The site of Cohasset, Mass. was created by glaciers. Granite out-croppings edge plains and a small sheltered harbor that once was home port for large mackerel schooners. Churches and homes are well-aged, possibly dating back several hundred years. Large mansions or estates are hidden away in hardwood forests – one area is called the Gold Coast.

Cohassett Beach is a set of sand dunes like the outer Cape and has always been a rural enclave, a recent upstart on a Massachusetts time line. It originated as a summer resort on the sandy peninsula at the south shore of Grays Harbor on the Washington coast. Turn-of-the-century visitors arrived by stern wheeler at the Westport dock, then took a carriage through pine forests to the Essex hotel or to Mrs. Wood's Pinehurst Hotel. Fishing early became an important industry, with fishermen going over the bar in gull-like troller-boats to bring home quantities of

Hagerty plans pondered

The fate of the Victorian house on the town-owned Hagerty parcel on Parker Avenue is central to discussions about plans for the property.

Public forum on parcel is Oct. 11

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The focus of last week's Hagerty committee meeting was discussion of two differing proposals for the town-owned Victorian house, which is the former Cohasset Colonials' showroom.

But the of the committee responsible for presenting the board of selectmen with a viable plan for the future use of the two-acre harbor-front site almost didn't get started.

In a downstairs meeting room at Cohasset town hall, three board members and an equal number of residents sat and waited. The evening's meeting had been posted for this particular room, and the half dozen individuals wondered aloud where everyone else was. While at the same time, upstairs in the regular room used for the committee's meetings, the remaining board members and residents were doing likewise.

With more than one Hagerty board member rhetorically asking if there was a purpose to their continued meeting, once all board members and residents were together, committee chairman Al Moore acknowledged: "This is a difficult project and nobody ever said anything but."

Harbor dredging project hits troubled waters

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

As Cohasset's harbor continues to fill in – making it rough sailing for both commercial and recreational boaters – the town's dredging picture just became murkier.

The funding that will be needed to cover a majority of the dredging work in the federal channel is not yet in place and new and on-going environmental concerns could increase both the delay and the cost of the project.

With the hope that the harbor could be dredged this winter or early in the spring of 1996, Selectman Peter Pratt spent a good part of the summer working with local and federal legislators to make sure project scheduling and financing are both in line.

While state and local funding are in place, the federal money which will cover the lion's share of the dredging costs are not. According to Pratt, the state and town portions of the the harbor in need of dredging amount to about 7,000 cubic yards or material, while the federal channel makes up between 65,000 and 90,000 cubic yards.

Federal budgeting for the work hinges on redefining the area of federal jurisdiction which must be accomplished through an act of Congress, Pratt said.

Giant strides were made in this complicated legislative process last summer when Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry filed legislation in the Senate on redefining the federal lines. U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds, a Cohasset native, filed the same bill in the House.

After meeting with Kerry's staff last week, Pratt said he was assured that the "Cohasset Harbor Navigation Bill" will be a rider (attached to) on the Coast Guard Authorization Bill which is now in the Senate's Committee on Commerce. Pratt hopes by attaching the Cohasset dredging project to the Coast Guard bill, the process will be expedited. Pratt said he'd like to see the bill go before

Cohasset's Week

Historic common is eligible

The Massachusetts Historical Commission informed selectmen this week that the Cohasset Common Historic District has been voted eligible for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places by the Massachusetts Historical Commission.

By law, a property is afforded protection from adverse effect caused by federally funded, licensed or assisted projects when it has been voted eligible for inclusion in the National Register. The nomination form will now be submitted to the National Register Office, National Park Service, Washington, D.C. for final review.

According to the state historical commission, if the National Register Office lists the property or determines is eligible for listing in the National Register if will be automatically included in he Massachusetts State Register of Historic Places. The state register parallels the National Register in providing protection from state actions.

Red Lion Inn update noted

Philip Smith, manager and operator of the bar at the Red Lion Inn notified selectmen Sept. 22 that there has been no change in ownership of the corporation nor are there any pending foreclosure and/or bankruptcy proceedings.

"The corporation is currently being operated under the control of a receiver" (Argus Management Corp.), Smith said.

He said if there were any changes on the ownership and/or proceedings affecting the status of the liquor license, the town would be informed.

Doane Street signs coming

On the recommendation of Safety Officer Cliff Jones, selectmen approved placing "no parking 9:30 p.m. to 6 a.m. sings at the end of Doane Street – the same as those recently posted on Beechwood Street.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said residents at end of Doane Street had been contacted and informed about the parking ban.

The action was prompted by a letter from William F. Preissel, Jr., 150 Doane Street (the last house before the back entrance to Wompatuck State Park).

Preissel said at night young people in motor vehicles park on the gravel area outside this entrance and hang out "drinking alcoholic beverages and creating a disturbance to me and my family."

He also complained that the teenagers have begun "spinning their vehicles' tires, peeling out, making an extremely noisy racket, and strewing gravel all over the paved roadway, specifically in front of my driveway and lawn."

Selectmen said they would also investigate placing a trash barrel outside the entrance to the park once they determine if the tree and park department can take responsibility for emptying it.

Preissel said over this eight years on Doane Street he has had to "police the gravel area adjacent to the park of papers, bags, beer cans, condoms and other debris on an almost daily basis."

Zoning bylaws ready

The Cohasset zoning bylaws have been revised and reprinted. They are for sale in the Building Inspector's Office and the Planning Board Office for $10.

Caring for someone is knowing when to ask for help.

When certain daily routines become difficult for an older person to handle alone — dressing, bathing, preparing a meal or keeping track of medications — that's when it's time to consider assisted living.

At Allerton House, the South Shore's premier assisted living community, our residents and their families know that help is there if they need it, 24 hours a day. Allerton House provides pleasant, private apartments and a host of personal services that emphasize independence, dignity and well being.

Comforting, too, is knowing that Allerton House is managed by Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, a trusted name in senior living services for over 45 years.

Harbor dredging project hits troubled waters

the House by the middle of November pass there before Congress adjourns for the holidays.

Redefining the line of federal jurisdiction is an extremely important piece in the dredging puzzle, said Pratt "because the budget setting for the harbor can't go on without it."

In the meantime, the Army Corps of Engineers has told the town this week that the Cohasset Navigation Project will not be funded through the standard federal budgetary process until Oct. 1 1997 (federal fiscal year 1998).

Studds went on record early informing the Army Corps that this delay is not tolerable, Pratt said.

Studds and the rest of the federal delegation will work on speeding the federal funds through budgetary re-programming – meaning that money earmarked for another federal navigation project in the region, not as far along as Cohasset's and with little chance of being completed within this fiscal year, will be shifted to fund Cohasset's project, Pratt said.

If budgetary re-programming is not possible, Pratt said the town will most likely have to go back to the state by Christmas time to ask for more money to pay for some of the federal channel work.

"It seems every time we make substantial progress in one area or another, something else comes up," he said.

In addition to federal funding delays, two other issues – both environmental in nature – have come up recently with the potential to increase the delay and the cost of this project, Pratt said.

One is the eight acres of eel grass beds that lie in the federal channel and have environmentalists within the Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Marine Fisheries Service concerned. The eel grass beds, which Pratt said are increasingly regarded as an important marine and environmental resource, serve as a spawning ground for several species of fish. Pratt said the town has voluntarily undertaken the eel grass studies conducted by its engineering firm Nucci Vine Associates.

The second environmental problem facing the town concerns bottom samplings taken earlier this summer.

According to Pratt, a recent determination from the army requires that three areas in the harbor – considered hot spots – be re-sampled. Bottom sampling from areas off Lawrence Wharf, the Parker Avenue Boat Ramp and off the Roy estate at Cox's Point all show traces of toxic chemicals, the first area being the most contaminated of the three.

If the re-sampling shows the same level of toxicity, silt material from these areas will not be suitable for ocean dumping and will have to be deposited inland in an approved land-fill site, greatly increasing the cost of this portion of the project. Pratt said while ocean dumping costs between $10 and $13 per square yard, landfilling of the material can cost up to $100 per cubic yard.

Current dredging estimates for the entire project are now at about $1.6 million with the state contributing $300,000, the town $70,000 and the federal government responsible for about $1.2 million. Pratt said Cohasset has already chipped in about $40,000 for engineering costs much of it to help expedite the federal project.

Pratt said ideally he would like to see both projects – the federal channel and the inner harbor dredging be coordinated so that all parties could save on set up and mobilization costs.

In the meantime, Pratt said the town is figuring a strategy of setting time tables for information the town has to submit to state and federal authorities, and putting its permit application process on the fast track. To demonstrate again the town's need for the project, Pratt noted that Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters is busy doing an inventory of boats and their drafts and noting the number of vessels that can't get out of the harbor during low tide.

"The Coast Guard no longer considers this a safe harbor, not to mention the economic impacts to the fishing fleet. Any moderate level storm could close the harbor off entirely," Pratt said.

"There is no way Cohasset can wait any longer."

Sohier Street access is topic

Asking for comments from town boards, committees and departments by Oct. 12, the planning board will hold at hearing on Oct. 18 to review plans to construct a driveway into Cohasset Plaza off the north part Sohier Street.

But selectmen are split on the issue and because they don't meet next week due to the Columbus Day holiday and therefore cannot meet the comment deadline — the board may opt to attend the hearing and make their feelings known at that time.

At their meeting this week, selectmen Jane Goedecke and Merle Brown appeared to support the concept of a Sohier Street entrance to the plaza which houses Stop & Shop.

But the other selectmen are concerned that the curb cut would create a more dangerous traffic situation on that part of Sohier Street.

"The key issue here is site lines," Selectman Peter Pratt said.

Pratt, Michael Sullivan and Martha Gjesteby said cars which often take the corner from 3A onto Sohier Street at a good clip would not be ready to stop for traffic making a left turn into the plaza.

The board will ask the safety officer to look at the situation and mentioned the possibility of a traffic light at 3A & Sohier or squaring off the intersection as solutions.

The driveway would provide direct access to Sohier Street which will allow traffic to avoid 3A altogether, according to plans from Cohasset Development Trust, the plaza's parent company.

"The purpose of this driveway is primarily to facilitate site access for Cohasset Plaza patrons who use Sohier Street to access the site. No new traffic is expected to be generated by the creation of this driveway," the plans state.

The plans conclude that traffic volumes would be reduced on Chief Justice Cushing Highway if the new driveway is constructed and that slightly better intersection operating conditions will result.

But Conservation Commissioner Tom Callahan, who attended the selectmen's meeting, will ask developer Donald Staszko for a full picture of his plans for the property which may include a third building at the site.

Hagerty plans are pondered

Adding that he felt the beauty of this particular committee was in the way it did a diverse job with complete objectivity, Moore cautioned that the project was becoming "a camel created by a committee," and that he didn't want the project to drag on for another six months.

Kevin Ulmer, who holds a doctorate in biological oceanography, would like the house to be used for the scientific education of area school students. During a detailed discourse, Ulmer stated that ultimately he envisions research and instructional facilities which would include a laboratory, aquarium and library for the site.

"It would be neat if you could take the house and staff it, with men in white lab coats but with kids," he reasoned.

A high profile project such as this would garner grant funds, Ulmer maintained. Though he stressed that the proportion of house to be used would be dependent upon such grants. When asked if his proposal would conflict with the present Cohasset Maritime Institute, a non-profit organization headed by Cohasset teacher Jack Buckley, Ulmer offered, "The two plans could be very complimentary."

Under Ulmer's plan, the house would be initially leased from the town for $1 per year, but with a rent structure designed for the future built into the agreement.

In contrast, Paul Trendowicz, owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina, which is across the street from the showroom, took only a bare minimum of the committee's time. He reiterated his proposal to purchase the house and use it as a ship's chandlery and office.

Moore stated, "A sale of the property would be a major problem unto itself. A very complex situation."

Expressing that there would be zoning problems in a commercial venture, he felt that leasing the house, as opposed to selling it, was preferable.

Resident Wayne Sawchuk disagreed. He does not want to give the house over to a non-profit organization because he feels that doing so would change the scope of the area. Instead, he would rather the town coffers reap any benefits of a refurbished property.

"Bring the house back to a single-family home like it was 50, 60 years ago. Put it back on the tax rolls," he said.

In a related matter, the committee briefly discussed the public parking situation at the boat ramp area of the property. While acknowledging that parking is essential to any plans for the area, Moore conceded, "There is a fair sentiment in this group that there should be no parking at all in this area. The land should be kept as open as possible."

Concluding, Moore stated that his committee members were to once again put forth their recommendations to the board of selectmen at a public meeting to be held on Wednesday, Oct. 11, at 7:30 p.m. at the Lighthouse Keeper's house on Government Island.

The Hagerty Committee understands that rather tenuous position.

"The selectmen have asked us to do something. We've done it and now they want us to do it again, only this time they want to get involved. If the selectmen want to take this whole project on and disband this group, so be it. But let's give it one more public meeting and beat this thing to death," Moore said.

Author looks for clue to link Cohassets on both coasts salmon, crab or sardines. Seagoing schooners sailed out of the harbor, their decks stacked high with Douglas fir, spruce and cedar lumber.

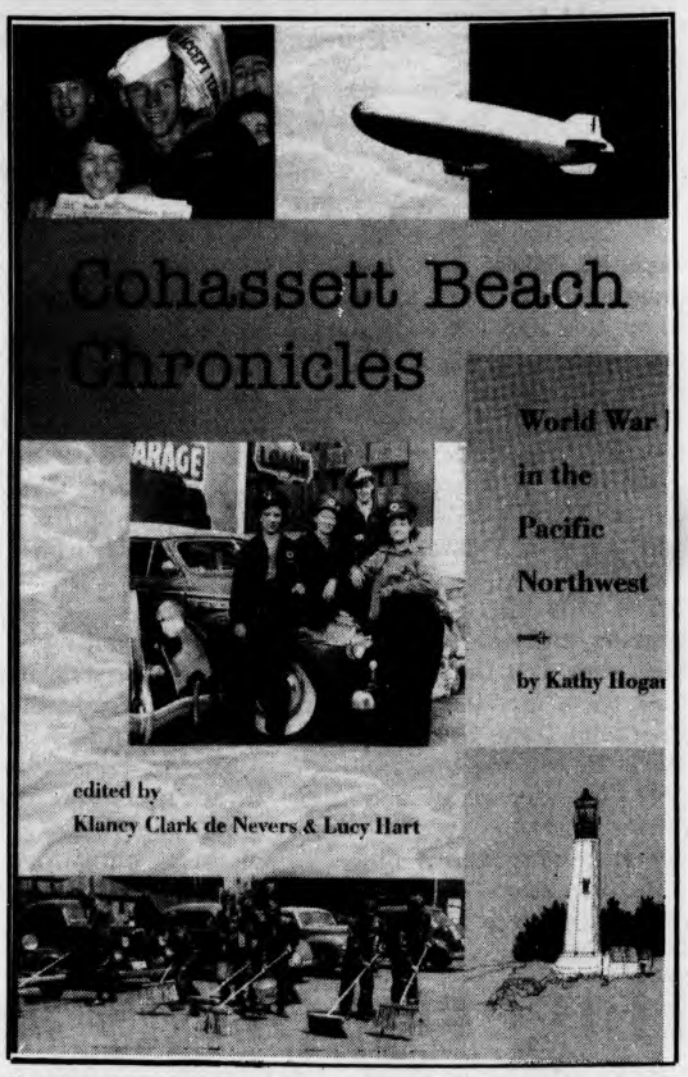
"Cohassett Beach Chronicles" contains accounts of wartime shortages and trials that will ring true to anyone who lived through the war years, on either coast. The similarities between the coastal areas of the two Cohassets will also resonate for Massachusetts readers of "Cohassett Beach Chronicles." Kathy Hogan recounts tales of fishermen losing boats, Coast Guardsmen saving lives, the sea wreaking havoc with jetties and shoreline. She walks through forest of pine and maples, visits nearby cranberry growers, picks berries along roadsides, hears neighbors hunt ducks in the salt marshes. She watches the seasons' effects on wild roses, beach grass (which legend says came from Cohasset, Mass. and which botanists identify as an East Coast species), bracken ferns, honeysuckle.

Cohassett Beach has no equivalent of Brass Button Avenue, but Kathy Hogan was a proud owner of an abstract painting by her nephew, artist Robert Motherwell, who visited her area and later lived on Cape Cod. Kathy's sister, Meg Motherwell, remodeled a barn across the road from Kathy Hogan's cottage at Cohassett Beach. For a time "The Barn" was the home of the Driftwood Players, a summer theatric group; my family spent seven summers in the barn in the '50s.

I noted in the Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum that the National Guard (17th Co., 26th Infantry) was activated to defend the Massachusetts coastline during World War II. Cohassett Beach was defended by the 44th Division of the New York and New Jersey National Guard, who were major characters in Hogan's columns. A local Cohasset business, Hagerty Co., built radar domes and life rafts for US Navy P.T. (patrol torpedo) boats using finely shaped plywood. During the same years, shipyards in Aberdeen, Washington, built Navy P.T. boats using locally developed marine plywood.

I haven't identified the exact link between our two Cohassets. Kathy Hogan was a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, but her parents had moved to western Washington from Wisconsin. This winter I hope to search the Cohassett Beach land titles for possible pioneers from Massachusetts.

Here's a challenge for Mariner readers. Do you know of anyone from Cohasset who visited or moved to western Washington in the 1880s or 1890s? Several Massachusetts names were planted on the Washington coast in that era: Cohasset, Westport, Westhaven. Please contact me in care of this newspaper if you have ideas.



"Cohassett Beach Chronicles" is published by Oregon State University Press and sells for $25.95.

Special status denied to board

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

With Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown casting the lone dissenting vote, selectmen decided not to designate conservation commission members as "special municipal employees" this week.

The decision followed a lengthy debate over the issue and prompted selectmen to plan to look at all town boards or posts that currently have the designation.

The issue arose because two conservation commission members may have the appearance of a conflict, selectmen said.

State Ethics Commission guidelines allow individual town governments to decide what positions or jobs constitute receiving the "special" classification.

And although special municipal employees are not exempt from the conflict-of-interest law, according the the state, there is more leeway.

Conservation Commission Chairman Thomas Callahan, an attorney, has represented the owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina, which abuts the town-owned Hagerty parcel, before selectmen. And his fellow commissioner Veneta Roebuck's daughter is employed by an engineering company that has done business with the town.

Boards in town that currently have special municipal employee status are the advisory committee, water commission, board of assessors, and recreation commission.

"Special" classification would allow Callahan to represent the Marina before the planning board, for example, and it would relieve Roebuck from having to recuse herself from official discussion on matters that the company, her daughter is employed with, is involved in.

Expressing disappointment in the decision, Callahan made it clear that he has not represented the Marina on any issues that touched any that his board might be involved with.

Selectmen Peter Pratt and Martha Gjesteby suggested the board revisit the entire issue of special municipal employees.

Pierson celebrates anniversary

At 8 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 5, host Wigmore Pierson's guests on Pierson to Person on Channel 3 will be the Sparkie Miele Jazz Quartet playing blues and straight ahead jazz tunes. In addition to Miele as leader and multi-reed instrumentalist, the group includes Charles Harris, vocalist; Gary Johnson, drums; Al Wilson, keyboard; and Tod Baker, bass.

This program marks the program's eight years on the air since its first guest, William Weeks, Cohasset moderator, appeared with Pierson in early October 1987.

Birthday greetings to nonagenarian, Gert Young

Matthew Berger, son of Kathleen Berger, has joined the New York City advertising agency Ammirate & Puris/Lintas as a junior account executive. Kathleen says it was emotional to see Matthew leave Cohasset, but his family is thrilled for him.

Matt worked for us for several years, and he is a hard-working, wonderful young man. We, and all of his many friends, will miss him and wish him well!

Happy birthday greetings to to Sue Fone this week! She will surely have a grand one, as she will be moving into her new house in Maine! What will Cohasset do without the Fones? We cannot even think about it!

Ken and Sue promise to return often, which is great – but we foresee several phones with larger phone bills, all calls going to Maine! Perhaps it's a good time to invest in long-distance stocks?!

It sure is hard to imagine Cohasset without John Winters being a big part of it! As most know, Mr. Winters passed away last week – he as such a fine man, loved by all, and he will be missed. Our heartfelt sympathies go to his family.

Have been asked to remind you that the Cohasset Food Pantry is in need of food items. I won't go through the whole list, but suffice it to say that all staples are always welcome (and needed).

We certainly hope that Grace Silvia is feeling better as she reads this. She recently underwent surgery at the Deaconess Hospital. It would be really nice if you sent her a note or card. She loves to get them.

All of you tap dancers have a treat in store for you, thanks to the South Shore Community Center's fundraiser. Dancers from several area schools as well as amateur theater groups will be there, and the dancers will donate $10 each to dance and receive instruction from four of the finest dance teachers on the South Shore. It will be held Oct. 8 from 2 to 5 p.m. Call the South Shore Community Center for more details at 383-0088.

We want to extend special birthday greetings to Gert Young, who will be 93 on Oct. 29. Mrs. Young must have a special secret on staying youthful – she hasn't changed in all the years we have known her! Here's to many more wonderful years!

Have you been up to see the new location of the Cohasset Consignment Shop? What a great job Andi Merrill and her crew have done with displays, and items are so easy to find with all the space they have! It is located next to BayBank. By the way, Andy is looking for your help. Anything you can do would be appreciated. Remember, the money they make benefits the Social Service League, which does great things.

Congratulations to Maura Dunn, who has joined Scudder, Stevehs & Clark in Boston as vice president in the information services and resources group.

Must remind you that this week is "Spirit Week" at Cohasset High School. The students (and teachers) have a great time dressing each day of the week in specified dress of the day. To top the week off, Saturday is a day full of sports events and the crowning of Homecoming king and queen. A dance will take place that night. Be sure to attend your favorite event!

We hear that Bruce Edmonds is on the mend and doing just fine, and that surely is good news. Knowing him, he will be outdoors raking those leaves any day now – he would never let a new knee slow him down!

Here's to a real speedy recovery, Bruce.

Hope that everyone saw Lawrence Figueiredo when he was here a few weeks ago. Lawrence moved to Florida several years ago, and returned for "a dear friend's wedding." All reports are that he looked great and is very happy in the sunny south.

He's a great guy – wish he could be here more often!

As most of you now, I just returned from Hawaii where we had a long visit with my sister, Ricki, and her family. It was beautiful, they were beautiful and everything there is super. Ricki and her children and

EDITORIAL

Let's hear it for Chris!

Let's hear it for Christopher Columbus!

The dogged old Genoese navigator, whose Discovery Day we celebrate next Monday, has been taking his lumps from the revisionists lately.

Berkeley, Calif., has renamed his day "Indigenous People's Day."

Chris didn't "discover" America, the rewriters of history say, he "encountered" it.

A parish council in Rock Island, Ill., has been urging the Knights of Columbus to change their name.

The actor Marlon Brando refused to appear in "Christopher Columbus: The Discovery," unless Chris was portrayed "as the true villain he was."

"Never again," brags Professor Marvin Lunenfeld of New York, "will we be able to see Columbus in a simple-minded way where we just give him a parade."

Well, here's one small vote for a parade.

Let's hear it for Christopher Columbus!

It's the Sox all the way

Forget the Curse of the Bambino! Forget the disappointments of '46, '67, '75 and '86. The Red Sox of 1995 will win the American League playoffs. They will win the World Series.

That's how much confidence Weymouth's Eddie Pellagrini has in the Ole Town Team.

Eddie carries gold card prediction credentials.

He wears a championship ring earned when the Red Sox captured the American League flag in 1946.

Eddie likes the looks of the '95 Sox.

"I've watched them all year," he says, and the current Fenway crew reminds the former utility infielder of the '46 Red Sox.

"We just couldn't lose – everything went our way."

He's seen that same pattern evolving all season long.

"They haven't done anything wrong all year," Eddie said.

"When they got Jose, I felt they couldn't lose," said Eddie, who loves to see the big slugger come to bat.

He rates Canseco's swing right up their with Darryl Strawberry, Reggie Jackson, Mickey Mantle and, of course, his own Hall of Fame teammate Ted Williams. "It's a gift from God."

Boston born and bred, Eddie began playing baseball on Dorchester sandlots when he was five. Fresh out of the Navy after World War II, he donned the uniform of his hometown Red Sox and broke into the majors with a bang during the magical summer of 1946.

Despite that spectacular homerun debut, Eddie's reputation rests on his adaptability on the infield and his skilled glove.

After his playing days ended in the Fifties, Eddie simply found himself another diamond. For more than 30 years, he called the shots as head coach of the Boston College Eagles.

"I guess I proved I like baseball," Eddie said. "As I told the Jesuits, I took a vow of poverty to coach the baseball team."

Nor did Eddie ever give up his strong ties with the Red Sox. He and '46 teammate Johnny Pesky, still a Sox coach, operated a real estate business in Weymouth Landing for years.

Eddie was on hand for the tribute this summer to the '46 Sox. And he'll be there for the Red Sox Hall of Fame induction in November.

Right now, though, Eddie's mind is on the Boston Red Sox of '95 and what's happening right now in another rabid baseball town half way across the country. He's not saying Cleveland will go down easily but he's firm in his conviction. This is Boston's year.

After the last at bat, after the last out is made, a World Series flag will fly over Fenway for the first time since 1918. Remember, Eddie told you so.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Studds supports Greenbush rail

(Editor's note: Congressman Gerry E. Studds sent the following Sept. 29 letter to Gov. Weld.)

Dear Governor Weld:

I am writing to urge you to direct the MBTA to begin restoration of commuter rail on the Greenbush corridor.

As you know, beginning with Gov. Frank Sargent in the mid-'70s, I have long advocated the return of rail service to the South Shore.I applaud the state's efforts to restore the Middleborough and Plymouth branches of the Old Colony line. In my view, however, our region's transportation needs will not be adequately addressed without the restoration of rail service on the Greenbush spur as well.

You are thoroughly familiar with the situation. The South Shore is the only area of metropolitan Boston that is not currently served by commuter rail. Residents of other parts of the state have long enjoyed the benefits of this service, while commuters from Weymouth and points south have been forced to struggle with the overburdened Southeast Expressway. Continued residential and commercial growth on the South Shore and the impending Central Artery Project will further exacerbate this problem. As a result, the region's productivity and economic growth are hindered, the transportation infrastructure is degraded at a rapid rate, and air quality is compromised.

It has always been my view that a comprehensive, multi-modal transportation system for the region is needed, an essential component of which is the restoration of passenger rail service along the Greenbush corridor. This option – in conjunction with other transportation systems such as ferry and bus service – will serve the greatest number of people and will draw the most riders from the region's traffic-choked arteries.

We are both fully aware that there is vocal opposition to this project, although I believe that the vast majority of South Shore residents want rail service restored. In any case, the merits of this proposal remain as strong as any public project with which I have been involved.

I am writing today because progress toward resolving this matter seems to be stalled. After many months of anticipation, there are now new obstacles and delays, for reasons that are not entirely clear. The result, I fear, is a new wave of public confusion and frustration.

With that in mind, I again strongly urge you to begin restoration of commuter rail service on the Greenbush line and remain committed to helping however I can.

Gerry E. Studds

Congressman Gerry E. Studds represents the Tenth District, Massachusetts.

Participation is appreciated

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset Council on Aging and the South Shore Community Center we would like to thank all those who participated in our Wellness day Sept. 23.

More than 25 interesting agencies participated in our first fair which enabled more than 125 people to receive a great deal of informative information on services. The clowns, pony rides and face painting added an enjoyable touch for the children.

A special thanks to all the volunteers, who gave so much time to make this event a huge success, thank you!

Advisory committee plows into town meeting warrant

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Although the advisory committee did take action Tuesday night on a number of the 53 articles on the Nov. 6 special town meeting warrant, several members of the group said they were frustrated by the lack of information provided by a number of town boards.

Roger Whitley, who was elected chairman replacing Nancy Adams Roth who was has left the committee, said anyone sponsoring an article must tell them how much projects are expected to cost, so the item could be discussed.

Sponsors should submit "more than just a vague sentence," he said. "They don't have the figures and they expect us to make a recommendation on it. We have no hope if people don't give us the figures."

Whitley also referred to criticism that the committee is too favorable to the school department.

"I've been told our committee is overloaded with people who are interested in the schools," he said, noting that several parents, a former school committee candidate and at least two people serving on education related committees are also on the advisory committee.

He said the new member, Carol Martin, will provide some balance. Martin was also elected clerk, the traditional burden for newcomers to the committee.

In addition, Whitley said he has asked town counsel Richard Henderson to consider whether he has a conflict of interest. Whitley's wife is a Cohasset school teacher.

Whitley has not yet received a response and stated that as chairman he will moderate the discussion but will refrain voting except to break a tie. He said Roth had followed the same procedure.

MONEY TO SPEND

Whitley explained that it is desirable to keep $250,000 in free cash in case of emergency.

However, they will need to spend $276,000 in free cash at next year's annual town meeting in order to avoid another Proposition 2 1/2 override next year.

He urged that after the appropriations at special town meeting, they should leave $500,000 in free cash to prepare for the upcoming town meeting.

Therefore, $450,000 in the free cash account could be spent at the Nov. 6 meeting since there is roughly $950,000 currently in free cash.

He said the town's financial situation has been helped slightly by an unexpected increase of $145,000 in revenue.

This includes $80,000 from the state education reform bill, which reimbursed the town at the rate of $75 per student in the Cohasset schools, up from the $25 per student rate last year. Whitley said the money can be earmarked for the general fund and used for anything.

In addition, the state released an additional $35,000 in lottery revenue to the town.

New growth yielded $30,000 more than had been estimated.

This money will be available at special town meeting, in addition to the $450,000 free cash.

Pointing out that money can be used up quickly, Whitley urged that careful computations be maintained while the town meeting articles are being considered.

"We've got to keep score with those figures," he said.

REPAIR OF HARBOR WALL

The committee also approved a reserve fund transfer of $3,178 so selectman can make repairs to the harbor wall.

Recent special and annual town meetings had earmarked a total of $39,522 for the repairs, but the lowest bid received was for $42,700, requiring the transfer. Whitley told the group that selectmen did not want to wait for town meeting since they hoped to get the work done while the weather is still good.

Special town meeting features 53 warrant articles

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

The most controversial town meeting article is likely to be a proposed noise by-law, article #40, sponsored by selectman Peter Pratt which would ban certain types of home improvement work using machines on Sunday and restrict such work to between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. on other days.

Lawn mowing and pruning would not be included in the regulations.

During a discussion Tuesday night, members of the advisory committee conceded that certain well off homeowners hire contractors and then leave town on trips, allowing the work to be undertaken at anytime of day or night, causing a nuisance to neighbors.

However, the committee members agreed that they will not be able to recommend the article, unless the ban on Sunday work is lifted. A regulation of Sunday hours, such as between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. would be acceptable, several members said.

They felt that people who can not afford contractors often rent machines on weekends and do the work themselves.

The committee will seek more information from selectmen regarding the issue.

Another potentially controversial item is a planning board proposal to ban fast food restaurants in Cohasset, article #49.

The advisory committee agreed to support the article on the town meeting floor.

The other town meeting articles include:

• #1 - calls for the appropriation of funds to reduce borrowing by the sewer commission. They want to borrow $400,000, but will receive $200,000 from free cash, borrowing the remainder.

• #2 - pays unpaid bills, including $2,363 in small bills and $1,652 to paid for from water revenue. The committee will recommend favorable passage.

• #3 - seeks $19,500 for the town to buy back an employee's unused sick leave.

• #4 - allows the assessors to hire a special appraiser to help defend lawsuits over tax bills for two properties, including that owned by the Roy family.

• #5 - will give the town clerk control of issuing beach stickers.

• #6 and #7 - involve computers. The advisory committee will discuss these with the town computer organization.

• #8 - is a bookkeeping article, rescinding authority granted at the May 2, 1988 town meeting to borrow $1.2 million, which was never done.

• #9 - asks $55,000 for a police and fire department computer. The committee needs more information.

• #10 - transfers $5,831.70 from the account for design of the public works garage to the design and construction account. The committee will recommend approval.

• #11, #12 and #13 - are from the sewer commission. The committee will discuss them with Edward "Ted" Guild of that group.

• #14 - relates to the clerical employee's contract.

• #15 - changes the name of the Council on Aging to the Elder Affairs Board. The advisory committee recommends approval.

• #16 and #17 - will be discussed with the conservation commission.

• #18 - changes Gregory Doyon's job title to "town administrator" from "executive secretary."

• #19 - provides for the redecoration of the town hall auditorium.

• #20 - outlines the animal control by-law.

• #21 -provides $3,000 to pay for frames for the photographs of Cohasset servicemen and women who died in World War II and the Korean and Vietnam conflicts. These photos will hang in town hall alongside those of the World War I casualties. Whitley explained that this money was voted nine years ago, but that the account was closed by mistake and the money returned to free cash. The committee will recommend approval.

• #22 - allocates $5,000 to design an air conditioning system for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. After some discussion, the committee agreed to meet with the library trustees. Last year, $4,400 was voted for fans and a room air conditioner at the library, but the air conditioner was ineffective and was bought by the library director. The fans were not purchased, so that money remains available. An affirmative vote would only spend $600. However, some members of the committee questioned whether air conditioning, estimated to cost $50,000 to install, is necessary.

• #23 - requires the town to spend $70,112 in tuition for the 15 Cohasset students attending the charter school in Hull. Whitley said the money could come out of the state education reform money the town will receive. This article won favorable recommendation from the advisory committee.

• #24 - seeks $8,200 for early retirement which the school department omitted from its budget. The committee endorsed the item.

• #25 - allocates $26,275 for a new grade one teacher, hired at the last minute to handle an expectedly large enrollment. The committee approved this article.

• #26 - the highway department seeks $12,800 for a stainless steel road spreader. A steel spreader would cost $8,500, but needs refurbishing every two years and is unlikely to last as long. The committee will seek more information.

• #27 - calls for $82,000 for an Elgin street sweeper. The committee will seek more information before making a recommendation.

• #28 - seeks $18,883.52 to rebuild the 1984 Elgin street sweeper in the event the previous article is defeated. The committee will seek more information.

• #29 - was presented by petition and mandates that no collective bargaining agreement will be considered by a town meeting unless it has been submitted to the advisory committee 30 days previously. Several committee members had signed the petition, which was based on a similar measure implemented in Braintree recently. The committee will refer the matter to town counsel.

• #30 - bans fishing in Straits Pond. Fish and eels eat midges, which have been a serious problem in recent years. Hull has a similar ban. The committee wants to discuss it with the conservation commission.

• #31 - requests $26,600 for a new truck cab and chassis for the tree and park department. The committee needs more information.

• #32 - is a request for a new safe in the treasurer's office. The committee members wondered what is wrong with the current safe.

• #33 - seeks $6,000 to upgrade computers at town hall. After some discussion, the advisory committee agreed to obtain more information.

• #34 - sets up a scholarship funded by Noel Ripley for two dyslexic Cohasset High School students. The committee will recommend approval and plans to thank Ripley on the town meeting floor.

• #35 - continues the study of the school buildings. The committee wants to meet with the school facilities committee.

• #36 - approves $19,777 from water revenue to be used for contracted expenses in that department.

• #37 - reduces to $40.00 from $50.00 the fee for back flow testing the water department charges commercial customers because the tests were found to only cost $40. The committee will recommend approval.

• #38 - allocates $30,000 to cover unemployment claims in the water department. This money might not all be spent.

• #39 - transfers to water department operating expenses $50,000 set aside by the department to pay off a loan, which does not need to paid off until next year. The committee approved.

• #40 - the noise by-law, which the committee is not currently recommending.

• #41 - a board of health sponsored article paying for the Cohasset Heights Landfill legal fees. The advisory committee wants more information.

• #42 - provides for testing of surface water in certain areas. The committee wants to meet with the board of health prior to making a recommendation.

• #43 - #46 - relate to the high school's Milliken Field. The committee wants to meet with Wayne Shawchuk of the field committee prior to making a recommendation.

• #47 - will provide $10,000 to fill the fuels tanks and install a new system of regulating the fuel usage at the new DPW garage. Employees will use two credit cards, one for each employee and one for each vehicle to better control fuel usage. The committee will recommend approval.

• #48 - allow the leasing of the North Cohasset Fire Station, 245 Hull St.

• #49 - a planning board article to prohibit fast food restaurants in Cohasset.

• #50 - changes the job classification of the highway surveyor to public works superintendent, in keeping with the new department of public works which will be implemented next year.

• #51 - dedicates several street intersections in town to various servicemen who died in the Korean Vietnam Wars.

• #52 - allocates $25,000 for a 400-meter track and field at the high school. The committee will meet with Wayne Shawchuk before making a recommendation.

• #53 - calls for the adoption of the harbor by-laws. The committee needs more information.

SAFE hosts Sunday landfill walk

To the Editor:

During the garbage era, the woods were full of litter and could smell so bad that walkers were driven out. Wetlands have been damaged, monitoring wells dot the woods, and thirsty garbage glutted sea gulls flew over to Lily Pond to wash down their meal. Needless to say, the Trustees of the Reservation are not anxious to see Cohasset Heights Limited expand their landfill and accept garbage again.

The proposed expansion would not only impact Trustee Land but would also be visible to people entering Cohasset on 3A. Please join SAFE and the Trustees for a walk in the Whitney & Thayer Woods to see our future view and to gain information on this project which will have a huge impact on Cohasset's environment.

Invite a friend or loved one to join you for a one-hour "Environmental Awareness Walk" at 1 p.m., this Sunday (Oct. 8) at the reservation off Rte. 3A.

SAFE and the Trustees of Reservations host this event to give citizens a look at Cohasset Heights Landfill which is currently hidden from public view but visible from the forest. This guided walk gives citizens the opportunity to view the current and future sites and to ask questions.

Please meet at 1 p.m. at the main entrance which is across from Stop & Shop.

Donald Staszko donates money for PALS program

Long-time Cohasset resident Donald Staszko donated $2,000 last week to help Cohasset police and schools expand a special health education program to assist local youths.

The program, called PALS for Wellness (Police Assisting Local Schools), is designed to influence in positive ways the attitudes and health behaviors of children from kindergarten to the eighth grade. In the early grades, the program will train children to protect themselves from all types of exploitation; in the middle grades, students will be taught to resolve conflicts, avoid violent behavior and say 'no' to alcohol, tobacco and drugs.

"We applaud Mr. Stasko's commitment to helping local children," Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "These are issues that must be solved at the community level and we need all the help we can get from committed residents like Mr. Staszko."

Staszko's donation will help the schools expand the program and will be supplemented by a $14,000 state grant.

"I am pleased to be part of this essential program," Staszko said. "We all need to work hard to reduce the risks and temptations facing children today.

"There is no greater priority in Cohasset than the needs of our youth. My family's commitment to helping young people in this town will continue."

PALS started two years ago in Cohasset on a limited basis with assistance from police officer Lisa Matos, who is trained in education and intervention. The expanded PALS' concept will increase Matos' time devoted to the program by 90 percent, and will pay for training, reinforcement and follow-up.

Noonan and Matos work closely with Mike Gill, health education coordinator, who oversees the program and solicits grants for it.

"This program is all about decreasing risks, and I am thankful for all contributions," Gill said.

For more information, call Gill at 383-6107 or Chief Noonan at 383-1055.

Have coffee with the authors

Buttonwood Books & Toys of Cohasset will present its fall "Coffee with the Authors" Tuesday, Oct. 17, from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.at the Chart House restaurant in Cohasset. Noted oceanographer and researcher Robert Ballard, mystery writer Kate Ross and novelist Elinor Lipman will be guests at the gathering.

In "Exploring the Lusitania," Ballard turns his attention to the mystery surrounding the wartime sinking of the great cruise ship.

"Whom the Gods Love," written by Boston lawyer Ross, is a period mystery following dashing Julian Kestrel, amateur sleuth, as he weaves through the London society of 1852.

In Lipman's humorous novel, "Isabel's Bed," Harriet Mahoney, would-be author, answers an ad for a ghostwriter and finds herself in an unusual Truro household.

These, and earlier books of all three authors, will be available for signing.

For reservations, call Buttonwood Books at 383-2665 by Oct. 13. Admission is $8 per person.

Dove pins go on sale to stop domestic violence

Available at King Jewelers

Dove pins representing the traditional symbol of peace, designed by Mary Jane Doubleday, will go on sale at King Jewelers of Cohasset beginning Oct. 13 to raise funds for DOVE (Domestic Violence Ended), a non-profit agency providing help for abused women and children in Greater Boston and on the South Shore. The launch of the sale of the pins was timed to coincide with Domestic Violence Awareness Month, which is October.

The pin is a faithful representation of the DOVE logo that Doubleday designed exclusively for King Jewelers. Valerie King and her partner, Toni Lyn, who acts as a sales representative for designer jewelry, came up with the idea of the pins, which will be available in silver, gold and a limited edition of gold with a diamond inset. They will retail for between $68 and $450, with proceeds benefitting DOVE, accompanied by an additional donation made by Doubleday Designs and Toni Lyn & Co.

DOVE is based in Quincy and has been helping abused families for 17 years. The organization provides free shelter, advice and counseling services to women and children in need.

King said she became aware of DOVE through a coworker, whose mother works at the shelter. "I felt that businesses could reach out to the communities they lived and prospered in and give something back."

For the past two years, King Jewelers has run fundraisers for DOVE on Mother's Day, raising $1,400 in 1994 and $1,840 in 1995.

Donald Staszko donates money for PALS program

Long-time Cohasset resident Donald Staszko donated $2,000 last week to help Cohasset police and schools expand a special health education program to assist local youths.

The program, called PALS for Wellness (Police Assisting Local Schools), is designed to influence in positive ways the attitudes and health behaviors of children from kindergarten to the eighth grade. In the early grades, the program will train children to protect themselves from all types of exploitation; in the middle grades, students will be taught to resolve conflicts, avoid violent behavior and say 'no' to alcohol, tobacco and drugs.

"We applaud Mr. Stasko's commitment to helping local children," Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "These are issues that must be solved at the community level and we need all the help we can get from committed residents like Mr. Staszko."

Staszko's donation will help the schools expand the program and will be supplemented by a $14,000 state grant.

"I am pleased to be part of this essential program," Staszko said. "We all need to work hard to reduce the risks and temptations facing children today.

"There is no greater priority in Cohasset than the needs of our youth. My family's commitment to helping young people in this town will continue."

PALS started two years ago in Cohasset on a limited basis with assistance from police officer Lisa Matos, who is trained in education and intervention. The expanded PALS' concept will increase Matos' time devoted to the program by 90 percent, and will pay for training, reinforcement and follow-up.

Noonan and Matos work closely with Mike Gill, health education coordinator, who oversees the program and solicits grants for it.

"This program is all about decreasing risks, and I am thankful for all contributions," Gill said.

For more information, call Gill at 383-6107 or Chief Noonan at 383-1055.

Have coffee with the authors

Buttonwood Books & Toys of Cohasset will present its fall "Coffee with the Authors" Tuesday, Oct. 17, from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.at the Chart House restaurant in Cohasset. Noted oceanographer and researcher Robert Ballard, mystery writer Kate Ross and novelist Elinor Lipman will be guests at the gathering.

In "Exploring the Lusitania," Ballard turns his attention to the mystery surrounding the wartime sinking of the great cruise ship.

"Whom the Gods Love," written by Boston lawyer Ross, is a period mystery following dashing Julian Kestrel, amateur sleuth, as he weaves through the London society of 1852.

In Lipman's humorous novel, "Isabel's Bed," Harriet Mahoney, would-be author, answers an ad for a ghostwriter and finds herself in an unusual Truro household.

These, and earlier books of all three authors, will be available for signing.

For reservations, call Buttonwood Books at 383-2665 by Oct. 13. Admission is $8 per person.

Dove pins go on sale to stop domestic violence

Available at King Jewelers

Dove pins representing the traditional symbol of peace, designed by Mary Jane Doubleday, will go on sale at King Jewelers of Cohasset beginning Oct. 13 to raise funds for DOVE (Domestic Violence Ended), a non-profit agency providing help for abused women and children in Greater Boston and on the South Shore. The launch of the sale of the pins was timed to coincide with Domestic Violence Awareness Month, which is October.

The pin is a faithful representation of the DOVE logo that Doubleday designed exclusively for King Jewelers. Valerie King and her partner, Toni Lyn, who acts as a sales representative for designer jewelry, came up with the idea of the pins, which will be available in silver, gold and a limited edition of gold with a diamond inset. They will retail for between $68 and $450, with proceeds benefitting DOVE, accompanied by an additional donation made by Doubleday Designs and Toni Lyn & Co.

DOVE is based in Quincy and has been helping abused families for 17 years. The organization provides free shelter, advice and counseling services to women and children in need.

King said she became aware of DOVE through a coworker, whose mother works at the shelter. "I felt that businesses could reach out to the communities they lived and prospered in and give something back."

For the past two years, King Jewelers has run fundraisers for DOVE on Mother's Day, raising $1,400 in 1994 and $1,840 in 1995.

Nantucket trip is planned

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset is sponsoring a field trip to Nantucket Thursday, Oct. 12. The $55 price includes lunch at the Jared Coffin House and a tour of the island. For further information call Monique Mascart, 383-2649 or Doris Flint, 383-0338.

'Creeps by Night' is offered

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is celebrating its 75th year with its presentation, "Creeps by Night," a combination Halloween play and haunted house at Cohasset Town Hall.

The event will be held Friday, Oct. 27, and Saturday, Oct. 28, at 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, Oct. 29, at 5 and 7 p.m. Tickets are $3.

Free flu clinics are offered

Two free flu clinics, sponsored by the Social service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health, will be held on Saturday, Oct. 21, and Saturday, Oct. 28, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to those 65 years and older and people with chronic heart and lung conditions. The vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician must evaluate the case. First-time vaccinations only will be available through the clinic.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is providing tetanus vaccine and urging all people who have not had a tetanus booster in the past 10 years to get one at the flu clinic.

All three of the vaccines can be administered simultaneously with little or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further information call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Tap dancers to perform

The largest group of tap dancers to assemble for a benefit on the South Shore will meet to "step, shuffle, step" at the South Shore Community Center Sunday, Oct. 8 from 2 to 5 p.m. The event, which is a fundraiser for the SSCC, is expected to attract dancers from several area schools as well as amateur theater groups such as Hingham Civic Music Theatre.

Master dance teachers Caroline Mahar, Sandra Combs, Lillian Fisher and Michelle Jablonski will each teach a 15-minute routine to beginner, intermediate and advanced groups of dancers. Mahar has been dancing and teaching for more than 50 years and is a well-known choreographer and dance event planner on the South Shore and in Florida, her winter home.

Mahar's daughter, Sandra Combs, literally followed in her mother's footsteps and is a respected member of the South Shore dance community in her own right. "This is nothing short of a tapomania. Everyone who owns a pair of tap shoes and can be there, will be there," Combs said.

Dancers will donate $10 to dance and receive instruction from the four instructors.

The SSCC houses a nursery school, a gymnastics program with an enrollment of 300, a three-lane bowling alley, the Council on Aging, "The Business Center" and "Women's Counsel." For further information about the fundraiser or the SSCC, call 383-0088 or 545-5462.

Costumes program Oct. 19

The Cohasset Historical Society's Costume Committee will present a special lecture and tea titled "Les Petit Dames de Mode" or "The Little Ladies of Fashion" by designer John R. Burbridge Oct. 19 at 1 p.m. The program will be held at the South Shore Art Center, Ripley Road. Reservations for this unusual event are available for $20 through the Historical Society, and should be made by Oct. 12.

Burbridge, retired senior designer for Priscilla of Boston, is honorary curator of the costume section of the Essex Institute in Salem, has designed and created a modern version of the French fashion dolls that were used by dress designers in the 18th and 19th centuries to display their wares in European courts and later to spread new fashions from France to the United States. The collection of 29" dolls is costumed in exquisite detail. Burbridge's fascinating and informative illustrated lecture provides a glimpse at the style and elegance of a vanished society that was "so grand."

"The wonderful variety of styles and silhouettes within that time span offer – from a designer's point of view – an irresistible challenge," Burbridge said. "Victorian and Edwardian ladies of wealth and position lived in an insulated world quite apart from the real one...surrounded by servants, one assured one's place in the order of things by means of an endless round of social calls and carriage drives, and by the arranging of teas, receptions and dinners."

They "kept an army of dressmakers, ladies' maids, milliners, purveyors of textiles, jewelers, makers of fans, gloves and parasols engaged in a whirlwind of activity to keep Madame and her daughters property turned out for all occasions in fashionable splendor," he said.

Call 383-1434 for more information.

Library story hours are noted

Registrations are currently being accepted for the Fall series of preschool story hours at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The series will begin on Oct. 5 and 6, on Thursday and Friday mornings at 10 a.m.

Bostwick makes title run

Skippers challenge league iron, despite 2-3 start

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset High's field hockey team has already accomplished one goal. For the first time in eight years the Skippers will be hosting a Homecoming Day game on Saturday, Oct. 7, beginning at 10 a.m. That's all well and nice, but there are other pinnacles to reach.

Debby Bostwick is making no bones about it. She would like to see a South Shore League championship field hockey banner hanging in Cohasset High's gymnasium by the end of the regular season.

High hopes? Maybe a pipe dream? Don't tell that to Bostwick.

"We have 10 seniors and three juniors," she said. "This is the team that's going to do it. We're trying to beat Hull and Hanover."

The head coach and the Skippers showed they are more than up to the task after handing the Indians a big scare in their 1-0 loss to the SSL power.

Hanover, which recently pelted out 16 shots against defending league champion Hull, was held to just seven shots on Cohasset as the Skippers' defense badgered head coach Judy Schneider's offensive players. Hanover finally broke the tie with seven minutes left to play when a corner shot from the left was deflected past netminder Gina Risano.

"There was no way Gina could have gotten to it," Bostwick said. "No way."

The loss was a big disappointment

Skippers overwhelmed by Scituate, 40-8

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers, who went into the game with a record of 1-1, hosted the Scituate Sailors Saturday and were overwhelmed by the larger Sailor squad, suffering a 40-8 loss to their neighboring rivals. Cohasset head coach Robert Knurek seemed guardedly optimistic going into the game.

Cohasset's Mike Dunphy (24) is brought down by a Hanover player during a recent South Shore League game. The Skippers had a tough time with Scituate last Saturday, falling 40-8.

If we play to our potential, and get a couple of breaks, we'll be in the ballgame," he said.

However, the Skippers' starting quarterback, senior Ben Keefe, sustained an injury to his thumb in last week's game against Hanover and was moved to tailback. Sophomore Pat Hurley started at quarterback, his first start ever and his first game calling the signals.

The Skippers elected to receive and sophomore Andy Hamilton returned the ball to his own 32 yardline before being taken down. The Skippers, as would be the story most of the afternoon, couldn't get rolling and were forced to punt. Senior Kevin Smith booted it high and long, giving speedy Pat Reynolds time to get downfield. Reynolds forced a fumble, but Scituate recovered, giving the Sailors one of the breaks that Knurek said Cohasset needed.

Andy Scanzilla and Steve Martin gained first downs for the Sailors and Anthony Caputo rumbled in from the 35, giving the visitors a 6-0 lead. Cohasset's defense stopped the two-point conversion attempt.

Once again the Skippers could not get their offense clicking and were forced to punt. A gang tackle by seniors Brian Sasso, Kevin Gentile, Ben Keefe and sophomore Jamie Buick brought up third and 11. Scituate was just too strong, however, and Caputo rolled into the endzone from 45 yards out, despite valiant efforts by Hamilton and Gentile.

Smith punted again on Cohasset's next possession and the Skippers' special team was called for a late hit. But, the Skippers forced a fumble and recovered.

Again, for the fourth time, Cohasset could not gain a first down and Smith punted. Keith Wright, a senior nose guard having a career game, dropped Caputo for a loss. The Skippers forced a third and 28, but Caputo ran for 25 and Tony Gianetti scram-

EXTRA POINTS/Dave McKee & Joe Reardon

A crystal ball predicts fall's future

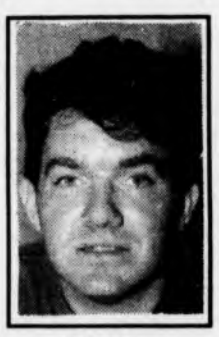
The fall high school sports season has been underway for a few weeks and there have been many surprises. The following is a quick wrap-up of some early highlights from soccer and football. And with the help of the Extra Points crystal ball, I'll offer some bold predictions for the future.

Boys soccer

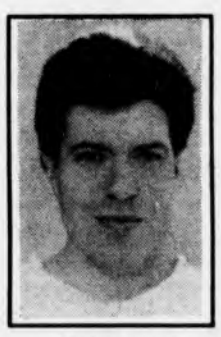
In the Atlantic Coast League, the Duxbury Green Dragons have been the top team but many think the '95 edition isn't as strong as last year's Division II state champion club. Oh well, you can't have it all. But you can add another league title to Duxbury's banner wall, according to the crystal ball. As for another state crown, the crystal ball is very hazy for the Green Dragons. Why does the word early round upset keep flashing?

Another ACL club, Hingham High, dropped a 1-0 decision to Duxbury already this season and with Mike Sheridan up front, they can score against anyone. Hingham should be right on Duxbury's heels and should go far in the Division II state tourney.

Marshfield and coach Dennis Lassige keep chugging along. The Rams dropped Hingham 1-0 last week (okay, the only goal was accidentally kicked in by a Hingham player but a win is a win) to start a three-game win streak and should finish in the money in the final ACL standings. The crystal ball says Marshfield's depth will be crucial in the Division I state tourney.



McKee



Reardon

In the South Shore League, defending champion Hanover and Norwell look to be battling for the league's top spot. Indian coach Jim Sylvia and Clipper coach John Osgood have been winning for many years and the '95 league crown could go all the way to the last game. Speed and skills are the name of the game for Hanover and Norwell.

The crystal ball sees both teams going very far in the state tourney. As for a state crown, the picture is hazy but things can change.

Right below those two are the Bostwick's squad making run at title

for the Skippers, but proved to the team it has moved up a notch and can go head-to-head with the best squads in the SSL.

"I'd say we dominated 85 percent of the game," Bostwick said. "At the end of the game the Hanover coach told the girls her team was lucky to win. It was the first time we ever outplayed them.

"I'm very pleased in what I see. I just need the dedication they have now. I'm proud of the way they stayed together."

Bostwick commended Hanover for its tough play on defense and the intensity level of the game. It was her squad, however, that applied the most pressure on Hanover's players. "We beat them to the ball several times," she said. "We'll definitely make the tournament."

Defensively, it was Emily Collins who shined the brightest. "She stood out in the key, little situations," Bostwick said.

Menis and Jo Hurley did the job in "keeping the middle of the field going," in a game that didn't see many shots, making every one bigger as the contest wore on.

Cohasset's Achilles heel this season has a tendency to play at the level of the opposition. That is a good trait to have when you're up against a Hanover, Hull or Norwell. But the reverse is also true. The Skippers can look like your everyday, run-of-the-mill squad against weaker teams.

"We kind of play to the level of the team we're playing and I'm trying to break them of that," Bostwick said.

The team has definitely improved from last season with more emphasis put on conditioning. Cohasset's stick skills are 90 percent more efficient than they were in '94 and the bench has risen to the occasion when called upon by Bostwick.

The Skippers, though, have had their dark moments.

Cohasset was caught looking in its 2-0 loss to Carver. Risano played a decent game in goal, as did the defense. Offensively, however, the Skippers did very little in the way of setting up scoring opportunities.

"We were stuck on our heels assuming we were going to take Carver," Bostwick said.

On the other extreme, Cohasset pushed defending SSL champs Hull to the limit in a 2-1 loss. The Skippers went out and surpassed the Pirates' level of play for an afternoon.

"We should have beat them," Bostwick said. "We played very well."

Chloe Chittick banged in Cohasset's lone goal when she took a corner shot from Nikki Peterson and fired the ball off the goaltender's path and in.

Bostwick was especially happy with the frantic surge Cohasset put on in the final 6 to 8 minutes. The Skippers got off 11 shots throughout the stretch, keeping the ball within 25 yards of Hull's net. It was the kind of effort Bostwick believes she'll see more of.

"We kind of let our guard down early in the first half," Bostwick said. "No one really stood out because it was a 110-percent team effort."

Cohasset came back to take a 1-0 lead on Menis' goal four minutes into the contest and went on to beat Notre Dame of Hingham in Tuesday's game. Menis' goal was assisted by Peterson.

Five minutes passed in the second half before Hingham was right back in the game with a goal and a 1-1 score. That's how the score remained until Katy Medinger found the back of the net on a corner shot with less than four minutes left in the game.

Because Bostwick noticed ND wasn't utilizing its wings, she "squeezed up the middle" with Jo Hurley and Alia Afsha. Menis moved back to defense and ND wasn't able to mount a serious challenge on Risano as a result.

Fullback Katie Buckley played a "great game on the the right side and sweeper Laura Risano also did her job in closing up ND's scoring chances.

Cohasset opened the season with a break-through game against Scituate. For the first time in as long as Bostwick can remember, the Skippers defeated the Sailors, 3-0. It was that game where Bostwick realized Cohasset had a special bunch of girls ready to do battle this year.

Lauren Dooley scored a pair of second half goals and added an assist, while Liz Good added the other Skipper tally. Afsha and Peterson recorded assists as Cohasset outshot the Sailors, 10-4.

Bledsoe is coming to Notre Dame, Oct. 30

New England Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe will be the special guest at the 10th annual Medallion Club Dinner to be held at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham on Monday, Oct. 30.

Past Medallion Club dinners have raised thousands of dollars for the outstanding athletic programs at the Academy.

The evening, which will begin with photographs and cocktails at 6 p.m. followed by dinner at 7 p.m., will feature Hingham's Will McDonough as master of ceremonies and Bledsoe as the guest speaker.

Bledsoe will join a long list of outstanding sports personalities who have come to NDA in the pas. including Bob Costas, Sean McDonough, Red Auerbach, Carl Yastremski, John Hannah and Tom Coughlin.

Tickets are $125 and include a photograph with Bledsoe, cocktails and dinner.

An added attraction this year will be the opportunity to have dinner with the guest of honor. This dream-come-true will go to highest bidder (exceeding $1,250) for a table of 10 which will include Bledsoe and his guest plus eight seats for your friends and family.

For more information contact NDA's Development Office at (617)-740-2136.

Youth coaches, we want to hear from you! Fax your team's results to Joe Reardon at (617) 837-4843.

Scituate High Sailors and the Abington Green Wave. The Sailors are still waiting for their offense to fully click but the crystal ball says the Sailors will be in the Division II state tourney for a second straight year under coach Larry Johnson.

As for the Green Wave, the crystal ball sees a state tourney berth but no league crown. The Green Wave has been a big early-season surprise and appear to be gathering momentum despite being hobbled by injuries to key players.

Girls soccer

In the ACL, the Marshfield High girls' soccer team has been playing great soccer and deserved a better fate against Duxbury in their early season match-up. The speedy Lady Rams led by Tyla Brennan and Alexa Ricardo will somehow find a way to win the ACL crown, according to the crystal ball. But the road to a second straight Division I state crown is very bumpy.

The crystal ball sees the Lady Rams in another overtime shoot-out with goalie Marcy Curtis coming up big after recovering from her early ankle injury.

Duxbury lost a lot of players to graduation but coach Pat Shea has found enough talent to already beat Marshfield this season. However, the crystal ball sees no ACL crown for Duxbury as Plymouth North, Whitman-Hanson, Rockland and Hingham grow stronger each game.

As for Hingham, the Harborwomen are a very tough team. And that starts at the top. Coach Kristin Parnell had her first child in late August but did not miss a single practice or game for the Harborwomen. (In fact, the day before she delivered, she ran in a four-mile road race. That's tough.) Kristina Sullivan has picked up her game a notch for the Harborwomen and the crystal ball sees another state tourney berth for Hingham.

In the South Shore League, the Hanover Indians and coach Garth Nelson keep on delivering like the mail.

It took overtime and a serious injury to a top player, to eliminate the Indians from the state tourney last year. But this year the crystal ball sees good things for the Indians in the post-season.

Norwell and Scituate are still searching for some offense but both teams are loaded with incredible all-around athletes.

Abington is 7-1 and features the SSL's leading scorer in Mardie DiCarlo. DiCarlo set a school record last week with a five-goal game in the Green Wave's victory over Scituate. The team's only loss came against Norwell, but head coach Jeff Kent is confident his squad has the all-around strength to challenge Hanover for the league crown.

Norwell has the twin terrors of Amy Barao (forward) and Meg Barao (goalie) who are both three-sport stars. Plus sweeper Sara Hurley, one of the state's best track athletes, is playing solidly as well. The crystal ball sees a state tourney berth for the Lady Clippers.

As for the Lady Sailors, Regen Steverman, a former state champ in the javelin, is going to start scoring goals in bunches, according to the crystal ball. .—David McKee and Joe Reardon bled for a first down. Cohasset's defense forced the third fumble of the afternoon, and this time Buick dove on it, giving the Skippers the ball at their own 38.

Skippers overwhelmed by Sailors

The Skippers used Smith's leg again, and this kick was well-covered by seniors Brian Riley and Reynolds. Keefe, Turbo and Hamilton stuffed Martin for a short gain, but Scituate again came up with a big play, as Caputo rambled in for a 57-yard touchdown run and his third TD of the afternoon and a 20-0 Sailors' score.

After the Sailors' William Cushing streaked for a TD and their defense stuffed Cohasset for a sixth time. Smith's punt was run back almost into the end zone, until Kevin Duffy stopped the carrier. Cushing and Turbo dove on it for Cohasset. That was all the scoring in the second quarter and the Skippers retreated to their halftime huddle with grim faces.

The second half was only slightly better for the Skippers. Turbo continued his great performance by recovering another fumble, but the Skippers couldn't do the job and the Sailors got the ball back. This time, however, the Skipper defense held. Turbo and Sasso chalked up a big sack and good defense by Keefe, junior Jared Batts and Riley finally stopped Scituate's offense. Hurley scrambled for a few and Emde sprinted for a first down, Cohasset's first of the afternoon.

But Scituate pounced on a fumble and Gianetti took a handoff into the end zone. The two-point conversion made it 34-0, Sailors.

Keefe somehow stayed on his feet to gain the first down after getting tripped up, but the Skippers punted away and Martin ran it back for a TD, making it 40-0. Cohasset was able to stop the point after and Scituate was done scoring for the afternoon.

One of Cohasset's bright spots was Emde's long sprint, 67 yards, all the way down to the Scituate four. Nate "Big Dog" Caldwell and Darryl Jones provided key blocks on the run and Cohasset was in the red zone. After Emde was brought down, he lay on the field for a few minutes with a leg injury, but was fine after the game. Keefe took the hand off from Hurley and pounded his way into the end zone and took the conversion attempt in as well, putting Cohasset on the board for the first time, and the score was 40-8.

Cohasset gained momentum, but too little, too late. They stuffed Scituate on the next possession and showed off a little offensive prowess. Hurley threw strikes to Reynolds on two straight square out patterns, but time ran down and the Skippers were handed their second loss of the season.

Riley put a positive spin on things after the game. "They came out strong; I felt that we played pretty well the first half," he said. "They had a few plays that broke loose, but the other times we stuffed them. It was just those few plays that went long. In the second half, we played a good game. We got on the board, guys got a chance to play and I think we picked up our intensity in the second half."

Knurek was not pleased after the game, but cited the game as better than last week's loss to Hanover.

"We improved as a team a notch from last week," he said. "Our goal was to stop their inside running game. We accomplished that, but when they got outside, their speed took over. Unlike last week, we played four quarters today. We turned it up this week. Our overall intensity was better.

"Individually, Pat Hurley played well, his first game at quarterback. Ben Keefe played very well at end and tailback, and Turbo did a good job at nose guard and tackle for us."

The Skippers face Norwell this Saturday at 1 p.m. at Milliken Field for the annual Homecoming Game.

"If we improve next week from this week as much as we did this week from last week, we'll be competitive," said Knurek.

Information highway coming to Cohasset Jr./Sr. High

Computers to access the Internet

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Cohasset Mariner

Many on-ramps to the information superhighway will soon be installed at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School.

Access to the Internet will be greatly increased at the school when it joins a computer network this fall, officials said.

The network will link computers at the school to those at 10 area high schools, according to a press release from the Hingham-based South Shore Educational Collaborative, which is setting up the network. All the computers in the network will have access to the Internet, the Collaborative said.

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart called the network "an important step forward."

Participating in the network will be high schools in Hingham, Cohasset, Quincy, North Quincy, Braintree, Weymouth, Hull, Scituate, Norwell, Marshfield, as well as South Shore High School, which is an alternative high school run by the South Shore Educational Collaborative.

About 40-45 computers at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School will be hooked up to the network and have access to the Internet, said Guido Risi, a staff assistant to Hart.

The network will also open the door to "increased communication and collaboration" among the 11 high schools, said Dr. John Kerrigan, chairman of the board of directors of the South Shore Educational Collaborative.

Teachers will be able to communicate with each other through the network and collaborate on teaching strategies, said Risi.

Students will be able to use the Internet to do research, he said.

The South Shore Educational Collaborative has received grants totaling $40,000 to pay for the network's equipment and the cost of installing it, said Dr. Michael Savage, executive director of the South Shore Educational Collaborative.

NYNEX donated $37,500 toward the network and BayBanks donated $2,500, officials said.

Each high school would pay $587 per month to use the network, Savage said. The monthly charge includes $400 per month for unlimited use of the Internet, and $187 in monthly telephone charges, he said.

"This is a very inexpensive way to provide Internet accessibility," Hart said.

The costs are cheaper for the 11-school network than if each school had done this on its own, Savage said.

The Internet charges "probably will become cheaper over time," he said.

At Cohasset Junior/Senior High School, access to the Internet will be available in the mathematics/science computer lab, in a mini mathematics computer lab, in several math classrooms, and in the school library, Risi said.

Currently, only two or three computers in the school provide access the Internet, he said. Until now, the Internet has been used at the school mostly by faculty, and occasionally by students, he said.

The $587 in monthly fees will pay for "unlimited E-mail access throughout the world," Roger McClentic, computer coordinator for the Hingham schools.

Foreign language students will be able to communicate with native speakers in other countries by E-mail and by joining "chat groups" on the Internet, he said.

"The greatest value" of the Internet, McClentic said, is that "students can communicate with other students, scientific agencies, government agencies, and schools and universities throughout the world and can have access to their resources."

While the issue of pornography on the Internet has caused controversy, Savage said measures will be taken to counteract the problem.

The Merrimack Education Center, which is providing the computer network with access to the Internet, will "filter out most of the pornography," he said.

There is software that blocks access to pornographically oriented discussion groups on the Internet, McClentic said.

A policy statement will also be distributed to parents informing them that their children could lose access privileges to the Internet if they access pornography, Savage said. Parents would have to sign and return the statements, he said.

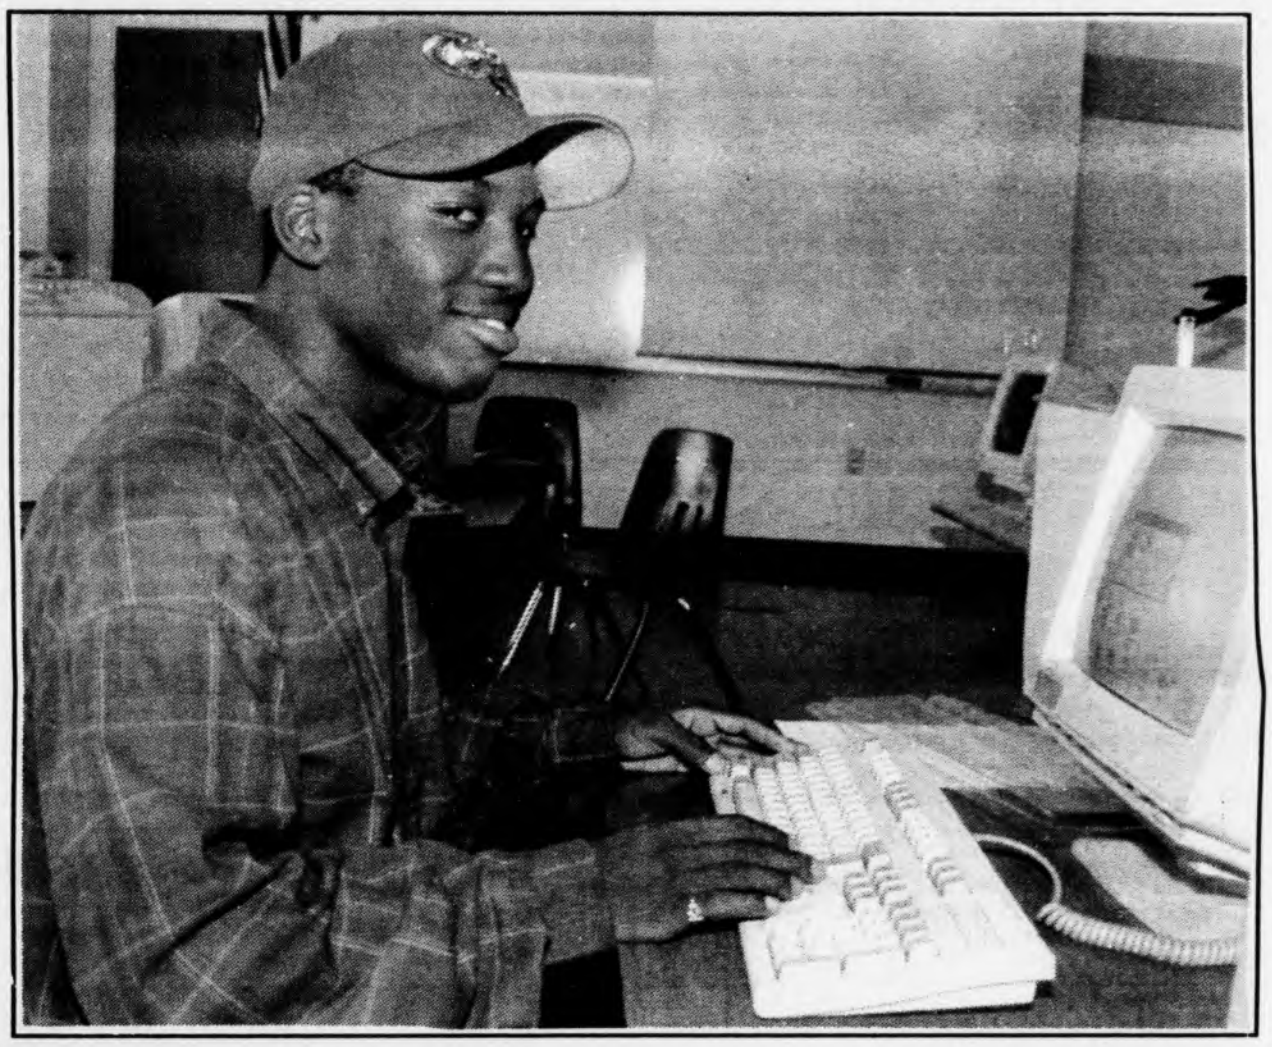
In addition, the computer terminals would be supervised by school staff, he said.

Hart said he hoped that the other Cohasset schools would also be linked in the future to the network.

As part of the NYNEX grant, three staff members from each high school will receive five days' training on the use of the computer network and the Internet, Savage said.

The South Shore Educational Collaborative is now trying to secure additional funding to train other teachers at the high schools, he said.

Some of the training will show teachers how to do research on the Internet more efficiently, he said.



Cohasset High senior Keith Wright logs on at C.H.S. The school will soon join a computer network linking it up to other high schools and the world, officials say.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Gift wrap deadline is Oct. 6

The deadline for ordering gift wrap and gifts through the PSO fundraiser has been extended through Oct. 6. Fifty percent of sales benefit the schools, and order forms should be returned to your child's school. Additional order forms may be obtained by calling Tomi Bukowski, 383-6771.

Music parents are wanted

The Deer Hill Music Parents' Association has extended an invitation to all new fourth-grade band and chorus parents to join the organization, which had more than 75 members last year.

Sign-up sheets will be available at Open House Oct. 6. To promote the spirit of the school band and chorus, decals will be on sale for $2 that night. For further information call Jane Henderson at 383-6535.

Open house at Notre Dame

Notre Dame Academy, Main Street, Hingham, will hold an Open House on Sunday, Oct. 22, from 1 to 5 p.m. All interested girls and their parents are invited to attend.

Prospective members of the Class of 2000 will have an opportunity to meet with present students, faculty and administrators and take guided tours of the school. There will be an opportunity to register for the Archdiocesan Entrance Exam, which will be administered at the Academy Saturday, Dec. 9. Transportation information will also be available at the open house.

For further information call the admissions office at 749-5930.

The Cohasset Teen Center will continue its regular weekend hours through the holiday weekend . The Center is issuing a special invitation to all seventh- and eighth-graders to a Saturday Pizza Night on Oct. 7, from 7 to 10 p.m., following an afternoon of Cohasset High School Homecoming events.

Parents are reminded that the Center, which is supervised by adults and equipped with games and cable TV, is a drop-in center for all Cohasset youth from grade seven up. Community dona-

Derby to hold open houses

Derby Academy will host two Open Houses for visitors Tuesday, Oct. 17 at 8:45 a.m. and Sunday, Nov. 5, at 2 p.m. Events are designed to provide an informal introduction to the Academy, its curriculum and faculty.

An overview of the school's educational program, a review of the application process and a tour of the academy will be featured, followed by a question and answer session.

Due to limited space available, those interested in attending one of the open houses are asked to call Jay Sadlon at 749-0746 to reserve a space.

Police hopefuls interviewed, decision due by Oct. 30

Selectmen will name a new police officer by Oct. 30. Earlier this week, the board interviewed the following three Cohasset men who are vying for a spot on the Cohasset police department:

• Private investigator, Gary Parziale, a Desert Storm veteran who is in the Marine Reserves and who holds a degree from Bridgewater State College.

• A veteran of Desert Storm, Garrrett A. Hunt, who is Police Chief Brian Noonan's stepson, is employed with U.S. Air and an aircraft mechanic.

• Cohasset animal control officer, William P. Quigley, who served as the town's first summer police officer this year, has served as a special Boston police officer.

All the men said they could meet the challenges of being a police officer in Cohasset and felt they had the leadership and dedication needed for the job. A fourth candidate, Liam Stanford, withdrew his application before the interview because he had accepted another job.

Fire status report issued

In his September status report to selectmen, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the new chief's car is "a welcomed addition to the department."

"The new vehicle, with its four-wheel drive capability, will allow the Chief to respond quickly and safely to incidents in all types of weather conditions," he wrote.

Lincoln also said ten new portable radios, funded in the FY'96 budget, were delivered and placed in service in August. The new units have a 16-channel scanning feature and each has a second battery to allow for constant use.

"With the new portables, each front-line piece of apparatus as well as the officers-in-charge, now have the use of reliable portable radio communications," he said. "Dependable remote radio communications means additional safety and efficiency during emergency incidents, as well as with routine department business."

Epi-pens (Epinephrine Auto-Injectors) for emergency treatment of severe allergic reactions to insect stings and bites, foods, drugs and other allergens were placed in service on the ambulance on Aug. 28, Lincoln said. Nine department EMTs were trained and certified in the use of this life-saving equipment. There additional EMTs are under-going the training and should be certified in the near future, Lincoln said.

August fire incidents noted

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln reported to selectmen that the department responded to 158 incidents in August including two structure fires, six motor vehicle accidents, one motor vehicle fire, 68 medical calls, four brush or woods fires, performed 31 inspections and conducted 13 investigations.

Studds urges Weld to get rolling on rail restoration

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

"We've been trying everything, talking to people, writing to the governor and now we're using our democratic card," said staunch rail supporter William Grimes, a Hingham resident and founder of the pro-train group, Back on Track.

Grimes, who met with U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds in Washington D.C. last month, said he was pleased by congressman's recent letter to Governor William Weld urging him to get moving on Greenbush Rail Restoration. (See letter, page 10).

But local rail opponents say Studds' Sept. 29 letter will have little impact on a governor who is listening closely to what Greenbush communities have to say.

Studds, a native of Cohasset, represents Massachusetts 10th Congressional District which includes the Greenbush corridor communities.

Grimes met with several members of the democratic delegation in Washington and hopes in what has become a very political issue, that if republicans continue to drop the ball, the democrats will pick it up and run with it.

'I hope the governor will listen.'
— William Grimes.

Traveling at his own expense via Amtrak to and from Washington D.C., Grimes said he urged Studds to do whatever he could at the federal level.

"Every voice in a position of authority or responsibility that's raised at this time is more than welcome," Grimes said.

"I hope the governor will listen," he added.

According to spokesperson Brendan Daley from Studds' office, the representative has been a long time supporter of Greenbush rail restoration and the letter simply reiterates this position. In light of the most recent rounds of delays at the state level and after meeting with constituents concerned about this issue, Daley said Studds hopes to prod the governor into action with this letter.

Studds' letter applaud[s] the state's efforts to res[tore] the Plymouth and Middlel[oro] branches and of the [Old] Colony Line but emphasized the need for the third prong – the Greenbush spur – as well.

"The South Shore is the only area of Metropolitan Boston that is not currently served by commuter rail. Residents of other parts of the state have long enjoyed the benefits of this service, while commuters from Weymouth and points south have been forced to struggle with the overburdened Southeast Expressway," Studds wrote.

Studds stressed the need for a multi-modal transportation system for the region including ferries and buses but said Greenbush rail service is an essential component of such a system.

While Studds acknowledges there is vocal opposition to the project, he maintained that "the vast majority of South Shore residents want rail service restored.

"We don't think ferries alone will be enough to ease congestion on Route 3 and 3A," Daley said.

At the federal level, Daley said the project is well known and he maintained that Studds will do everything he can to make sure there's funding available.

"We all want to make sure Massachusetts doesn't lose out in terms of funding for this and other projects," he said.

Still, Daley noted that the state continues to have discretion to spend the federal pool of money on whatever projects that they choose and Greenbush restoration has proven to be more of a political than a financial issue.

Studds, however, is not worried that his pro-rail stance will hurt him politically, said Daley who maintained there is a greater political cost to not moving on this issue.

"We've met with some of the opponents and have heard their point of view," Daley said.

"But we think there is a greater majority that support rail restoration."

Pointing to the record breaking turn-outs in South Shore Town meetings this year in which residents in Scituate, Hingham and Cohasset opposed rail restoration, Coastal Coalition Founder Nancy Buckley disagreed.

On Studds' letter to Weld, Buckley said "it's not surprising coming from a man who doesn't live in the district he represents and hasn't lived there in over 20 years."

Buckley said she doesn't believe Studd's note will have any weight with the Weld administration – an administration that she said is considering the town meeting votes very heavily and listening closely to local residents on the issue.

School space solutions are narrowed to three

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Cohasset Mariner

Citing a need for additional elementary school classrooms, the Cohasset School Committee has decided on three possible courses of action, two of which involve building a new school.

A third option involves retaining Osgood as a school and adding classrooms onto one or more of the town's schools.

The School Committee voted unanimously at its Oct. 5 meeting to approve the options.

The three options will be presented at the Nov. 6 Town Meeting. School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder says a final plan will be chosen in January so that the town can apply by June 1 for state funding of the construction costs.

The School Building Committee had proposed six options to address the classroom shortage, and the School Committee's vote reduces those options to the following three:

• Option A: retain the Osgood

Survey asks why some opt out of Cohasset schools

Several Cohasset residents said they were motivated to enroll their children in the new South Shore Charter School in Hull because of the school's rich academic offering, its tenet of learning at one's own pace, and the availability of project-based learning, among other reasons.

"The Cohasset schools are good schools, (but) the charter school represented the hope of a great school," said Donald Trisler, who transferred his daughter from the Osgood School to the charter school.

Fifteen Cohasset students from grades K-12 enrolled at the public charter school when it opened this fall, according to the school's headmaster, Timothy Anderson.

Meanwhile, the Cohasset School Department has sent out 39 surveys to find out why parents decided to enroll their children this fall in schools other than the Cohasset Public Schools, said Director of Student Services Alicia Shea.

The survey was distributed to all

Lunches are on a low-fat diet

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Cohasset Mariner

When the parents of Cohasset Public School students went to school, cafeterias would butter hamburger buns.

"Fat wasn't an issue back then," said Jeanne Pierce of Canteen Corp., a South Carolina-based company which manages the Cohasset's school lunch program. "It is an issue now."

The Cohasset school lunch service "isn't the way it was when their parents went to school," said Pierce, who is the company's food service director for Cohasset.

There are more kinds of food to choose from and the Canteen Corp. has taken steps to "drastically reduce the fat content of cafeteria food," she said.

Next year, the US Department of Agriculture will require that the fat content in school lunches be limited to 30 percent of the calories, said Katrina Jesick, spokesperson for the USDA's Food and Nutrition service.

"A number of studies relate saturated fat intake to high blood cholesterol and increased risk for coronary heart disease. Diets high in fat are associated with increased risk of some types of cancer, possibly gall bladder disease, and obesity," the USDA said.

"Studies show that the atherosclerotic process begins in childhood and is affected by high blood cholesterol levels," the USDA said.

But ninth-grader Morgan Bigley said the school lunches at Cohasset High are "not very nutritional." He said there is too much fried and "greasy" food like chicken nuggets and french fries and not enough vegetables.

However, Pierce said Canteen Corp. has taken steps to reduce fat.

"What's changing is the way we prepare our food," she said. She said the cafeterias offer steamed vegetables with no butter. She said the french fries and onion rings served to grades 1-6 are made in an oven rather than in a fryolator.

Cooked meat in tacos is drained of fat and then washed in water to reduce the fat content even more, she said.

And ground turkey is mixed in with the taco meat to further cut back on fat, she said.

"We use a lot of turkey products," such as turkey hot dogs instead of Next month's special town meeting will take up where the zoning board of appeals left off on the the subject of fast-food restaurants in Cohasset.

The ZBA recently tied the development of Shaw's Supermarket to future use of the Bergson's restaurant next door. The ZBA decision that granted Shaw's application stipulated that if Bergson's ever closes, only a restaurant similar to it could operate there. Specifically, the ZBA intended to prevent a fast-food restaurant, such

Student services head resigns

Alicia Shea, director of student services for the Cohasset Public Schools, has resigned to take a position in the Walpole Public Schools.

Shea said her new position will focus much more on curriculum and instruction, which is where her professional interest lies.

She will be Walpole's director of curriculum, instruction and grants.

Shea said she wanted the new job because of "the professional opportunity it afforded me."

Shea said she will leave the Cohasset schools around November 1.

Superintendent of Schools Stephen Hart called Shea's departure "a significant loss" to Cohasset.

Ann Whiteley, co-chair of the Parents' Advisory Council, said Shea was "a skillful administrator" who had "a wonderful way with people." Her resignation is "extremely disappointing to members of the Parents' Advisory Council."

Shea had been director of student services for a little more than a year, Hart said.

Ambulance billing detailed

According to the fire department, the town billed for 38 ambulance transports and collected $7,442.68 in ambulance fees last month out of a possible $12,919.83.

So far this fiscal year, which started July 1, $35,057.13 has been collected out of a possible $23,872.48.

The collection rate during fiscal years 1993, 1994 and 1995 averaged about 92 percent, according to a recent report filed at the selectmen's office.

Pond powwow planned

The conservation commission has asked the sewer commission and health board to meet with its Straits Pond subcommittee to discuss Straits Pond.

Conservation asked that the two other boards meet with subcommittee members Edward Graham, John Bryant and James Dedes at a mutually convenient time and report to the full conservation commission at its Nov. 2 meeting.

Free flu clinics are offered

Two free flu clinics, sponsored by the Social service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health, will be held on Saturday, Oct. 21, and Saturday, Oct. 28, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to those 65 years and older and people with chronic heart and lung conditions. The vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician must evaluate the case. First-time vaccinations only will be available through the clinic.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is providing tetanus vaccine and urging all people who have not had a tetanus booster in the past 10 years to get one at the flu clinic.

All three of the vaccines can be administered simultaneously with little or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further information call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

School space solutions are narrowed to three

School as a school. However, the entire building would not necessarily continue to be used as a school, Hart said. Cohasset would also construct more classrooms, most likely by building an addition onto the Deer Hill School, he said.

• Option B: build a new elementary school.

• Option C: build a new elementary school, renovate the Deer Hill School, and create a middle school. Either the Deer Hill School or the junior high wing would be transformed into the middle school, Hart said.

Under Options B and C, Osgood would no longer be used as a school, Kidder said.

The School Committee did not specify any grade configurations for the three options.

The exact cost of the three options will not be available at the November Town Meeting, Kidder said. However, the School Committee will ask for funding at Town Meeting to study the options further and determine their cost, he said.

The School Building Committee has said that Cohasset needs eight additional elementary school classrooms, assuming an average class size of 22 students.

Because enrollment is projected to increase, Cohasset will need 14 additional classrooms by the year 2005, the Building Committee said.

If Osgood were no longer used as a school, Cohasset would currently have a shortage of 20 classrooms and by 2005 would have a shortage of 26 classrooms, the Building Committee said.

The state has certified that Cohasset needs additional classrooms, Supt. Hart announced at the Oct. 5 meeting.

That means that Cohasset qualifies for a reimbursement from the state for 60 percent of the cost of a construction project, Kidder said.

Under the School Building Assistance Act, the state can choose to finance 60 percent of the cost of school districts' construction projects.

"The state said: 'You do qualify for state funding and you need to bring a proposal to us by June 1,'" Kidder said.

However, the final construction plan would need to be approved by the state before Cohasset would be granted state funding, said Dr. John Calabro, vice-chair of the School Building Committee.

The state has said there is a need for 20 additional classrooms, because the state views the Osgood School as "an inadequate building," Kidder said.

Hart said it is now "very likely" that a construction project would be funded by the state.

"I don't anticipate we'll have anything but the state's 60 percent support in this," Kidder said.

The School Building Assistance Act (SBAA) is scheduled to expire at the end of June, Kidder said. Kidder said he expects the Legislature to renew the SBAA.

However, when the Legislature renews the SBAA, they may amend it to provide less funding for school construction projects, he said. Kidder expects Cohasset will be immune from that change.

Kidder said that if Cohasset meets the June 1 deadline, "I am certain we will be reimbursed at 60 percent."

He said that both James Anderson, head of the School Building Assistance Bureau, and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) have expressed confidence that if Cohasset meets the deadline, its application proposal would be "grandfathered." That means that the town would still be eligible to receive 60 percent funding even if the Legislature reduces the level of state funding after June, Calabro said.

On Sept. 29, Cohasset school officials met with Anderson, who reaffirmed that the state will not fund any renovation or addition at the Osgood School, Hart said.

The state rejected the school for funding because the school is 70 years old, has a wood frame which is a fire danger, and sits on a 4.1-acre site which is too small for its population, school officials said.

"There is still a possibility of using the Osgood School, but we must do it without state funding," Hart said. "It is not very economically feasible to pursue that."

At the Nov. 6 Town Meeting, the School Committee will present the three options, Kidder said. The committee will also ask Town Meeting for funding so that they can study the options further and narrow them down to one final option, he said. The committee will then present the final option at another special Town Meeting in January at which Town Meeting will either approve the final option or vote it down, Kidder said.

beef hot dogs, because turkey is lower in fat, she said.

Pizza, which is served daily, is made with part-skim mozzarella cheese, and low-fat snacks are offered, including caramel-covered rice cakes, granola bars, and fruit juice bars, she said.

Pierce said she thinks the Cohasset schools already meet the USDA's requirement on fat content.

Kevin Smith, a Cohasset senior, said, "I don't even look at" whether the food is nutritional. "If it tastes good I'll eat it," he said.

He said he buys french fries regularly and never eats the vegetables.

Approximately 37 percent of Cohasset students bought lunch on a regular basis last month, Pierce said. The other students brought their lunches from home, she said.

There are also more choices of food offered than students' parents had, Pierce said.

In grades 4-12, there are two kinds of pizza every day, calzones every other day, two additional entrees, five types of pre-made salads, including a salad made with tuna fish, chicken salad, and a Greek salad. There are soups offered every day, mostly at the high school, and fresh fruit and yogurt.

Students "do have choices," Pierce said. "It's a matter of them making the right decision."

She said students are "very well educated" on food nutrition from health classes and from their parents.

Aja Campbell, a junior, said the food "tastes pretty good but some of it's expensive."

Water restrictions may become a way of life

Reservoir down to 15 feet, officials say

By ALISON SHYER
Cohasset Mariner

Despite the successful installation of the water mains on Atlantic Avenue, Beechwood Street and Forest Avenue, Cohasset residents, many weary of late night forays into their gardens, may have another summer of daytime watering restrictions ahead of them.

Water commissioners last Wednesday night not only balked at lifting the ban, but suggested that another summer of limitations may be a possibility.

Chairman Fred Koed, responding to queries from Robert Sturdy, member of the Cohasset Planning Board and irate water customer, said that no one is sure now what next summer will bring.

"We don't know what the conditions will be," Koed said. "Of course we'd prefer not to have a ban, but if we see the system degrade because of draught or construction, we have to put public safety first."

Sturdy, who lives at 272 Jerusalem Road, said that he might take his "several thousands of dollars" of business away from the water company. "I have no assurance from this board that I can depend on the Cohasset Water Company for my water needs," he said, which includes caring for "$100,000 to 200,000 of landscaping that is at risk."

Now that Cohasset has the Forest Avenue main supplying water to residents who have never had adequate water supply, the usage will necessarily increase, according to Koed, but no one can be sure how much and exactly what effect the surge will have on Cohasset's until-recently troubled distribution problem.

The problem, after an unusually dry summer, is no longer only with distribution. As of Wednesday night's meeting, the 30-foot deep reservoir is down to 15 feet. The situation is not as dire as that of Weymouth, for example, whose supply, according to officials, is only enough for 35 days, but still cause for the ongoing precautions. Last week's rain reportedly had little effect other than maintaining the water levels.

Also unclear, according to commissioners, is the fate of the current price of water in Cohasset.

"We are bringing in a consultant to do a full analysis of the rate structure," said Koed, "including a look at 'fixed' charges vs. variable charges. I would like to stabilize the rates so that (residents) will know what to expect in the next five years."

Underground sprinkler systems are also expected to be a focus of the analysis. The systems, according to both Koed and fellow commissioner Bill Montouri, have played a major role in the growing need for expansion. Part of the rate study, Koed said, will be determining "how to recover the costs" of that upgrading of the system.

Commissioners hope to break ground April 1 of next year for the next phase of the water main project, which will include Sohier Street, Cedar Street, Pleasant Street, Beach Street, Pond Street and parts of Jerusalem Road.

Water Commission plans public hearing Oct. 19

The Cohasset Water Commission will hold a public hearing Thursday, Oct. 19, at 7 p.m. in the town hall auditorium. On the agenda is a full rundown of what's been done to the water system as well as what's to come for next spring and summer. They would like anyone with questions, concerns or continuing problems to come and have their problems addressed. The engineers will be on hand as well as the commissioners.

The commission voted 2-0 last Wednesday to approve a slight change of plan in the repair of Forest Avenue's trenches. Instead of taking out the temporary pipe, the contractor is going to put down a 12-foot overlay — essentially a patch — over the six-foot hole. The job — which is costing about 10 to 15 percent less than the original plan — will be done by the end of the year. Next year, according to chairman Fred Koed, the whole road will be repaved with state funds.

Any trenches left over, according to water officials, will be the responsibility of the gas company, who has also been doing work on Forest Ave. The water company has been receiving 30 to 40 complaints a week about the condition of the road.

The water company is putting out a bid for the removal of the blue bypass pipe on Cunningham Bridge. That job, according to Koed, should also be finished by December.

Continued examination of Simpson verdict eases pain

By DAVID TIBBETTS
Special to the Mariner

The pain from a cavity attracts all your attention. You keep examining it with your tongue, hoping the intensive probing will help alleviate the pain.

The aftermath of the O.J. Simpson verdict is like a cavity afflicting the body politic.

The verdict in the Simpson trial has attracted the undivided attention of the entire country. No segment of society is untouched by the verdict. Even something as seemingly unaffected as utility companies felt the ripples of the trial.

New York City utility companies reported their highest power output in history at the moment the verdict was being delivered. A similar phenomenon occurred on the South Shore.

Hank Sennott of Eastern Edison said that just before the verdict was delivered at 1 p.m., output increased by one percent above normal. Just after 1 p.m., output decreased to three-and-one-half percent below normal. By 1:30 p.m., output had returned to normal levels.

The one percent increase was probably a result of higher than normal television use. Sennott said that Edison officials aren't sure why output decreased during the verdict, but speculate that people stopped working during that period to watch the trial. The work stoppage caused a drop in load as people turned off their computers and fax machines to watch the trial.

The Simpson trial has become a symbol for everything that is wrong with the relationship between African-Americans and white Americans, from judicial inequality to civil rights.

George Lewald is a lawyer with the Boston firm of Ropes and Gray and a selectman in Hanover. He said the O.J. verdict was a reflection of the Rodney King trial.

"The verdict is the flip-side of the Rodney King case," Lewald said. "In that case, the public was appalled by the jury acquitting the police despite overwhelming evidence of guilt. The jury felt the evidence was not enough to convict. I think the same thing happened here. What we saw was overwhelming evidence against Simpson.

"I think the jury felt they were reaching a verdict of social importance. It's hard to condemn the jury because the public didn't see all of the evidence, but the jury did," he added.

Lewald also criticized Judge Lance Ito for letting the trial drag on for too long. He said that in his experience, juries lose interest if a trial lasts too long.

Civil rights has proven to be the most divisive issue in the wake of the verdict. African-Americans believe that the prosecution's entire case was built on racism. Mark Fuhrman's testimony is cited as proof of police racism. Many African-Americans say that this discrimination is part of a racist judicial system that favors whites over blacks. Statistics show that black offenders are more likely than white offenders to be convicted of crimes, and will receive harsher sentences than white offenders.

But even an organization as influential as the American Civil Liberties Union didn't feel that Simpson's civil liberties were being abused by the prosecution. The ACLU combats assaults on the Bill of Rights. John Roberts of the Boston ACLU said that Simpson's trial was only about the murder charges.

Article takes aim at fast food

as a McDonald's or Burger King, from taking over from Bergson's.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said the present zoning by-laws make no distinctions between types of restaurants. If a restaurant is presently operating at a particular location, it could be converted to a Taco Bell with no review by the town. A small, seasonal restaurant could be sold to a large franchise, and expanded to a year-round business.

While some Cohasset residents might want to prohibit fast-food restaurants altogether, Moore said it might be wise to amend the zoning by-laws to establish a permitting procedure that allows the town to regulate future development, and one that applies to Cohasset as a whole.

"You never know what circumstances might exist in the future," he said.

While a planning board hearing on Article 49 will be held later this month, Moore said his board is most concerned with traffic and parking issues, which are most often exacerbated by fast-food restaurants, Moore said.

He added that he does not see a great deal of support for fast-food restaurants by Cohasset residents who have expressed concern with existing traffic congestion on Route 3A.

But he does not see any anti-fast-food feelings as evidence of "snobbery" on the part of Cohasset residents. A nicely designed and landscaped McDonald's, he said, might be more attractive on Route 3A than a mulch pile.

Moore added, "Personally, I don't want to see Route 3A in Cohasset look like Route 53 in Hanover."

He believes noise, lighting, and hours of operation are all areas that the planning board should consider if it is allowed to review and regulate fast-food restaurants, especially if such an establishment is located near a neighborhood.

"We need to regulate or we leave ourselves wide open," Moore said. He also noted that he believes this is the time to make zoning changes because there are no proposals pending before any town boards.

In considering Article 49, he said the town looks at other applicable zoning by-laws from other communities that have been approved by the state Attorney General. This will make it easier for a similar by-law adopted by Cohasset voters to be approved.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Charlie and Barbara Stover are grandparents of twins

Justin Maitland, son of Ken and Heidi Maitland, spent two weeks in August in Finland participating in a homestay program and an international youth camp. The trip was sponsored by Kone Elevator Company and included employees' children who were representatives of countries in North America, South America, Europe, Australia and Asia.

Communication was made easier for the youths from England, Australia, and the United States as English was the common language spoken. Participants enjoyed tours of industry, farms and museums, trips to amusement parks and beaches, general camping activities and nightly discos.

Yes, Charlie and Barbara Stover are beaming from ear-to-ear, and yes, there are two reasons — twins!

Their names are Bridget Margaret Stover and Philip Charles Stover and they were born Sept. 15, and their Mom, Peggy, and Dad, Chip, are so thrilled and so proud!

Chip and Peggy just moved into their brand new home in Rockland last week, so you can bet everything is ship-shape for those two bundles of love!

It sure is lucky that Charlie has retired, he and Barbara will surely be spending lots of time there helping, probably with Bridget and Philip's cousins, Shane Paul and Brooke Cummings, in tow. Best of luck and lots of love go to you all!

Emily M. D'Urso is one of 502 students to begin study this September at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley. She is a 1995 graduate of Cohasset Jr.-Sr. High School.

Emily was a member of the National Honor Society and the recipient of the Cohasset Rotary Club Scholarship and the Mary Margaret Hardy Scholarship. Emily is the daughter of Nino and Terese D'Urso of 85 Hull street.

Several weeks ago I told you of the athletic accomplishments of Lynn Cornelius, a Cohasset resident who works at South Shore Hospital. Well, she's done it again, and this time we think her achievement deserves extra special attention!

On Labor Day weekend, Lynn finished first in her age group (30-34) in the New England Triathlon Series Sprint III, held in Hyannis. She swam one-quarter mile, bicycled 10 miles and ran 3.1 miles.

The Labor Day weekend race was the last in a series of seven, overall point standing is tabulated throughout the series and, by virtue of her first-place finish, Lynn captured the gold medal!

It takes a special commitment to be a triathlete, and Lynn's success is a testimonial to that commitment. Congratulations to Lynn for being the best!

Lots of people are burning the midnight oil on Saturday nights now, the reason being that a Cohasset native, Nancy Walls, is a member of the cast! Nancy is the daughter of Bob and Carol Walls of Fairoaks Lane. From all accounts she is doing a great job, and everyone sure loves to see a local gal go "big-time" and do a super job at it! Tune in next week.

Everyone that has been working so hard on the fields, and coaches have a special request of all of you dog owners — please be sure to keep your pups off of the grass! Even though it is posted, dogs are still being spotted there, as are their paw-prints. For all of those working so hard to make the fields beautiful for us, it is discouraging to say the least! And, don't forget, there is a leash law!

By now everyone has seen Fletcher Ford on the cover of Sports Illustrated, we even spotted it in Hawaii! What a thrill for that young man, not only to be on the cover, but to meet and be photographed with Mo Vaughn!

Luckily Fletcher doesn't play baseball at this time of year, the Sports Illustrated jinx sure affected Mo's performance during the playoffs!

Anyway, Fletcher, everyone thinks that the picture, and you, are great!

Hats off to King Jewelers, who have come up with a great idea to support DOVE by selling a dove pin beginning this Friday, Oct. 13. Valerie King and her partner, Toni Lyn, thought of the idea, and it was designed by Mary Jane Doubleday. The pins will be available in three formats; silver, gold and a limited edition of gold with a diamond inset. All of King's profits will go to DOVE, as well as an additional donation made by Doubleday Designs and Toni Lyn & Co. This isn't the first time that King Jewelers has run a fundraiser for DOVE, they raised $1,400 in 1994 and $1,840 in 1995. The pins are really beautiful, and the idea is a wonderful one — be sure to check it out, then hopefully write a check!

That's what's new for this week, have you got a bit of news for us for next week? If so, call me!

Gertrude Hooper

Gertrude Hooper, 91, of Cohasset, died Oct. 8 at Southwood Nursing Facility, Norwell.

She was educated at Vassar College and Simmons College School of Social Work, receiving a degree in public administration in 1939. After graduation from Vassar College, she initiated the first weekly column on women's sports for the Boston Evening Transcript.

Miss Hooper had a long and distinguished career in field hockey as a player and coach and served six years as president of the U.S. Field Hockey Association, touring with the U.S. team in 1933 to Copenhagen and the United Kingdom. She traveled to Australia with the team in 1938. Later, she was elected first vice president of the International Federation of Women's Hockey Associations.

Miss Hooper served as secretary and bookkeeper to the Rev. Raymond Calkins of the First Church in Cambridge Congregational and as part-time probation officer in the Third District Court of eastern Middlesex. She also worked at the Church Home Society, an Episcopal child-placing agency.

In 1936 she helped found the Friends of Prisoners, which later became part of the United Prison Association, now known as the Crime and Justice Foundation.

She was appointed by Gov. Leverett Saltonstall in 1940 to serve a five-year term on board of trustees of the former Massachusetts Training Schools for delinquent children.

For the past two decades, Miss Hooper has served in a variety of leadership roles for Cohasset FISH, a volunteer organization that provides transportation for the infirm and elderly who need to visit physicians and hospitals.

Miss Hooper leaves more than 100 nieces and nephews, extending over five generations, and was the daughter of Gertrude Fellowes Williams and James R. Hooper, a prominent Boston banker.

Funeral services were held Thursday, Oct. 12, at St. Stephens Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. at 10 a.m. Visiting hours were omitted. Interment was private.

Genevieve Noering

Genevieve "Dev" Noering, 78, died Oct. 1 in Brigham and Womens Hospital, Boston, after a long illness.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., she lived in Brookville, Long Island before moving to Marion, Mass. and St. Petersburg, Fla. in 1977 following her husband's retirement as executive of Abraham & Strauss Department Stores in Brooklyn.

She was an active volunteer in the health-care field, working at the Glen Cove Hospital and the Veteran's Hospital in North Port, N.Y., as well as chairing fundraising campaigns for United Cerebral Palsy.

Mrs. Noering was the wife of William J. Noering, to whom she was married 58 years, and leaves two sons, Thomas W. of Middlebury, Conn. and Richard J. of Cohasset; a daughter, Michelle Wicker of Marion; 11 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Arrangements were made by the Stott, Chapman, Cole & Gleason Funeral Home, Wareham.

Fighting back

Another heart-wrenching domestic violence case ended in a murder-suicide two weeks ago on the Cape when a Brockton police officer shot and killed his wife, then killed himself.

The slaying marked at least the 29th domestic violence murder in Massachusetts this year, a statistic that only hints at the thousands of abusive and violent relationships that continue, but have not led to murder.

In this most recent case, Cheryl Wilson had sought and received a restraining order to keep her violent husband, Curtis Wilson, away. Wilson's service weapon had been taken away in 1993 after he beat Cheryl and put a loaded gun to her head.

Cheryl Wilson's friends and counselors now say that she had convinced the court to have the gun returned to her husband because he was growing increasingly angry at her, blaming her for his inability to make more money, since he was a cop without a weapon. Cheryl Wilson asked that her husband get his gun back, and her friends say it was an attempt to "buy time" by defusing her husband's anger.

The irony is that the system was working in this case and the relationship still ended tragically. A restraining order had been issued against Curtis Wilson. His gun had been taken away and he had undergone counseling for his violent behavior. Cheryl Wilson had moved to Barnstable with the couple's two children but, officials say, she had allowed her husband to stay with her on occasion, in spite of the restraining order and his violent past.

Domestic violence involves the abuser(s) and the victim(s). As a society, we tend to point the finger at the abuser and with just cause. It is often the abuser who controls the situation.

But there comes a point when the victim has to take matters into her/his own hands and get away from the abusive relationship. While victims might call the police and take out restraining orders when their abuser has become violent, too often they soften up and take it upon themselves to circumvent the laws designed to keep them safe.

Cheryl Wilson had a restraining order against her husband yet was as guilty as he in violating it when getting together with him. News reports indicate that many of Cheryl's friends and family knew about the abusive relationship, and supported her in her attempts to escape it.

However, all that support and all the restraining orders in the world could not help Cheryl Wilson if she could not find the strength within herself to take control of the situation. At some point, adult victims have to look at their lives and work to change them. They have to rely upon, not abuse, the support systems that are available.

Busway is not Greenbush answer

To the Editor:

As everyone must know by now, Massachusetts Transportation Secretary Kerasiotes and the MBTA directed their consultants this summer to prepare a study of the feasibility of constructing a concrete guideway for buses on the right-of-way of the Greenbush Line as a possible alternative to commuter rail restoration. I was sent a copy of this report for comment, and the following is an abridged version of my response, submitted as Chairman of Back on Track.

1. The busway would be entirely single-tracked, whereas the train would have passing sidings for traffic in the opposite direction. Buses coming the "wrong way" (Boston-ward in the evening and homeward in the morning) would have to spill onto local streets and highways, and be subject to delays in addition to contributing to traffic congestion themselves.

2. Unlike railroad coaches on steel rails, with the added comfort of air suspension, buses will run on strips of concrete. This makes for a rougher ride even when the system is new; as the concrete surface ages and deteriorates the ride gets rougher still. A steel rail can be ground smooth or simply replaced, whereas concrete cannot. Things could be even worse if the proposal (to save $20 million in construction costs) of placing the concrete ties supporting the busway track sections directly on a gravel base is adopted, rather than using pilings as in Australia and Germany. Uneven settling of guideway sections caused by New England's frost heaves would make the ride resemble a roller coaster, with the possibility of derailments. Rail is easier in this climate: continuously welded rails are supported on ties within a bed of gravel ballast.

3. At grade crossings, the buses are planned to slow to 25 mph; while the report states this "will be perceived as safer than the commuter rail alternative," the question must be asked: safer for whom? Collisions between street traffic and the bus are actually more likely than with the train for two reasons: (1) there are more crossing events and (2) automobiles would be halted by an ordinary traffic signal, not restrained by gates as with the train. Collisions would not only be more likely with the bus but more dangerous for the bus passengers (a passenger aboard a train that strikes an automobile is usually unaware that anything has happened); with the train the only endangered person is the one who has failed to obey some very strident warnings.

4. The engineer drives the train while the conductor collects fares and otherwise interacts with the public. No mention is made in this study of who is supposed to collect the fares on the trip into Boston; the bus driver? Schedule delays will be the inevitable result unless conductors are added to the buses.

5. Once the bus leaves the guideway at the Braintree Wye it will have to merge with regular traffic inching along the Expressway as it enters the new HOV (high-occupancy vehicle) lane, and a second time as it leaves it for South Station, this time crossing two lanes to get off. More delays. Off the guideway, in the words of the report, "...the actual travel time in the bus would be affected by traffic congestion and other factors which affect general purpose traffic on these roads. The time for a particular trip can be substantially greater than the average." Commuter rail, on its own right-of-way, is completely free to operate on a strict schedule upon which commuters come to rely. How can riders be attracted to a form of transport that cannot even promise timely arrival?

6. With loading on the right side only (trains load on both sides), platforms and shelters would be required on both sides of the guideway at every station, increasing the visual impact of the project and creating confusion and delays every time a rider unfamiliar with the system finds himself waiting on the wrong side. No mention is made in the report of how pedestrians can cross from one side of the guideway to the other at the station; will overpasses have to be built?

7. Articulated buses are proposed for this system; unlike rail vehicles that can move (or be moved) equally smoothly in either direction, these buses cannot back up for any distance on the guideway and would have to be rescued by special towing vehicles if they break down.

8. One of the major objections to the busway has been doubt about its ability to perform in winter. Here is what the report says on that subject: "Winter conditions may limit travel speeds on the busway. As with conventional speeds and busways, snow and ice would reduce traction, requiring longer stopping distances and limiting maximum speeds to maintain safe stopping distances." The report goes on to cite the particular danger of snow and ice building up sufficiently in the guideway to lift the bus wheels right off, perhaps at speed, resulting in damage to the guide wheels or even derailment. It is well known that commuter rail is not subject to such problems and continues operating at nearly normal speeds under such conditions.

9. Buses have useful lives much shorter than those of rail equipment; in the words of the report:

Greenbush 'right of way' foes review other transit systems

Rail supporter's statistics show most want the train

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Retired Engineer and Hingham resident Paul Lynch aired part two of his ongoing Greenbush transportation series this week on his cable talk show "Around Town" with guests Nancy Buckley and Kevin O'Keeffe.

A Hingham resident and founder of the Coastal Coalition, Buckley has of late, modified what has been publicized as an anti-rail stance, stressing instead that she is opposed to using the Greenbush right of way for any transportation system.

"This is a great opportunity, where it is televised to communicate what we've been trying to say for the last year and a half — there are alternatives to using the right of way," she said.

O'Keeffe, is a Cohasset resident, whose Accord Terminal plan which would incorporate using the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, which is slated for closure, has earned a great deal of attention over the last year.

Both O'Keeffe and Buckley agreed with Lynch that rail service is needed but not where the MBTA has proposed to put it.

"We want to shift the focus to Route 3," said Buckley who noted that in addition to improved commuter boat services; a guided busway system or electric powered rail system there would be two acceptable alternatives.

Lynch looked at several state-of-the-art electrified transit systems in use around the country and around the world and discussed ways in which similar systems could work along the median strip on Route 3.

'There is agreement that we need a mix of good transportation and none of us want to use the existing Greenbush right of way in its entirety because of the impacts..'

—Retired Engineer and local talk show host Paul V. Lynch

Among the transit systems reviewed were Detroit's advanced rapid transit system, the light rail type systems used in Toronto and Rio de Janeiro and the high speed inner city rail used in Montreal, Ottawa and Quebec. Disney World's monorail system, Lynch pointed out was designed originally as a high speed rail system and has a weekly ridership of 150,000.

All of the transit systems Lynch examined can be used at grade, below ground or above ground.

"There is agreement that we need a mix of good transportation and none of us want to use the existing Greenbush right of way in its entirety because of the impacts," Lynch said.

Lynch suggests putting together a task force of transportation experts to come up with the best possible route and best possible transit system for the South Shore.

But for Scituate selectman and long time commuter rail supporter Kevin Kinsella, Greenbush rail restoration is the best possible transit system for the area, and he has statistics that show many others share his view.

Following the poor reception the Weld administration and transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes gave the recent South Shore Chamber of Commerce telephone survey which showed 61 percent of those polled favor commuter rail restoration along the Greenbush corridor, Kinsella put together some additional statistics that show strong support for the train.

Kinsella said while the Lt. Governor seemed to think there had been a decline in support for the project, he wanted to show that the town meetings this year did not reflect public opinion.

"We supported our position. We gave him facts and figures and told him these are the numbers, there is no ground swell of opposition out there," Kinsella said.

Kinsella and several other Greenbush corridor residents including Cohasset Selectman Martha Gjesteby, Back on Track member and Marshfield resident Richard Prone, and Hingham resident Ross Hall, met with Lt. Governor Paul Cellucci a few weeks ago and shared with him some compelling facts and figures showing what Kinsella calls the real Greenbush sentiment.

"I have a propensity for presentation and for graphics," Kinsella said. "I think they tell a very quick story."

Kinsella's graphs and statistics include results from both the referendum held Greenbush communities in 1991 and Cohasset's 1995 vote on the issue, as well as the results of the 1995 town meeting votes.

In the 1991 referendum, eight communities – Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth went to the ballot box over Greenbush and only Hingham opposed restoring commuter rail service with 56 percent of the voters against and 44 percent for restoration.

Overall, of the 108,303 registered voters in those communities, 37,713 cast a vote with 26,695 or 71 percent in favor and 11,018 or 29 percent opposed to rail.

And while this year's town meetings in Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham showed an increase in opposition to restoring the train, Kinsella points out that the anti-rail vote in all three towns made up a very small portion of the registered voters.

'You should restore Greenbush because it's the right thing to do, not because it's politically expedient.'

—Scituate Selectman Kevin Kinsella to MBTA General Mgr. Patrick Moynihan

In Hingham only 973 residents – less than 10 percent of the 13,221 registered voters attended town meeting, but a majority 83 percent or 800 of them opposed the train.

In Cohasset at both its special town meeting in 1994 and its referendum in 1995, voters were split with just 655 or 13 percent of the 4,920 registered voters turning out. This year's referendum in Cohasset brought 56 percent out to cast a vote, but again the vote was split with 1,383 in favor and 1,380 opposed to rail restoration.

In Scituate, where town meeting had to be postponed and relocated to accommodate the crowd, Kinsella's graphs show that only 1,961 of the town's 11,703 registered voters or 17 percent made the meeting with 59 percent of them opposing Greenbush commuter rail and 41 percent in favor.

Kinsella's statistics also included a list of organizations that endorse the Greenbush restoration including the American Automobile Association, Greenpeace, the Massachusetts Audubon Society, and the Sierra Club.

Kinsella said Cellucci was non-committal about the statistics and the studies, but implied that the state was nearer to a transportation decision than the public anticipates.

"He said we're working on a few things and the decision is going to be a lot sooner than you think," said Kinsella, who is skeptical about the likelihood of an imminent decision.

"They're dallying with this. They've turned it into a political football. They want to be all things to all people," said Kinsella, who reiterated his advice to the MBTA's new General Manager Patrick Moynihan; "You should restore Greenbush because it's the right thing to do, not because it's politically expedient."

Dump walk was well attended

To the Editor:

The Recycling Committee hit the nail on the head with its motto "Cohasset Cares." Once again our community demonstrated its concern for the environment and the future of Cohasset at Sunday's "Walk around the Dump."

I would like to sincerely thank the 50 adults and 20 children who spent the afternoon taking a look at the current landfill and the site of the potential expansion. This was a long walk and I am filled with admiration and gratitude for those who participated. It was also kind of Mr. Barry to permit us to enter his property to observe the proximity to 3A and the relationship of the dump to Lily Pond and the town.

I would like to remind citizens that we are in a "Public Comment Period" to express our concern about this expansion to the Department of Environmental Protection. Watch your mail for a form letter and instructions for your response. Strong political pressure is needed now. Please support our walkers and the future of our town by adding your voice and your name to this important issue.

"buses...have a useful life of only 12 years compared to 25 years for locomotives and rail coaches." The equipment cost for the bus would be approximately the same as for a vastly more comfortable and attractive rail line.

In short, the bus would be slower and bumpier than the train, while being no safer or cheaper. The consultants themselves say in their report that the bus would have less appeal than the train, dropping morning peak ridership from 3,200 train passengers to 2,500 bus passengers.

This report, in my opinion, clearly demonstrates the complete unsuitability of guided busway technology at this time and at this location. Experience gained in Adelaide, Australia and Essen, Germany, cannot be transferred to the Greenbush line which was once, and should be again, a vital commuter rail artery from the South Shore to Boston.

Jr./Sr. high council meets

The Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School Council met on Sept. 14. As this was the first meeting of the 1995-96 academic year, introductions of newest members were made, including Curtis Collins and Ami Argus.

During the session, the Council reviewed the School Improvement Plan of last year and how the Council fared. New goals for the current year were discussed and need to be compiled and presented to the school committee.

Some of the issues to be looked at are learning centers, technology at CHS, exam schedules and leveling.

The School Council was happy to learn of the addition of an adjustment counselor on a part-time basis. This was one of the Council's goals set for last year.

The next meeting of the Jr./Sr. High School Council will be Thursday, Oct. 12, at 7 p.m. The Council is committed to enhancing communications between Cohasset High School, the school committee, parents, students and the community at large. The meeting is open to the public.

Survey asks why some opt out of Cohasset schools

parents who sent their children to the charter school, a private independent school, or a parochial school, she said.

The results of the survey "could be used to modify or improve the Cohasset school system," said Superintendent of Schools Stephen Hart.

Twenty-one Cohasset students from grades 7 to 12 enrolled in private schools this year, Hart said. Five students also returned to the Cohasset Public Schools from private school this year, he said.

Last year, 19 students enrolled in private schools, he added.

The amount of state aid to the Cohasset schools was unaffected by the students enrolling in private school, Hart said.

However, the town of Cohasset must pay some $73,000 in tuition and transportation costs for the 15 charter school students, Hart said.

The state may partially reimburse Cohasset for those payments, said Massachusetts Undersecretary of Education Jim Peyser.

Cohasset parent Anne Reel said she transferred her daughter, Charlotte, from Osgood to the South Shore Charter School partly because "they were guaranteeing smaller classes." Last year, her daughter had been in a kindergarten at the Osgood School with 28 other children whereas there are 14 children in her first-grade class at the charter school.

Reel also felt that Charlotte "needed to go ahead of her class academically. She was a very good reader in kindergarten and was good in math. It didn't appear that Cohasset wanted to give her more than what was appropriate for a first grader."

At the charter school, Charlotte "is able to be at her own level. She is learning at her own pace," Reel said.

One of tenets of the charter school is that students should "learn at their own pace," said Anderson, who also founded the school.

Several parents also said they liked the fact that the charter school offers project-based learning.

Trisler said project-based learning "teaches kids by applying what they're learning, not (by) rote."

Cohasset parent Angi Walsh said her sixth-grade daughter, Leigh-Anne, is learning grammar and sentence structure at the charter school by taking a writer's workshop, a journalism class, and by writing for a local paper. It's "real-life English composition," she said. Walsh also said her daughter "is excited about going to school," whereas she "wasn't that excited about school" before.

Several charter school parents mentioned that their children were already studying foreign languages even though they were in the early elementary school grades.

Dr. Walter Johnson of Cohasset, who is chairman of the Physics and Engineering Department at Suffolk University, said his son Adam, who is in kindergarten at the charter school, is studying Russian. He could continue to study the language through 12th grade, by which time he should be fluent, Johnson said.

Johnson, who is the charter school's curriculum coordinator, also said students as young as the sixth grade were studying chemistry and physics.

In addition to the school's regular faculty, at least eight faculty from area universities, who have Ph.D.'s, are teaching part-time at the school, he said.

Trisler said he likes the fact that the charter school has a contract for behavior.

"Students can't interfere with the education of another student. They can't disrupt the educational process," he said.

In general, parents said the Cohasset schools were good, but the charter school offered even more of what they wanted for their children.

Anderson said there is not an unusually large number of students from Cohasset at the charter school. He said other South Shore communities also have large numbers of students at the school, such as Marshfield, which has approximately 11, and Scituate, which has approximately 9. There is a total of 150 students enrolled at the charter school.

S.A.F.E. landfill tour was well attended

There was a large turnout of about 50 people at the Environmental Awareness Walk around the Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill Oct. 8. During the walk co-sponsored by S.A.F.E. (Stop Any Further Expansion) and the trustees of reservations, participants walked about a mile through Whitney Woods to a corner of the existing landfill and then, with the permission of CHL owner Paul Barry, who participated in the tour, walked along an access road to the location of the proposed Area V landfill expansion.

"This is where Cohasset Heights is proposing to dump 580,000 tons of garbage and trash for the expansion," said S.A.F.E. member John McNabb, who explained some of the adverse effects of the proposed expansion to the crowd while standing in the excavated Area V.

He explained that the expansion is planned for the dumping of general refuse, which will attract seagulls to again flock overhead and defecate in nearby Lily Pond, and will bring back litter to despoil the adjoining conservation land. He said traffic will increase from tripling the capacity of the facility from 299 to 900 tons per day and will greatly increase odors that will be noticeable in Whitney Woods, along Route 3A and throughout Cohasset.

Accompanying CHL owner Paul Barry on the walk were one of his attorneys, William Connolly, and his engineer, Ray Quinn.

McNabb urged attendees to send in a comment letter to David Struhs of the Department of Environmental Protection before the Oct. 23 deadline and to mention what they saw on the walk. Comments on the pending site assignment application for the proposed Area V expansion should be sent to: Commissioner David Struhs, Dept. of Environmental Protection, One Winter St., 3rd floor, Boston, MA 02108, ATTN: Cohasset Heights Site Assignment Application, Report #106896.

McNabb also outlined other reasons for rejection of the application: "There is no need for this additional landfill capacity according to the 1994 and 1995 updates to DEP's own state Solid Waste Master Plan, which document the fact that there is an overcapacity of landfill space for general refuse in Massachusetts today and through the year 2000."

According to McNabb, "Area V is located in the town's Water Resource District, where landfilling is prohibited, and will potentially contaminate our Sohier Street wellfields, located within 3,000 feet downhill from the expansion, and Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply, located about one mile away."

This press release was prepared by S.A.F.E., a grassroots' citizens group opposed to expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Caring for someone is knowing when to ask for help.

When certain daily routines become difficult for an older person to handle alone — dressing, bathing, preparing a meal or keeping track of medications — that's when it's time to consider assisted living.

At Allerton House, the South Shore's premier assisted living community, our residents and their families know that help is there if they need it, 24 hours a day. Allerton House provides pleasant, private apartments and a host of personal services that emphasize independence, dignity and well being.

Comforting, too, is knowing that Allerton House is managed by Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, a trusted name in senior living services for over 45 years.

Clothing drive slated

The Social Awareness Organization of Cohasset High School will be sponsoring a Clothing Drive to benefit the Pine Street Inn, a Boston shelter for the homeless, from Oct. 23-27.

Men's and women's warm clothing and winter coats are especially needed and may be dropped off at the collection containers at the main entrance and west wing of the high school.

Calendars are here

PSO calendars have been mailed to the homes of all Cohasset students. Any family who has not received a calender or knows of a family new to Cohasset who has not received one, is asked to contact Sarah Markert at 383-6124. The calendar lists school and community events and provides important school information.

School lunch menu

FRIDAY, OCT. 13

Tuna salad on lavish or grilled cheeseburger on roll, carrots, orange wedges.

MONDAY, OCT. 16

Meatball sub or chicken salad sandwich, lettuce, tomato, fruit cup.

TUESDAY, OCT. 17

All menus come with choice of milk: 2 percent, chocolate or whole.

CHS enters contest

"October 13, 1995 will prove to be a one-of-a- kind day as photographers all over the nation document high school life from sun-up until midnight," according to the sponsor of "One Day-America, A Photographic Celebration of Student Life."

Newly hired Cohasset High School photography teacher Eileen Rohrer sees the contest as "a terrific opportunity for my students to become really excited and involved in their work."

The Cohasset Arts Boosters is funding the materials needed for the project.

All photographers published in the special contest, sponsored by Taylor Publishing Company, will be recognized for their achievement.

On Sept. 24, the American Cancer Society held its annual Walk for Breast Cancer in Boston, with more than 15,000 people participating. Five members of the Community Volunteer Service at Cohasset High School were among the thousands of walkers.

Andrea Mercurio, Maureen Murphy, Christine Burns, Liz Kidder and Kristen Moore raised more than $2,500 through pledges donated by friends, family and peers. An additional $150 was collected during both lunch periods a week before the walk and donated in the name of Cohasset High School. The walk brought in more than $1.5 million.

Committee to meet

The Cohasset Health Education Advisory Committee will meet on Monday, Oct. 16, at 7 p.m. at Cohasset High School, Room 206. Any parent or resident interested in promoting health education in the schools is encouraged to attend.

The committee meets about four times per school year. For further information, call Mike Gill, health education coordinator, CHS, at 383-6103.

Remember when Zoe Davis checked out the tiles made by all the 6th graders for the Deer Hill School Art Show last spring? Be sure to stay tuned to the Cohasset Mariner for school news all year long.

CHS Community service/Ron Ford

Clean up at Walden Pond planned

As another school year is off and running at Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School I am excited to tell you about the new Community Service Director position I have been asked to fill. At least once a month I will write an article with the help of students to keep the people of Cohasset informed about the great things our students are volunteering their time for.

One event is a group of students and teachers from Cohasset participating in the City Year Servathon. This is a one-day fundraiser/service project for City Year, Boston's nationally recognized community service program. The project is a cleanup of Walden Pond. If you are interested in sponsoring our group or joining us on a trip, please call Nancy Sulick or Ron Ford at 383-6100.

At the high school we currently have two community service clubs which are up and running. C.V.S. (Community Volunteer Service) is headed up by students Andrea Mercurio and Jarred Batts and teachers Maureen Duffy and Nancy Sulick. The Social Awareness Organization's leaders are student Caitlin Connolly and teacher Scott Newkirk.

Wellness day

Don't you just love those good-old healthy, fun days filled with games and laughter? Well, Saturday, Sept. 23, 10 of the C.V.S. (Community Volunteer Service) students from C.H.S. helped create one of those great days. The day was called "Wellness Day", in which people of all ages could participate. The volunteers taught the Electric Slide to the elders and dressed in bear, skunk and cat costumes for children. Everyone had fun playing with the children and spending time with the grown-ups. All in all, it was a great day.

Family history conference set

The fourth annual Family History Conference will be held Saturday, Oct. 14, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 76 Main St., (Route 140), Foxboro.

Classes include: genealogy basics; the "how, when, where" of family research; using computers and the Personal Ancestral File; probate and deed records; Is your family from the Azores – the hows and wheres of Portuguese-American ancestors; English or Scottish – which are you?; Your ancestors – learning of them from their "paper trail"; memories of the Mayflower Pilgrims; resources at the Mass. state archives; applying modern technology to family history research; how to preserve old and new photographs and papers; having fun at a family reunion; beginning German genealogy and available immigration records.

Barbara M. Delorey, a local writer, lecturer and historical interpreter, will be guest speaker at the conference.

Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m., with a $10 donation charge at the door to cover conference costs, which include a luncheon. To make reservation, call Polly Doggett at 383-1847 in advance.

Come to a 'Secret Garden'

Tickets are now available for the opening night performance of "The Secret Garden" at the Company Theater of Norwell, Accord Park Dr., Nov. 10 at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets, $25 per person, include the performance and a gala cocktail and hors d'oeuvres party with the cast following the performance. To reserve tickets, call 383-6141. Proceeds will benefit the programs of Boy Scout High Adventure Troop 78.

Harvest supper at Beechwood

The Beechwood Congregational Church of Cohasset will hold its annual Harvest Supper and Auction Thursday, Oct. 19, at 6:30 p.m. In keeping with tradition, dinner will include ham (low-sodium, low-fat), cole slaw, mashed potatoes, harvard beets, string beans, a beverage and dessert. The cost is $6.99 for adults, $3.50 for children. Call 383-1298 to make reservations.

'Coffee hour' for tots

St. Anthony's Parish will host a Moms, Pops and Tots "Coffee Hour" on Fridays, from 10:30 to noon, in the Desmond Room, beginning Oct. 20.

Moms and Dads, along with their young children, ages newborn to kindergarten, are invited to take a break from the daily routine to meet and socialize with other parishioners and friends. Toys and light refreshments will be available. For further information call Ginny at 383-0282.

Topiary is the garden topic

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will meet Tuesday, Oct. 24, at St. Stephen's Church, beginning with coffee at 9 a.m.

Betty Brown will present a unique lecture exploring the art of topiary from ancient Rome to the inventive forms of today, presenting architectural fantasies throughout the program.

Costumes program is Oct. 19

The Cohasset Historical Society's Costume Committee will present a special lecture and tea titled "Les Petit Dames de Mode" or "The Little Ladies of Fashion" by designer John R. Burbridge Oct. 19 at 1 p.m. The program will be held at the South Shore Art Center, Ripley Road. Reservations for this unusual event are available for $20 through the Historical Society, and should be made by Oct. 12.

Burbridge, retired senior designer for Priscilla of Boston, is honorary curator of the costume section of the Essex Institute in Salem, has designed and created a modern version of the French fashion dolls that were used by dress designers in the 18th and 19th centuries to display their wares in European courts and later to spread new fashions from France to the United States. The collection of 29" dolls is costumed in exquisite detail. Burbridge's fascinating and informative illustrated lecture provides a glimpse at the style and elegance of a vanished society that was "so grand."

"The wonderful variety of styles and silhouettes within that time span offer – from a designer's point of view – an irresistible challenge," Burbridge said. "Victorian and Edwardian ladies of wealth and position lived in an insulated world quite apart from the real one...surrounded by servants, one assured one's place in the order of things by means of an endless round of social calls and carriage drives, and by the arranging of teas, receptions and dinners."

They "kept an army of dressmakers, ladies' maids, milliners, purveyors of textiles, jewelers, makers of fans, gloves and parasols engaged in a whirlwind of activity to keep Madame and her daughters property turned out for all occasions in fashionable splendor," he said.

Call 383-1434 for more information.

Noted poet speaks tonight

Thursday, Oct. 12, at 7:30 p.m., the Rev. J. Barrie Shepherd will take time out from his Harvard speaking tour to return to Second Congregational Church. He will share poetry and thoughts around the subject of "Soul Vision – The Poetry of Prayer." The Rev. Shepherd is the pastor of The First Presbyterian Church in New York City and has been a guest preacher at several area universities. He has written some 10 books and published over 450 poems, several appearing in such periodicals as "Christian Century," "The Christian Science Monitor," "Christianity Today" and "The New Republic." Barrie is an avid saltwater fisherman and sailor. He enjoys swimming, walking, gardening and music. He and his wife, Mhairi (Mary) have four daughters.

Alzheimer's group to meet

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. will hold a meeting Wednesday, Oct. 25, at 7:30 p.m. at the Thaxter Community Hall, 50 Thaxter St., Hingham.

The meeting will feature attorney William B. Weeks, director of the support group, who will highlight important legal considerations for Alzheimer families and clarify recent developments in estate planning and Medicaid eligibility rules.

ADSGSS meetings are free and open to the public. For further information call 749-5417.

Wildlife Center to host walk

The New England Wildlife Center Teaching Hospital will host its first annual Walk-A-Thon for Wildlife Saturday, Oct. 14 on the Charles River Esplanade.

Clack the Barred Owl, Monty the Burmese Python and other four-, two- and no-legged creatures will join dozens of local crafts people and a projected 500 walkers to raise much-needed funds for the Center. Rain or shine, the walk-a-thon will kick off at the MDC's Lederman Field at 10 a.m., followed by a folk music mini-concert sponsored by 91.9 WUMB.

The event is sponsored by the Metropolitan District Commission, WUMB-FM, the World Society for the Protection of Animals, Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant, Skip Around Town Limousine Service, Brewed Awakenings, Fitts Mill and the Veterinary Corporation of America. Vicki Croke of The Boston Globe's "Animal Beat" will be participating in the walk.

Families, community groups and interested individuals are invited to take part. For further information call 749-5387.

'Creeps by Night' is offered

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is celebrating its 75th year with its presentation, "Creeps by Night," a combination Halloween play and haunted house at Cohasset Town Hall.

The event will be held Friday, Oct. 27, and Saturday, Oct. 28, at 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, Oct. 29, at 5 and 7 p.m. Tickets are $3.

Cape sketches on exhibit

"Cape Cod Sketches, etc.," an art exhibition by local Hingham artists Joan Brancale and Susan Kilmartin, will continue at the Paul Pratt Library through Oct. 31. An opening reception for the artists will be held Friday, Oct. 13, from 6 to 8 p.m.

Joan Brancale, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College and the Tisch School of the Arts at New York University has painted murals on commission locally and continues to focus on her own painting for personal challenge and pleasure.

Susan Richards Kilmartin, a graduate student in art from the University of Maryland, has traveled widely, beginning her career at the age of nine with pencil sketches of fellow students drawn in Cape Town, South Africa, where she was living with her family. She is a board member of the South Shore Art Center and dedicates much of her time to painting murals, which may be found in South Carolina, California, Arizona, Maryland, New York City and throughout Massachusetts.

Museum passes are available

Friends of the Cohasset Library have made available passes to the Museum of Fine Arts, the Boston Children's Museum, the Museum of Science and the New England Aquarium. Lucille McLoughlin has donated passes to Plimoth Plantation. To reserve passes, contact the library.

Buttonwood celebrates poetry

Buttonwood Books & Toys of Cohasset will present a Celebration of Poetry Sunday, Oct. 22, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center, Cohasset. South Shore poets Elizabeth Carter Torrey, Alvah Howe and Judith Page Heitzman will read from their work.

Torrey is a librarian and editor of novels for teenagers and is a member of several poetry clubs.

Howe is director of South Shore Poets and publishes a newsletter for local poets.

Heitzman teaches English at Duxbury High School and published a book of poems that won the 1993 Sandstone Poetry Book Contest.

The complete PBS series "The Language of Life: A Celebration of Poetry will Bill Moyers" on video has been donated by Bantam Doubleday Dell as a bonus gift for a member of the audience.

Admission is free, but reservations are requested. Call Buttonwood at 383-2665 for further information and reservations.

Field hockey team outplays rival in 1-0 loss

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There's absolutely no question Cohasset High field hockey coach Debby Bostwick believes her Skipper squad is a far better team than its 2-6 record would indicate. However, as far as getting a break to go their way goes, the Skippers may just be at the bottom of the South Shore League.

Take Saturday's 1-0 loss to Norwell for example. Playing in front of a legion of fans, who braved a steady drizzle to watch Cohasset play in their first Homecoming Day game in eight years, the Skippers again couldn't put away an opponent they overmatched for nearly the entire game.

Cohasset dominated the Clippers from the start, keeping the ball in their zone for the majority of the first half. Norwell's lone goal came with 15 minutes left to play in the half when Jill McCoy came up with the ball in a scramble in front of the Skippers' net and slammed a shot past netminder Gina Risano. At first the coaches and players thought the goal was ruled no good by the referee because McCoy brought her stick up too high when she took the shot. But the referee declared it to be a legal shot because there was no other player between McCoy and Risano.

Bostwick has become frustrated over the past several games, not of the girls' play, but rather their goal-scoring rut.

"We had the ball 90 percent of the time," said

Girl booters make confident tourney run

By JOE REARDON

The conditions Cohasset and Norwell had to play in during their girls South Shore League girls soccer showdown last Saturday morning was much like the game itself, or at least how it would turn out.

The Skippers' Homecoming Day was wet, windy and chilly. An ugly day to be out, let alone playing in a soccer game.

Cohasset head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark didn't expect a masterpiece in the mud and mire.

"The goal was going to be on a mistake," she said. "It wasn't going to be beautiful. I think it helped that the game was at home because they really wanted to win."

Cohasset's girls got their wish when Kelly O'Donnell came up with the ball at a scramble near the net. She quickly passed it over to Kathleen Fitzgibbons, who found the back of the net, breaking a 0-0 tie and giving the Skippers a huge 1-0 win.

The win improved Cohasset's record to 4-3-2 on the season.

O'Day-Clark knew exactly what her girls would need to accomplish to defeat the Clippers. "We had a tough week," she said. "The only way to beat this team was the to beat them to the ball."

The coach was more confident heading into Norwell than Carver, but the result was still the same. Cohasset

ACL knee injuries strike women athletes

If you're a talented high school female athlete, watch out for your knees.

Over the last few years too many of this area's best young women athletes have suffered serious injuries to their Anterior Crucial Ligament, the key ligament in the operation of the knee.

The ACL horror list includes Norwell High graduate and former state long jump champ Cristin Napier, Silver Lake basketball career scoring leader Amy King (now at Assumption on a hoop scholarship), Silver Lake three-sport standout Tracey Troup (now at Norwich University) Notre Dame Academy's all-time leading scorer Courtney Lawson (now at Penn State on a soccer scholarship) Duxbury High all everything soccer player Jill Maxwell and Hingham High ice hockey player Meghan Maloney (now skating for Middlebury College.)

Injuries are part of the game in athletics, but this trend toward ACL knee injuries for women is alarming. It doesn't matter what sport is played, young women are coming up with ACL tears time after time.

The same cannot be said for knee injuries among young men in athletics as the rate for ACL injuries in males isn't even close to those in women. (Between three and four times as many for women is the latest available statistic.)

And the young women mentioned above often had their ACL injuries occur during routine plays.

King was in the middle of a basketball game last winter at Assumption when she stopped to shoot near the foul line. Her knee gave and down she went. She had to be operated on and missed the rest of her freshman season. She may be back for this her sophomore year. Luckily the injury did not affect her four-year scholarship.

Napier was playing soccer for the [illegible]y Clippers two years ago and was moving downfield when her knee went. At first doctors thought there was a tracking problem with her knee cap. The ACL injury was finally discovered and Napier missed the rest of the soccer season and could not defend her state long jump championship in the spring of her senior year. College track scouts interested in Napier heard of her injury and moved on to other athletes and she did not receive a track scholarship.

Maloney, early in the ice hockey season last year at Middlebury, was training off-ice when she fell and tore her knee apart. She missed the rest of her freshman season and is shooting to be back this winter after a knee operation that left two permanent screws in her left knee.

As for Troup, her injury was the murkiest. She was nursing a sore knee all this summer when she finally had a Magnetic Resonance Imagery test where it was discovered she had a torn ACL. However, she could not pinpoint when the injury happened and will miss her entire freshman sports year.

If you ask the injured athletes and those who coach them, you get different theories about why there are so many ACL injuries happening.

Some say the difference is in bone structure. Women put more strain on their knees because they have wider hips than men. More and more pressure is placed on the ACL until the tiny ligament finally gives out.

This theory has been advanced in several national publications such as Sports Illustrated and has backed by some medical support. (Amy King said she has read so much about knees that she could become a consultant. She thinks there are some inherent differences in knees.)

Others say the ACL injuries happen to everyone in sports, male and female, and point to the NFL and its recent rash of serious knee injuries. This view says the human knee was not designed for the constant stops, starts and strains in athletics and that everyone is a candidate for the disabled list. (Meghan Maloney agrees with this view and said women are no more at risk than men.)

Still there are others who say poor training methods are at fault for the rash of ACL injuries.

Over-training the same muscles at the exclusion of others, not taking an extended break in the off-season or listening to the wrong people are the reasons for the ACL problems, they say.

One South Shore coach put it this way, "Some of the people running camps or whatever in the off-season really don't know what they're doing. They do the same drills, working the same muscle groups and that leads to bad habits and eventually problems. Plus everyone is playing year round these days. You can't keep doing something all the time and not expect a breakdown. Rest is very important to any athlete."

Whatever the reason, ACL's are breaking down all over the place and young women are losing out.

It is important that players, coaches and school officials take this problem seriously and work towards some solutions.

I'm not a doctor (and barely a reporter if you believe some of our readers) but I do know that college scholarships and state titles are at stake and it saddens me when I hear a great athlete has suffered a serious injury to a knee.

More thought should be given to see if these injuries can be prevented.

Congratulations are in order for Marshfield High senior soccer stars Tyla Brennan and Alexa Ricardo.

In addition to being members of the defending Division I state championship soccer team and two of the best midfielders around, this dynamic duo was recognized by their fellow students at Saturday's Homecoming for their charm, looks and overall grace in the voting for the MHS Homecoming Queen.

While Brennan and Ricardo did not take the coveted title of Homecoming Queen (that honor went to cheerleader Paige Enwright) the two were named to the Homecoming court and thrilled Lady Rams soccer fans everywhere with their classy appearance.

Hopefully, the duo isn't through with crowns. I'm sure both Tyla and Alexa could find room for another Division I state crown in a few weeks.

Hanover has its biggest game of the season coming up this Friday night when head coach John Sullivan's squad takes on the powerful East Bridgewater team in a battle of the unbeatens.

The Vikings have looked awfully strong this season, but would be foolish to take the 4-0 Indians lightly. Hanover is solid all the way around and has an offense that can beat you with the pass and run.

Hanover can also put points on the board. In their last two games, the Indians have scored 46 and 29 points, respectively, against Norton and non-league opponent Hingham.

Quarterback Brad Baronas has a fine corps of receivers in Mark Wheeler, Scott MacDonald and Chris Carr. Defensively Rich Goff, Brendan Cronin, Carr, Joe Doolan and Joe Kerrissey have done the job all season. In the 46-0 thrashing of Norton, the Indians' defense held the Lancers to just 14 yards on the ground.

Sullivan has said to win a football game, you must beat the other team in two of three areas: Offense, defense and kicking. Hanover has gotten the better of its opponents in all three this season. The Indians will have to keep up that pace on Friday night. If they do, the Vikings could be looking at loss No. 1.

With the cross country season moving into its last month, coaches are looking very closely at the time difference between their teams' first and fifth runners.

In dual meets, a team is guaranteed victory if its runners sweep the top-three spots. The other way to assure victory is for the five scoring harriers to defeat their individual man on the opposing team. That's why it is important to have five solid runners. I was taught that rule in junior high school and heard it repeated by different coaches right through college.

But why is the time difference important? In the late-season meets where team titles are on the line, the smaller the margin, the better. With up to 200 runners in some high school invitationals, such as the class and state meets, as many as 15 to 30 runners can cross the finish line in a span of 10 seconds. Sometimes more.

The top-five harriers of a good team will finish within one minute of each other. But many championship squads are even closer than that. Some are 45, even 30 seconds apart.

On the International level, the Kenyans are famous for running together in the lead pack throughout a cross country race. And it's very rare for any of them to drop far off the pace by the finish line.

Of course, the local cross country runners can't be expected to run as efficiently as the Kenyans, but their method is a good one to strive for.

Schools just say no to drug testing

Costs, fairness cited for athletes

By DAVID McKEE
Cohasset Mariner

Despite a recent Supreme Court decision that opened the door for high schools to randomly drug test student-athletes, South Shore high schools are not rushing to implement the policy due to concerns over fairness and cost.

A survey of ten area schools shows there is little support for testing and that many school officials are uncomfortable having coaches act as crime fighters.

"Drug testing might be going too far for high school students," said Abington High athletic director Don Tobin. "Going around giving random tests is not the best way to utilize a school's resources."

A majority of the schools surveyed stick with the current Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association's policy whereby a student-athlete is suspended for two games or two weeks if caught using illegal drugs or alcohol.

A second violation calls for a 12-game or 12-week suspension. Schools are allowed to have harsher penalties under came out on top with another close, one-goal game, 2-1.

"I was kind of worried because it wasn't a great day of practice the day before," O'Day-Clark said.

She shouldn't have worrired. Cohasset moved the ball well and got a great performance from netminder Katie Campbell. She finished with 12 saves.

"She had a good summer and went to camp," O'Day-Clark said. "She has been doing really well."

The Skippers got their two goals from freshman Katie O'Neil, her first varsity goal, and Tammy Maitland. Emily Henderson and Megan McNamara were credited with the assists.

Cohasset has improved all season and now must win four of its next six games to qualify for the South Sectional tourney. O'Day-Clark is confident the Skippers can see action in the postseason if they keep up their current play and stay focused on their long-term tourney goal. The team is playing well fundamentally also. They're winning balls, passing better and have become more patient on the field.

"They had a hard week of practice, mentally and physically, but they've done well," she said. "They showed themselves they have it with the win over Norwell.

"We can beat Abington and East Bridgewater (two of this week's opponents) if we play the way we played the other day."

MIAA rules, and some like Cohasset, Abington and Hanover do exceed the MIAA minimum.

However, Tobin admits today's student-athletes may be tempted by illegal drugs or alcohol more than those in previous generations. "It is a problem, there's no doubt about that," he said. "Last year we had more violations than any I can remember. But still I think our current policies should be sufficient."

Tobin said "more than ten but less than twenty" Abington High student-athletes violated the school's policy last year. (Abington High has a suspension of four game or four weeks for first-time violators.)

While not being tested, student-athletes can be found in violation if caught on school grounds or a school-related activity with illegal substances. They are also in violation if caught under the influence of an illegal substance at a school event or if they violate state law, according to the MIAA.

Other area school administrators share Tobin's views that schools are doing as much as they can and that drug testing might not be the answer.

"Drug testing is fraught with peril," said Silver Lake athletic director Ralph Frazier. "First of all it's expensive and secondly, how can you do it and be fair? Right now there are just too many questions."

It costs $125 to process and complete one random urine drug test, according to MIAA Director Dick Neal. Individual schools would be responsible for funding the tests, according to Neal. As it is now, most area schools face a yearly budget crunch for athletic funds and many have turned to athletic user fees to help defray some of the expenses. Extra funds for random drug tests would be hard to find, according to area administrators.

"The cost is something you really have to look at," said Norwell High athletic director Bill Gerety. "I think we are doing as much as we can with this problem but finding even more money for testing would be difficult. I don't know if that policy is workable as it stands."

Hanover High athletic director John Sullivan said schools should focus more on information and awareness and not punishment in regards to alcohol and drug use.

"We're here to educate and not penalize and that applies to our drug and alcohol policy as well," he said. Hanover has a three-game or three week suspension for the first offense. In addition, violators must take part in special classes on substance abuse.

"I think what we have has been very effective," Sullivan said. "You just don't want to throw the kid out on the street. You want them to learn from their mistakes."

Cohasset High suspends a student-athlete for the entire season for a first-time offense. Athletic director Clark Chatterton said the policy has been effective and that the school may do more if the state acts first.

"We've had the policy in place for a while and I think it has been working," he said. "High schools have the same problems the rest of society does. But I don't know if we'd go further unless the state mandates it. We'll have to see."

Holbrook High athletic director Tony Baxter said fairness to the student-athlete is a major reason why there isn't drug testing at HHS.

"Money is the least concern," he said. "Is the testing totally effective? I don't know that. The only way you can truly know is with a blood test and I don't know if we should be doing that even if we had the funds."

Neal said the MIAA does not support random urine drug testing for high school athletes.

"The MIAA has felt it is inappropriate at this level," Neal said. "I think schools can do a lot more for their athletic programs with $125 th[illegible] urine test their athletes."

Neal said the MIAA stresses more information and awareness of illegal drug and alcohol use. "I don't think drug testing should be the primary method of dealing with this issue," he said. "I've always felt that there are better ways to get the message across. Education and awareness are the ways to go."

The MIAA's drug and alcohol policy has been in place for eight years. It covers recreational drugs and alcohol as well as performance enhancing drugs such as steroids.

Random drug testing also sends a bad message to those who want to get involved in sports, according to Neal. "It is an exclusionary policy that is not 100 percent accurate," he said. "We want to have as many students as possible take part in sports. Testing just isn't the right way to go right now."

Bostwick, "but we haven't been able to put it in the net. We've dominated every game. We're setting up well, passing well and moving the ball down the field. We just haven't been able to finish things off.

"They had one lucky shot. That's what seems to have happened the last four or five games."

Cohasset wound up with more shots on net and more corner shots (13) than Norwell (2).

The Skippers did have some ripe chances throughout the game. Lauren Dooley just missed tying the game when she drilled a shot on the Clippers' net, only for it to bounce off the post.

Cohasset's best chance all morning came with 10:30 left in the contest. Katy Menninger muscled her way into the Norwell end and unleashed a strong shot on goal. Clipper netminder Caroline St. Ours, who played a solid game in the Norwell goal, dove to her left side and came up with the save.

Ten minutes earlier Risano kept the Skippers in the game when a Clipper player broke through the defense with no one left to beat but the agile Cohasset netminder. She fired a low shot from 15 yards out, but Risano was right on top of the play and made a tremendous kick save.

As well as they've played this season against the tougher SSL teams like Hull and Hanover, the Skippers have areas they need to work on if they expect to qualify for the Division 3 South Sectional tourney. Bostwick says they have to become more physical heading to the net, while being careful to avoid unnecessary penalties. And though the team has been drawing a number of corner shots, Cohasset has been struggling in capitalizing on them.

As of Saturday, Cohasset had to win six of its final nine games to qualify for the tournament. But whether or not they get in, Bostwick knows the rest of the league looks at the team differently now.

"The other teams used to think playing us was an automatic win," she said. "Now we give teams really good games."

Hingham Institution for Savings opens branch

Cohasset site to open soon

By MARILYN JACKSON
Cohasset Mariner

The Hingham Institution for Savings, with assets of more than $162 million, opened its North Scituate Village branch office at 400 Gannett Road last week.

Assistant vice president Marjorie Young is branch manager. Previously she was the manager of the North Scituate branch of the Cohasset Savings Bank.

And, according to president and chief executive officer Robert H. Gaughen Jr., plans for opening a branch in Cohasset are well underway.

He expects renovations will begin soon for the branch at 12 Elm Street, Cohasset, which s slated for opening in late November or early December.

Both locations formerly housed the Cohasset Savings Bank which was merged with the Shawmut National Corporation of Boston and Hartford last year.

Shawmut sold the two sites to investors in late spring and moved the deposits to its branch in Cohasset Plaza.

The Hingham Institution for Savings, a Massachusetts chartered savings bank, was incorporated in 1834 and is the oldest financial institution headquartered in Hingham.

Its main office is at 55 Main Street, Hingham; two other branches are in South Hingham and Hull.

The bank is publicly traded on NASDAQ under the symbol HIFS.

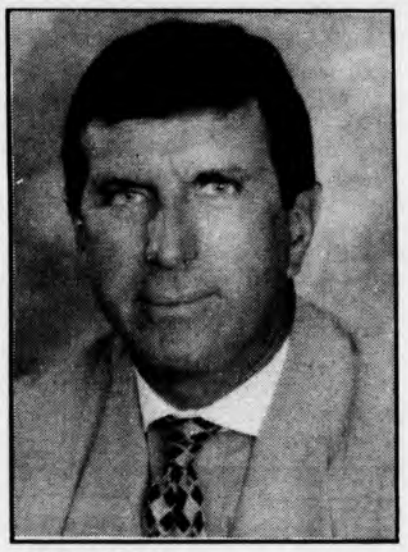
Last week, the bank's directors declared a quarterly cash dividend of $0.07 per share, the same as the previous quarter. The dividend will be paid Oct. 21 to stockholders of record as of Oct. 11.

During the second quarter, the bank originated $7.893 million in loans, bringing net loans to a total of $108.334 million as of June 30, 1995. The third quarter report has not yet been released.

Business Briefs

Cuneo named first chairman

Cohasset resident John Cuneo, president and CEO of the advertising agency, Cuneo Sullivan Dolabany, was named first chairman of the Advertising Club of Greater Boston. He will serve in this capacity through September, 1996.



JOHN CUNEO
Marine Corps veteran

Cuneo has held top management positions with Lockhart Industries in Los Angeles and has held sales and marketing jobs with Harley Davidson Motor Company, Milwaukee.

He is a graduate of Boston College and holds an MBA from the University of Pittsburgh. He is a commissioned officer and decorated Marine Corps veteran as well as past president of the New England Broadcasting Association.

Home buyers seminar offered

Shawmut Bank will sponsor a free Home Buyers Seminar Wednesday, Oct. 18, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. at Tufts Public Library, 46 Broad St., Weymouth. A mortgage specialist, attorney, real estate agent, home inspector and lead paint inspector will be available to answer questions.

September arrests down 50 percent from summer

In his September status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan reported that there were 13 arrests in September down from 28 in August.

Six of the September arrests were for outstanding warrants, three were for protective custody, and one each for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, possession of a Class D drug, violation of a restraining order, and one for a motor vehicle violation. There was one breaking and entering (B&E) at a business reported during the month, Noonan said.

"Another indication of the end of summer was the decrease in our 9-1-1 calls, from 142 in August to only 63 in September," he said.

"The South Shore Music Circus ended its season on August. 31," Noonan said. "During the season there were 41 shows. The police department made a total of two arrests at the Music Circus this summer.

"Both were for protective custody and both resulted from he same incident where people arrived at the show already under the influence of alcohol and were attempting to purchase more," he said.

Noonan reported that two officers received some additional training during the summer. Officer Richard Abbadessa attended a three-day seminar on felony motor vehicle stops. After completing the course, Abbadessa received a certificate and is now certified to train the remainder of the department members on the proper techniques to use during these stops.

"This will not only promote safety but will also reduce liability to the town," Noonan explained.

Last month, officer Lisa Matos attended a conference hosted by Attorney General Scott Harshbarger entitled "Safe Neighborhood Initiative: A Model for Communities in the 1990s and Beyond." Some of the topics included: preventing family and youth violence and community and neighborhood policing. Speakers included Suffolk County District Atty. Ralph Martin, Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and Boston Police Commissioner Paul Evans, Noonan said.

Police log correction noted

Due to incorrect information provided to the Cohasset Mariner, a Sept. 6 incident reported in the police log printed in the Mariner last week was incorrect.

The incident should have said "general services" and not "violation of liquor laws" at Cohasset Imports.

Police explained that when typing the information from the incident card into the police log, a dispatcher inadvertently entered the geographical code instead of the incident code resulting in the Mariner transcribing the wrong information.

Betty Prior pink roses burst through the slats of the white fence at Jim and Rita Kirk's home at 254 South Main Street. Betty Priors are easily recognized by their free-flowering, single rose that has an old-fashioned look about it. Betty Prior won the gold medal at the National Rose Society of Great Britain in 1933. The rose was hybridized by Prior in Great Britain and introduced in 1935 by Jackson & Perkins of New York state. It is a cross between Kirsten Poulsen and an unnamed seedling. Betty Prior makes a lovely addition to any yard, especially when planted as a short hedge.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

THE FINAL MOMENT

QUESTION: I have looked at several homes with my Realtor. I have finally made a mental decision on the particular house I want to buy. What is the next step?

ANSWER: Let your REALTOR handle the actual price negotiations. This is always the toughest and most sensitive part of any home purchase. Your agent is experienced in this type of negotiation. He or she knows both financial positions, and can usually come out with a better arrangement than through personal confrontation between principals. One party will usually be at disadvantage. Not all homes sell at the asking price - but don't ask for the impossible.

Water woes won't dry up

Public hearing is at 7 p.m., Oct. 19

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Recent water problems in Cohasset can be blamed on a combination of natural and man-made situations. While the town has no control over the former, correcting the latter may result in another year of water restrictions.

Water commission chairman Fred Koed explained this week that initially the water ban was imposed due to problems with the town's distribution system: water use in one section of town would result in a significant drop in water pressure that had taps running dry elsewhere.

The rainfall deficit is now at 9.25 inches for the year, after reaching a peak of more than a foot below normal in September.

But, as the town completed the installation of new pipes on Atlantic and Forest avenues, and Beechwood Street, the effect of a year-long drought took over and required continued restrictions into the fall.

The water commission will hold a public hearing at 7 p.m., tonight (Oct. 19) in the town hall auditorium. On the agenda is a full rundown of what's been down to the water system as well as what's to come for next summer.

Distribution improvements will continue next year, Koed said, which may require another round of water restrictions, for the same reasons. In addition, with a reliable water supply to residents served by the recently installed water mains, the usage may also increase.

The ban was imposed for public safety and public health reasons. One part of town cannot be left without adequate water pressure for sanitation and fire protection while residents in another area water their lawns, he explained.

Records compiled by Mariner newspaper weather man Bob Skilling show that precipitation levels have fallen below normal every month this year, with the exception of January. The rainfall deficit is now at 9.25 inches for the year, after reaching a peak of more than a foot below normal in September.

However, the situation is improving, with October's

Pumping station may sink farmer's market plans

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

A local woman who spent hundreds of dollars and countless hours of time setting the stage to open a business in a piece of town-owned property couldn't believe her ears at the selectmen's meeting this week.

"There are so many chiefs running around (in Cohasset government), that no one knows what the troops are doing," said Michelle Goodson of a cooperative that wants to lease the old North Cohasset Fire Station on Hull Street and open a farmer's market at the site.

Goodson first appeared before selectmen in August to say The Ancient Farmers Market Inc. was interested in leasing the structure from the town.

At that time, selectmen voted to allow the market access to evaluate the structure in order to pursue the possibility of renting the building which was also once a post office.

Cohasset woman helps others connect with life

By LAURA RICKETSON DOHERTY
Cohasset Mariner

Sitting in the attractively decorated home of Cohasset resident Joanne Nawn, it's difficult to believe that she once was homeless and disenfranchised from that very society to which she seems so easily to belong.

Prior to her divorce 10 years ago, Nawn's life had been one of mansions, private schools for her children, European shopping trips and country clubs. The drastic change in her "cocoon-like existence" as she, herself, calls it, was, she feels, in large part, the result of an inadequate, male-dominated legal system.

"The judge," she recalls, actually told me, 'You're a pretty little thing. You just go out and find yourself another husband.'"

It was not an easy transition.

"I was at the top and at the bottom," she explains, "and represent a large population of women who have had similar experiences and rose above them.

Benefit walk gets nod

The Southeastern Massachusetts Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society will conduct its annual benefit walk April 13 in Cohasset. The walk starts on Government Island and makes a 10 kilometer loop, according to Robert Bowes, development coordinator for the local chapter of the NMSS. He said about 400 are expected to participate. Selectmen approved the request this week.

Boards have vacancies

Vacancies exist on the following town boards: cemetery study committee (1), Cohasset Common Historic Districts Commission (1), Conservation Commission (1 associate), Call Firefighters Study Committee (3 citizens, 2 firefighters. Please contact the selectmen's office at 383-9900 if you can serve.

Dispatchers' raises on table

At their next meeting, selectmen will consider giving step raises to the town's six civilian dispatchers, all of whom came on board last April. Due to a lengthy agenda of other matters, selectmen tabled discussion on dispatchers' raises this week.

Ball park is a big hit

Selectmen listened approvingly to an update on beautification plans for the Beechwood Ball Park from Mill Lane resident, Nancy Snowdale, this week.

Snowdale said there is about $1,360 in donations to buy about $1,300 in shrubs to provide landscaping by the basketball court and rear of the the baseball backstop. She explained that more donations would be needed to establish a maintenance fund.

Selectmen said tree & park Supt. Peter Laugelle could water the new shrubs and other plantings from a tank from his truck.

Snowdale approached selectmen in April to see about beautifying the park in conjunction with the planned refurbishing of Beechwood Cemetery. At that time she also asked that the park be renamed "Pratt Memorial Park," after the family who donated the land to the town. The renaming project has been delayed until spring, selectmen said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he will ask the cemetery committee to provide selectmen will an update on Beechwood plans before the the Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting.

Hedlund to hold office hours

Hedlund

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) will hold regular local office hours Friday, Oct. 20, from 9 to 11 a.m. in the downstairs meeting room at the Cohasset Town Hall, located at 41 Highland Avenue in Cohasset.

Office hours are an opportunity for constituents to voice their opinions and comments in person without having to travel to the state house. An appointment may be made by calling Kathleen at the Senator's office, 722-1646. Walk-ins are also encouraged.

Zoning bylaws ready

The Cohasset zoning bylaws have been revised and reprinted. They are for sale in the Building Inspector's Office and the Planning Board Office for $10.

Free flu clinics are offered

Two free flu clinics, sponsored by the Social service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health, will be held on Saturday, Oct. 21, and Saturday, Oct. 28, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to those 65 years and older and people with chronic heart and lung conditions. The vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician must evaluate the case. First-time vaccinations only will be available through the clinic.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is providing tetanus vaccine and urging all people who have not had a tetanus booster in the past 10 years to get one at the flu clinic.

All three of the vaccines can be administered simultaneously with little or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further information call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Citizen advisors want back in Greenbush game

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Members of the state appointed Citizens Advisory Committee formed to study Greenbush transportation alternatives told state officials this week that it's time to reconvene the board and put all of the alternatives on the table.

The CAC has not met since February, when after reviewing nine transportation alternatives the board voted 10-to-four to endorse restoration of commuter rail service along the Greenbush line with a short tunnel under Hingham Square.

Several new alternatives, including a guided busway, an abbreviated Greenbush line terminating in North Hingham, and a spur from the Plymouth line into Rockland have been brought to light since June when state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe issued a certificate on the supplemental draft environmental impact report for Greenbush and instructed the MBTA to study further alternatives.

Last month, the MBTA released a feasibility study on a guided busway system for Greenbush but the CAC was not given a chance to comment or review the study.

Want all options put on table

"We read about the study in the paper," said CAC member and South Shore Chamber of Commerce Director Terry Fancher, who maintained that the committee should have been involved in the study.

"We have not been acknowledged as a player since the public hearings," Fancher said.

Acting Co-Chairs since the resignation of CAC member and Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton, Fancher, and Hingham Historical Commission Chairman Alexander Macmillan reminded Coxe of the role the committee that she appointed is supposed to play in reviewing and evaluating proposed alternatives and in making recommendations, and asked that regular monthly meetings with the project proponent (MBTA) resume.

Fancher refuted statements made by T officials suggesting that to reconvene the the committee before the current alternatives have been looked into would be hasty.

"This is not putting the horse before the cart. We need to scope this and get input," Fancher said.

'We read about the (busway) study in the paper.'

— Terry Fancher

"We want to be included. If we're included, the public is included," he added.

Fancher said several members of the group have been pushing for a new CAC meeting because they have been rebuffed by the T.

By drafting a letter to Coxe, Fancher said CAC members hoped to "turn the heat up" on the issue.

Throughout the latest round of transportation studies, Fancher said the "T" should have held public information meetings and or public hearings to get input and should work on concluding the final EIR for Greenbush.

As for the delayed decision making process by state officials, Fancher said "it's a stalling game, to keep them from having to make a decision until after the election."

But the problem with that, Fancher said, is that everyone is getting frustrated.

"They're in hiding," he said. "Questions aren't being answered and people are starting to see blood."

Fancher said the committee is also eager to meet in order to elect a new chairman and and find out if Norton's resignation as chair has been accepted and if he can remain as a member of the CAC despite his resignation.

In the meantime, Fancher noted that each CAC member seemed to be currently "working on their own agendas – going back to their individual constituencies and making things happen."

One-way traffic school plan okayed for Ripley Road

Before and after school

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

For 1/2 hour in the morning and afternoon, a section of Ripley Road from the center of town to Sohier Street will be one way to enhance safety for walkers and those children being dropped off or picked up at the Osgood School, selectmen said.

Selectmen agreed to support a request from school Supt. Stephen Hart that they authorize the one-way traffic flow to improve safety at the beginning and end of the school day.

And in order to enhance the accessibility of public safety vehicles and busses at Osgood, the school department will reconfigure the school's parking lot.

Supt. Hart said he met with Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln on several occasions to discuss safety concerns at Osgood.

"We have made a decision to reconfigure the parking spaces at the rear of the building to better control parking options, thereby improving the traffic flow of busses and other vehicles in the area as well as improving access for public safety vehicles," Hart wrote in a Sept. 28 memo to selectmen.

He explained the request for a one-way traffic flow is from 8:45 to 9:15 a.m. and from 2:50 tp 3:20 p.m. " to coincide with arrival and dismissal times and would only be utilized when school is in attendance."

"With the traffic moving in just one direction in front of the school, we feel that the safety of children as they arrive at school either by foot, bike or by car will be greatly improved, while at the same time causing minimal disruption to the public," Hart said.

The school department will have available portable one-way traffic signs which would be placed at the intersection of Ripley Road and Sohier Street.

In approving the request, selectmen said Monday they would ask the school department to send a flyer home with all Osgood students to alert their parents to the new system.

Suggesting that public input on this new traffic system should be sought first, Selectman Peter Pratt voted against giving the school department the go ahead.

Derby headmaster, rugby players on Pierson

At 8 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 19, host Wigmore Pierson's guest on Pierson to Person is Edward Foley, headmaster at Derby Academy, discussing his tenure at Derby as well as the impact of technology in the classroom and differences between the public school and independent school educational experience.

The second segment guests are four members of the Boston Pitbulls, ranked ninth nationally over 70 wheelchair rugby teams.

The Pierson to Person television show is broadcast live each Thursday, 8 to 9 p.m., from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channel 53 in Hingham and on Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset.

Pumping station may sink farmer's market plans

Goodson later went before the health board, planning board and zoning boards which also gave her the green light.

But that light turned red Monday, when Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said the town must keep the building in case the site needs to be utilized as a pumping station for a possible sewer hook up to Hull.

"It would be wrong for the town to enter into a lease at this time," said Guild, adding that the entire site could be needed depending on which sewer alternative the town pursues.

The town is under a court order to come up with a solution to its inadequate sewer system and must remain flexible, Guild explained. The "Hull alternative" involves hooking all or parts of the town up to the Hull sewer system, in which case a pumping station would be needed.

An incredulous Goodson asked selectmen how this matter could not have been brought to their attention earlier.

Selectmen said they did not think using the old fire station as a potential pumping station was still a viable idea. But Guild said the site had always been under discussion as part of a possible sewer solution.

Goodson, who had hoped to open the store March 15, said she would be prepared to take a five-year lease if need be.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said it is now a business decision for the farmer's market – to weigh the cost of renovations and the amount of time it may be able to lease the site.

"I understand the parcel may be needed. It's a timing situation and therefore a business decision (for the farmer's market)," Doyon said.

The Ancient Farmers Market Inc. would sell organic and locally farmed vegetables, fruits, herbs, flowers and homemade breads.

Guild said Wednesday that he, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown and the sewer engineer would meet at the site today (Oct. 19) to see if anything could be worked out. The town must provide the state with a preferred alternative to solve its sewer problems by May 1, 1996. The new system must be up and running by April 1, 1999.

Reached by telephone Tuesday night, Goodson said in light of the new development she was not optimistic that the cooperative would get the building. She wondered how the plans had progressed with no one bringing the sewer matter to her attention until now.

Goodson said the history and location appealed to her.

"At this point it's really a shame. The building has sat there for 15 years rotting away and we wanted to do something wonderful with that space.

"But I guess Cohasset isn't going to be where we plant our seeds," she said.

Hagerty park plan floated in public forum

Parking for 10 cars, 6 trailers proposed

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

Prior to the start of last week's public hearing of the Hagerty Committee – the town board charged with submitting plans for a waterfront park on the site of the former Cohasset Colonials furniture company at the end of Parker Avenue – board vice chairman Veneta Roebuck hoped that the evening's meeting would be "the final effort" in what has become a lengthy process.

With approximately 50 residents in attendance, the meeting at the Lightkeeper's House on Government Island was a chance for townspeople to voice their opinions concerning recommendations for the town-owned property.

Hagerty Committee members, augmented by Timothy Timmermann of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Ronald Potter from the state Department of Environmental Protection and consultant John Modzelewski, detailed the committee's plans for the site.

Chairman Al Moore explained that the purpose of the committee in designing a waterfront park was "to rescue the harbor from a disaster down the line." The property, which is zoned as industrial, borders a salt marsh and "was an accident waiting to happen," Moore said.

Proposed plans include parking for 10 cars and six boat trailers. With no trailers, 24 cars would fit in the area. Two slots would be set aside for handicap accessibility, and no long-term boat dockage would be allowed.

Beechwood Street resident Wayne Sawchuk questioned the design of such a limited number of parking spaces.

"You shouldn't ask people to build this area and then tell them they have to park elsewhere," he said.

Moore explained that the committee did not want the parking of trailers to eat away at the area so that the park would end up being a small strip of grass.

"The sub-committee's compromise had a lot to do with aesthetics," he said.

Local fisherman Herb Jason and his grandson, Jon Small, offered a proposal drastically limiting a park in favor of more parking spaces.

"People on the mooring list will be waiting until hell freezes over unless we do something," Jason said.

He produced a design showing proposed parking for upwards of 100 cars and a 26-slip marina. His plan, which calls for the filling in of approximately 100 feet of marsh area, would generate an estimated yearly revenue from parking fees amounting to $100,000.

Both Timmermann and Potter told Jason that because current federal and state regulations prohibited the filling in or any wetland areas, his proposal stood little chance of success. They suggested he look to other available upland sites for his purposes.

This response brought forth several comments from residents lambasting the Army Corps of Engineers and the DEP for putting into place what they perceived as regulations against the people of Cohasset.

Selectman Michael Sullivan, in an attempt to bring the hearing back to order, interjected that maybe people were looking at a much larger picture than the property concerned. He reasoned that some residents had lost their scope of the project and were "looking at it globally and not locally."

A Parker Avenue resident, expressing fears over large numbers of vehicles traveling up and down the short, narrow road, asked Moore if any parking/traffic studies had been conducted for the area. Moore said that none had been done.

When asked the cost of the waterfront park, consultant John Modzelewski put the price tag at $200,000, adding that certain alterations could reduce the final total to possibly $150,000. Moore added that the sale of the Hagerty house (the former Cohasset Colonials showroom) could probably offset any expenses incurred with the building of the park. Saying that because town meeting approval is required for the sale of any town-owned property, Moore explained that the sale of the house should be the latter half of a two-fold plan for the property. Because the park area comes first, "we have largely ignored the house," he said.

'Beforehand I was afraid we were going to get into one more session where everyone was going to be a designer.'

Al Moore, Hagerty chairman

As the two-plus hour meeting appeared to be wrapping up and a few residents were making their way to the exit doors, Moore, asking people to put aside their own agendas, requested a show-of-hands straw vote on the project as it had been offered by the committee. The response was two-to-one (20-10) to accept the plan.

Committee chairman Moore was pleased with the evening's turn-out by residents, as well as the meeting in general.

"Beforehand I was afraid we were going to get into one more session where everyone was going to be a designer," Moore said.

Though admitting that he empathized with Jason's frustration, Moore said people needed to understand that "this was not 1935 when you can come in and bulldoze where you want." Adding that until governmental rules and regulations hit home, residents rarely comprehend what local boards must go through to get projects accomplished.

"We're moving in the right direction and we're on the right track," Moore concluded.

Water public hearing is at 7 p.m., Oct. 19 rainfall level finally showing above average accumulation. To date, October rainfall has reached 3.79 inches, as compared to the monthly average of almost 4 inches.

Data kept by the Cohasset water department back up the weather station findings.

Manger Dick Cohan said the Aaron River Reservoir, the source of Cohasset's water, is now 8-feet below normal. Recent rainfall has helped to replenish the level from the season's low point of 12-feet below normal. But, Cohan noted, at this time of year, with normal precipitation, the reservoir should be down only 4-feet from its 23-foot deep capacity.

"This isn't critical," Cohan added. He expects further improvement, if the weather cooperates. A normal amount of autumn rain, followed by average snowfall during the winter months, will restore the reservoir.

What happens next year depends as much on the weather as it does on further improvements in the water distribution system, Koed said.

Underground sprinkler systems that contribute to Cohasset's water woes.

Koed estimates that there are between 50 and 75 residential sprinkler systems, but allowed that it is difficult to know an accurate number since some have been installed without proper permits from the town.

Not only will the water department investigate a higher water rate for sprinklers, but it also wants to look into ways to enforce compliance with the town's permit regulations.

The Massachusetts-American Water Company, based in Hingham, supplies water to approximately 400 North Cohasset customers.

General manager Eileen Commane said that while she cannot isolate the water use of the company's Cohasset customers, her records show that over the last 18 years, the average daily amount of water pumped by the company has actually decreased.

In 1977, she said, the water company pumped, on the average, more than 4 million gallons of water each day. In 1994, the average daily "pumpage" was 3.5 million gallons. So far this year, the amount has been 3.3 million gallons.

As a further comparison, Commane said the average daily pumpage in 1955 was 2.6 million gallons, with fewer customers in both towns.

She attributes the lower water pumpage to two factors: upgrades in the company's water distribution system that has replaced leaking pipes, and more efficient appliances and water-saving fixtures.

Commane noted that an automatic dishwasher is actually more efficient than hand-washing dishes. "Low-flush" toilets installed in new or remodelled homes also use less water, as do water-saver shower fixtures.

Her company is also watching the increase in the number of outdoor sprinkler systems, to see their effect on water consumption.

She said it is too early to tell, but these may provide a water-saving feature. Some systems include sensors buried under the lawn that monitor the moisture content of the soil. When the sensor detects a dry condition, it will turn on the sprinkler and then operate it only until the proper moisture content is restored. This type of sprinkler system could prove more efficient than daily watering by a sprinkler system set to a timer that turns on the water whether it is needed or not.

The Cohasset water department plans the next phase of water distribution improvements in April, 1996, with new pipes laid on Sohier, Cedar, Pleasant, Beach, and Pond streets and parts of Jerusalem Road.

Alzheimer's program offered

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Council on Aging is sponsoring an Alzheimer's Program Wednesday, Nov. 8, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., at the Cohasset Senior Center in the South Shore Community Center. The event is in honor of Alzheimer's Month.

Carolyn Housman, LICSW, of the Hingham Visiting Nurse Alzheimer's program, will be the guest speaker. Following the showing of "Complaints of a Dutiful Daughter," the powerful video that has been nominated for an Academy Award for Best Documentary, Housman will moderate a discussion and provide information on the disease and its effect on loved ones.

All are welcome to attend, including caretakers and those who wish to become better educated on the subject. Admission is free and refreshments will be served.

'Coffee hour' for tots begining Oct. 20

St. Anthony's Parish will host a Moms, Pops and Tots "Coffee Hour" on Fridays, from 10:30 to noon, in the Desmond Room, beginning Oct. 20.

Moms and Dads, along with their young children, ages newborn to kindergarten, are invited to take a break from the daily routine to meet and socialize with other parishioners and friends. Toys and light refreshments will be available. For further information call Ginny at 383-0282.

Leaf rakers are ready

Are falling leaves piling up in your yard and walkway? The Appalachian Service Project of Cohasset has teen-age volunteer teams available to do leaf raking jobs during the weekends of Oct. 28 and 29, Nov. 4 and 5 and 11 and 12.

Call Ami Argus, 383-9325 to schedule a team to help rake leaves. The cost is reasonable and will be determined by the size of the job.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Call Ami Argus at 383-9325 to schedule a raking

Kit and Sue Megathlin were here for a surprise visit this weekend, and they are wonderful! They are still living in Portland, Maine, and are the grandparents of three handsome-looking boys (there are still no girls on the Megathlin side of the family). It is so nice when old friends come to visit — and they loved seeing their hometown again! There is something very special about Cohasset. And, they said to be sure to say hello to all of their friends.

Speaking of Maine, Ken, Sue and "Pop" Fone have all left here to live there — they left last week. It's hard to imagine this town without them, what a super group. We certainly wish them the best, Cohasset's loss is surely Maine's gain. They do promise to come back often (if they can bare to leave their nifty new house that they just completed building), we will let you know when and what they are doing.

Jen Cellucci was one lucky young lady recently, she was part of the contingent from Notre Dame Academy to go to see the Pope in Central Park! Needless to say she was in awe of him and the whole experience, be sure to ask her all about it!

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Cliff Jones!

Boston University awarded academic degrees to 1,007 students this fall. Receiving degrees were Cohasset residents Jennifer L. Goldstein, masters in biology; and Hadley A. Igo, E.D.M. in reading education. Congratulations go to both of you, and we wish you well in your search for a prosperous future.

Tyara and Anthony Martin-Goffigan wish to congratulate their mother, Pamela, on graduating summa cum laude. Pamela received her BS degree in nursing from UMass/Boston, Sept. 1.

If the leaves that are falling so rapidly are getting you down, here is the perfect solution! The Appalachia Service Project has teenage volunteer teams available to do your raking during the weekends of Oct. 28 and 29, Nov. 4 and 5 and 11 and 12. You can call Ami Argus at 383-9325 to schedule a team to do all of your back-breaking raking. The price of the job will depend on the size of it (guaranteed to be reasonable of course) and then you will be helping them to continue their most worthy trip!

We must congratulate the Community Garden Club of Cohasset, you know that wonderful garden that they all helped to plant at the Lighthouse Leeper's cottage — well, they were awarded the Cornelia Williamson Watson Bowl for lasting benefit to the community in historic preservation. An honor indeed, and a well deserved one! We all benefit — it is a beautiful sight to behold!

This Saturday (the 21st) and next (the 28th), the Social Service League is offering two free flu clinics. They will be held from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. Pneumonia vaccines will also be available (to those 65 or older) as will tetanus vaccines (for those who have not had a booster in the past ten years). All three can be given at the same time, and there are little or no side effects. Be sure to take advantage of this.

Lots of you remember Phil Pisano, the former football coach at Cohasset High School for many years. Well, he is recovering from a blocked artery (leading to his heart) and the "balloon surgery" that followed. Hopefully he is at home as this goes to press, he is a one-in-a-million man! Its hard to imagine a football game without Phil at the helm — he certainly is responsible for sending a lot of young men down the right path of life!

Cohasset High School's Social Awareness Organization will sponsor a clothing drive next week (Oct. 23-27), and the clothes will be sent to the Pine Street Inn. Warm winter clothing is what they are looking for, specifically winter coats, sweaters, etc. There will be containers for collection at the main entrance and at the West Wing of the high school. Many people will benefit, and be grateful for your donation!

Finally, don't forget the annual Harvest Supper held by the Beechwood Congregational Church that will be held tonight (the 19th) at 6:30 p.m. The tradition continues as they serve ham, cole slaw, mashed potatoes, harvard beets, string beans, a beverage and dessert. What a meal! It will be $6.99 for adults and $3.50 for tots. Have fun, and plan on a full tummy!

That's it for this week, please call me with your latest news.

Topiary is the garden topic

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will meet Tuesday, Oct. 24, at St. Stephen's Church, beginning with coffee at 9 a.m.

Betty Brown will present a unique lecture exploring the art of topiary from ancient Rome to the inventive forms of today, presenting architectural fantasies throughout the program.

The South Shore's hometown bank has a new home in Scituate.

We've been helping South Shore residents with their banking needs since 1834. Now we have a new home in Scituate. We're located at 400 Gannett Road in North Scituate, the site of the former Cohasset Savings Bank branch.

If you step inside, you'll find friendly, helpful people and personal service. The kind of service you just don't get from those big Boston banks.

You'll also find a 24 hour ATM, plenty of safe deposit boxes, and a night depository.

If you step inside soon, you'll find out about our free offer for stadium blankets and canvas tote bags for qualified depositors.

As a locally owned community bank, it's our goal to provide you with quality financial products and superior service. Your deposits help us provide loans for the families and businesses right here on the South Shore. Call us at 544-1200. Or stop by our newest location at 400 Gannett Road. Obituaries

Byron G. Tosi

Legend in wine industry

Byron G. Tosi, 84, died Oct. 10 at Overlook Hospital, Summit, N.J.

Mr. Tosi was known internationally as a legend in the wine and spirits industry.

A native of New York City, he was educated in Milan, Italy and Buenos Aires, Argentina, before his family settled in Boston. His father, the late Humbert Federico Tosi, a native of Bologna, Italy, had spent many years working as a "pioneer" and foreign representative of the Thomas A. Edison Company, with offices in Milan, Italy. His late mother, Luisa Ardizzoni Tosi of Bologna, was an opera star.

Mr. Tosi received his degree from Northeastern University and attended courses in special studies in international commerce at Harvard Graduate School of Business. He received an honorary doctor of law degree from Marymount College, Tarrytown, N.Y., in 1975, where he had served on the board of trustees for 12 years and as its chairman from 1972-74.

His distinguished career in the wine and spirits industry began in Boston with Pastene & Co. In 1948, he was named vice president of marketing of W.A. Taylor & Co., a division of Hiram Walker Distillers. From 1958 to 1966, he served as president of Browne-Vintners Co., the import division of Jos. E. Seagram & Sons. In 1967, he was elected president of the Jos. Garneau Co., the import division of Brown-Forman Distillers. In 1975, Mr. Tosi and his son Byron Jr. founded Vinos Argentinos Imports U.S.A. and Tosi Vintners International. His most recent affiliation in the industry was as chairman of Byron Tosi, S.A., a division of Palm Bay Imports.

A leader and innovator in the industry, Mr. Tosi led directorships and chairmanships in the National Association of Alcoholic Beverage Importers, Inc.; the Cognac and Champagne Committees of the NAABI; Casa Vinicola Barone Ricasoli, Florence, Italy; Barton and Guestier, Bordeaux, France; G.H. Mumm and Cie, Rheims, France; the Argentine Chamber of Commerce; and the American Society of Sommeliers. He also served as board chairman of the New York Importers and Distillers Association. He had also been vice-chairman of the Metropolitan Opera in Boston.

Mr. Tosi was a recognized authority on wine and was elected as a Chevalier du Tastevin and was also a Chevalier of the Chaine des Rotisseurs.

Past decorations include the citation of Chevalier de L'Economie National from the French Government in 1966. He had been decorated by the Vatican as a Knight of Malta and a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre.

Mr. Tosi was a member of the Metropolitan Club of New York, where he served as a Governor.

He leaves his second wife, Jacqueline Alexander of Short Hills, N.J. and two children by his first wife, Palmyna Albre Tosi, L.G.C.H.S., of Boston and Cohasset, from whom he was divorced; his daughter, Pamela Tosi Hodgkins of Deerfield and Cohasset; his son, Byron G. Tosi Jr. of Washington, D.C. and Cohasset; five grandchildren and 10 nieces and nephews.

He also leaves three brothers, Carlos H. of Boston; Renzo A. of Millbrae, Calif., and Ernest A. of Braintree.

A Mass of Christian Burial was celebrated at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York City, Oct. 13, with burial in New Jersey.

Edward T. Dillon

Cohasset High custodian

Edward T. Dillon, 79, of Braintree, died Oct. 6 at Braintree Manor Nursing Home.

He was a custodian at Cohasset High School for years, having previously been employed as a sheet metal worker for 10 years at the former Fore River Shipyard in Quincy and had worked on the museum ship, the U.S.S. Salem. Mr. Dillon also worked 18 years in cigarette sales for the former H.E. Shaw's Co. in Worcester.

Born, raised and educated in Quincy, he had lived in Braintree since 1948.

Mr. Dillon was the husband of Ellen A. (Hickey) Dillon and leaves a son, Edward T. Dillon III of Fairhaven; two daughters, Brenda A. Kearney of Pembroke and Andrea M. Stevenson of Weymouth; a brother and sister, Francis "Ray" Dillon of Quincy and Margaret Small of Braintree; nine grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Oct. 10 in St. Thomas More Church. Burial was in Pine Hill Cemetery, West Quincy.

Arrangements were by the Sweeney Brothers Home for Funerals.

Donations in his memory may be made to the South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, 100 Bay State Dr., Braintree 02184.

PUBLIC MEETING ON PROPOSED NEW SEWER RATE SCHEDULE

Wednesday, October 25, 1995
at 7:30 p.m.
Town Office Building
(Conference Room on Floor 2B)

This public meeting is being held to explain and answer questions on a proposed new sewer rate schedule.

Both sewer users and all taxpayers would be affected by the new rate schedule because a portion of the sewer system's operation and maintenance costs are subsidized by the general tax levy. The balance is paid by the sewer users.

EDITORIAL

'We have voices, they do not'

We are grateful to Althea Griffin, the president of the South Shore Humane Society, for alerting us to very disturbing news.

For the first time in 22 years, leghold traps will be legal on land effective November 1, because of a recent Supreme Judicial Court decision which upheld a regulation permitting use of the padded leghold trap.

Use of the trap, which slams shut on the leg of its victim, causing injury and suffering, had previously been restricted to placement in water and under buildings, according to Aaron Medlock, coordinator of Protect Pets And Wildlife (ProPAW).

"It is appalling to know that barbaric leghold traps can be legally set on your private land without your permission, putting children and pets at the risk of harm or entrapment, and you do not have the right to remove or touch them," says Griffin.

Medlock adds, "Pet owners should be especially careful when walking their dogs or letting their cats out this November, since numerous pets have been injured by these traps. Landowners should be alerted that unless they properly post their land, trappers can place an unlimited number of these traps without obtaining permission and notifying the landowner."

During a recent Humane Society meeting at the Thayer Public Library in Braintree, a ProPAW representative explained the initiative petition filed with state Attorney General Scott Harshbarger. The idea is to place a wildlife protection measure before voters in next year's election.

Coordinated by ProPAW, a broad coaltion of groups including the Humane Society of the United States and the Massachusetts Audubon Society, this petition would prohibit cruel traps, end the chasing and hunting of bear and bobcats with dogs, and eliminate the statutory requirement that hunters and trappers control the Fish and Wildlife Board.

This board now consists of seven members appointed by the governor, five of whom must have held a sporting license in the state for at least five consecutive years.

"Sportsmen may deserve a fair voice on the board, but so do the majority of citizens who appreciate wildlife in other ways other than hunting or trapping," says Madlock.

Griffin declares, "It's about time that our defense against cruelty to animals should come to the fore. We have voices, they do not." We agree with her.

As the first step in qualifying for the 1996 ballot, ProPAW must gather the certified signatures of 65,000 registered voters by November 22. Volunteers will be seen on the South Shore during the coming weeks to gather the required signatures for this initiative petition.

New volunteers can contact ProPAW for official petitions and guidelines by calling 773-7558, sending a fax to 773-4495, or writing to 1050 Hancock Street, Quincy, MA 02169.

We encourage citizens to participate in this worthy campaign. Cruelty to animals can never be justified in the name of "sport."

An O. J. Retrospective

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pro-train group 'misuses' statistics

To the Editor:

I read Alice Coyle's Oct. 12 article which claimed that "Rail supporters statistics show most want the train" with amazement. While I applaud your inclusion of both points of view in the article, I remain concerned over the continued misuse of statistics by the Back on Track group. They simply are making egregious claims with mis-read statistics as their proof. I'll make a few obvious pointers about the "compelling facts and figures" you speak of by responding to quotations from your article:

• "Kinsella's graphs and statistics include results from both the 1991 referendums and the 1995 meeting votes." Let's get this straight now. Is he using statistics from four years ago to prove a point today? Well, I guess that means U.S. voters will reelect Clinton as president in 1996! Much has changed in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate over the past four years. The town voting this year proved that fair and square.

• "The anti-rail vote in all three towns made up a very small portion of the registered voters." Yes, the overall turnout for the three towns combined this year was only 19 percent of registered voters, but the sample number of voters was significant and random: two key requirements as an excellent barometer for public opinion. Typically Nielson ratings and presidential polls include small samples as a representation of the population, but are extensively relied upon by executives and public officials. By the way, how does this percentage turnout compare to the percentage of townspeople who vote for our elected officials?

• "Kinsella's statistics also included a list of organizations that endorse the Greenbush restoration" (AAA, Greenpeace, Mass. Audubon, Sierra Club). Frankly, so what! They don't live here. The voters who voted against the train by a clear majority do.

• "You should restore Greenbush because it's the right thing to do." What does this mean – financially right, morally right, politically right?

The nice thing about last week's editorials is that the Back on Track group and the Coastal Coalition agree on something! We both don't want the busway. Good work Mr. Grimes! The Coastal Coalition, however, does wish to see alternative train or transportation alternatives that do not present the multitude of complications that the present Greenbush restoration proposal carries. We look forward to the continued analysis of such proposals and to the recently announced expansion and modernization of ferry services.

A concert for all ages

Force Productions, a local production company, will hold a concert for all ages Friday, Oct. 27, at the Sons of Italy Hall, East Weymouth, beginning at 6 p.m. The show will feature local bands, including Fun in the Kitchen, The Lucky Charms, The Unseen and J-Base. There will be dancing and Halloween-oriented activities, including door prizes for best costumes, apple-bobbing and other games.

Many different musical genres will be represented: Cohasset's Fun in the Kitchen will bring punk, funk and hip-hop to the stage; the Lucky Charms, from Hull, who are currently number one on WFNX's local music show, "Boston Rocks," will present their surf-funk California-style sounds; Hingham's Unseen will offer heavy chords with a straight-up, punk hard-core set; Plymouth's J-Base is a funky hard-core ensemble complete with turntables and two MCs.

The cost is $5 at the door, with proceeds to benefit the construction of the new skate park in Scituate. For further information about the show, call Kevin O'Donnell, 824-7680. For directions, call 335-9820.

SAFE to host landfill talk

To the Editor:

S.A.F.E. has invited former Governor's Councilor Michael Murphy to speak at the First Parish House, 23 N. Main Street Sunday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 p.m. He will discuss the struggle in Canton and Randolph with the huge landfill adjacent to Route 24. Please attend.

The status of the opposition to the expansion of the Cohasset Height's Landfill will also be discussed. The meeting will be over by 9 p.m.

Comments from this meeting will be forwarded to Department of Environmental Protection, Commissioner David Struhs for review.

Students to show life through their own eyes

Curtain rises Oct. 27 & 28

There is a huge amount of pride felt when using an object handmade for one's own use; that same feeling of pride is being felt by the members of the Cohasset Drama Workshop as they prepare their handmade and homemade production, "Through Our Eyes," for public display Oct. 27 and 28 at Cohasset High School. Every Wednesday evening this summer a group of Cohasset students met to develop their own script for this play.

As a reaction to what they felt were inaccurate, melodramatic, or outdated attempts to express what goes on in the minds of high school students today, they have managed to dig into the experiences of their peers both in Cohasset and in other locales and present them fictionally through monologues and short scenes. These have been written, critiqued, and rewritten many times in an attempt to present a more accurate impression of the contemporary adolescent experience than that found in print and on the stage and screen today.

The project began with the director's frustration in seeking an opening play for the new school year and with his disappointment at the termination of a play development program which he directed at a private school for the past ten summers.

"I was looking for something that would start the new school year off on a positive track," Emmons says.

He asked Alli Ritts, who was going to be a senior in the fall, how she would feel about trying to organize a group of students to write and critique short dramatic pieces that showed what they and their friends were dealing with.

"I knew Alli was heading off to work in the Appalachia Service Project for a while, but she was extremely interested, so we set a first meeting date and Alli said she would make some calls. When July 5 rolled around, I came in not knowing what to expect, but it took only half an hour to realize that this was going to work. Because of vacation plans and other commitments, the members of the project varied from week to week, but there was not a single week that I did not feel we were making progress. What I tried to do was let everybody know that they were helping through their reading and critiquing even when they feel blocked in terms of writing. I didn't want anyone to feel guilty if he or she had trouble getting the words on paper."

Emmons is quick to point out that this is a work of fiction and that specific situations may or may not apply to Cohasset.

'Our intent is not to deny credit but, instead, to spread it around. To say that I am pleased with the results of our work would be a gross understatement.'

— Ron Emmons

"These are honest words written not to criticize or belittle, but to say that this is the way it is among young people and to ask if this is the way it should be. We have attempted to avoid being judgmental of our characters. Instead, we have simply tried to let the audience hear their words."

He hopes that the audience will listen as openly as the authors have written and not spend their time trying to find specific counterparts for characters in the play.

In the words of one of the play's authors, "We are supposedly the lost generation. Maybe some of us are lost, but finding the way could be made a lot easier if people offered more guidance than criticisms. They may not like us now but the future of this country lies in our hands. So maybe it's time to turn off all the TV's, put stereotypes on the shelf, and try to see things through our eyes."

Authorship of specific pieces is not noted, for the students and Emmons felt all along that this should be a collaborative effort. Sometimes a piece began with one writer and was reworked by another; sometimes a monologue became a scene in rehearsal.

"Our intent is not to deny credit but, instead, to spread it around. To say that I am pleased with the results of our work would be a gross understatement."

Appearing in the play will be authors Alex Creighton, Mike Dunphy, Conor Mangan, Meredith O'Hayre, Meg O'Sullivan, Allison Ritts, Laura Slotnick and Kelly Tufts. Most of these students will not perform the material that they have written so that they can observe and react to the performance of their speeches by other students.

Rounding out the cast are Jen Chastain, Grace Deveney, Jane Flaherty, Jared Hardwick, Jessica Hurley, Bree McKenney, Ron Niczynski, Trisha Petersen, and Mark Whitman.

Additional material has been contributed by CHS student Jim O'Sullivan, by CHS graduate Scott Moe, as well as by the director.

"I was held to the same critiquing and editing arrangement as the others, so one of my first speeches was the first to go, displaced by a far better one written by Laura and Alli," Emmons says.

Katie Anderson will serve as stage manager for the production and be assisted by Faye Menis. Working lights will be Tony Bramblett and Alan Marcus. Lending their voices off-stage for one of the scenes will be Lauren Cassino and Emily Henderson.

The director hopes for a large show of support from the Cohasset High School student body.

"I have always been pleased with the number of people from the community who come to our shows, but the turn-out of students has been a bit depressing," Emmons says. "Here is a chance for CHS students to support their peers in a work written by and about people their own age. I also hope many parents will join, come and listen carefully to what is being said to us."

"Through Our Eyes" will be presented Friday, Oct. 27, and Saturday, Oct. 28, at 8 p.m. in the high school auditorium. Tickets will be sold only at the door.

Report of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee

By RICHARD SILVIA
Special to the Mariner

Since 1994, the Town of Cohasset School Facilities Committee has been studying the school system to address the facility needs at the existing three schools (Osgood, Deer Hill and Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School) to provide upgraded facilities that support the educational needs for the 21st Century and to provide future space needs for the increasing student population. The three school buildings which make up the Cohasset Public Schools' physical plant range in age from 45 to 70 years have served the Town well but are now in need of renovation, expansion or replacement.

Over the past several years, the growing enrollment and the educational needs of our elementary students have necessitated various short-term solutions. Optimum class sizes have been exceeded, and at the Osgood School, the art and music room has been converted to classroom space because of surging enrollment. The Osgood School no longer has core facilities to serve as school gathering space or a cafeteria, and the gymnasium is inadequate in size to accommodate the athletic/recreational curriculum. Choices have been practical responses to the realities of the increased current enrollment housed within the existing available facilities. But, we are all aware that these choices are compromises. Increasingly, the "space" problem is becoming an educational problem. Our facilities are limiting our ability to effectively offer the minimum curriculum and personalized instruction that our students need.

In August of 1995, the architectural firm of Earl R. Flansburgh & Associates, Inc., a Boston-based design firm specializing in the planning and design of public schools was engaged by the Cohasset School Facilities Committee to prepare a School Facilities Study to determine the needs of our school system and modifications that would be required to improve our schools to meet current educational and technological needs of our students and to provide the capacity for our current and growing student enrollment.

The purpose of the study is to determine the needs of the school system and to develop a comprehensive renovation/new construction program that will satisfy the school system's educational needs.

The study is being undertaken at this time to enable proposed solutions to be designed in order to take advantage of the current state funding available for school construction. The Town of Cohasset is eligible for 60% reimbursement, if it meets the Massachusetts State Board of Education's deadline for submission of plans by June 1, 1996.

The scope of the facilities study includes a comprehensive existing conditions report of all three school buildings and sites; a space needs inventory; a space need assessment based on the current state educational standards, current building codes or life safety requirements and federal and state accessibility regulations for disabled persons; and the preparation of viable options with cost estimates to renovate and expand the existing facilities. Further, the study includes the development of options and costs for the construction of a new school building on town-owned property.

The architectural facilities study has confirmed that our present capacity in the Pre-K-6 grades is inadequate to serve the educational needs of our current student population and is substantially below minimum state standards. In addition, in each of the Cohasset Public Schools there are deficiencies in site, classroom size, equipment, technology access and educational core space to accommodate instructional requirements for 21st century education. Perhaps the study's most important finding is that the 70-year old Osgood School is no longer considered to be a viable educational facility based on current state educational standards. The Massachusetts Department of Education has informed the Town of Cohasset that it will not provide funding for any improvements at the Osgood School or on its four-acre site. The study has also determined that the Junior/Senior High School has adequate facilities to meet the system's needs through 2005.

At the upcoming Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting, the members of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee will introduce the findings of the study and present several options involving renovations and/or new construction to our existing schools to meet our long term educational needs. Voters will be asked to support additional funds to further investigate these options to determine the most comprehensive and economically realistic approach to meeting the educational needs of the Cohasset Public Schools.

SCHOOL OPEN HOUSES

To learn more about our school needs, residents of the Town of Cohasset are invited to join the members of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee and representatives of the Earl R. Flansburgh & Associates, Inc. architectural firm at a series of informational meetings. A presentation on the existing conditions and the needs of our elementary schools, a tour of each school and a question and answer session are scheduled:

Adversity spurred climb up 'ladder of fulfillment'

"There is so much of this today," she continues, "that it's become a universal problem – women in midlife with children who find themselves abandoned."

A strong believer in the adage that everything happens for a reason, Nawn feels that her experience has provided just one more push up the ladder of fulfillment.

"You take what you're given and make lemonade," she emphasizes. "Using what comes your way – that's what gets you through life."

It's obvious that Nawn has an incredibly strong belief system which not only has affected her but also the large numbers of people with whom she comes in contact. As director of Support Services for the Quincy Housing Authority, she has provided case management skills for clients in the 900 elderly and 616 family units for the past 10 years.

Many members of the elder population are aging in place, explains Nawn. Having entered public housing in their 60s, they are now in their 80s. Their health is failing. Some die without their families either because they have been abandoned or have outlived them. Often, there is a sense of isolation.

Nawn uses her experience and expertise to help these clients make the necessary transitions such as to nursing homes or hospitals. A large amount of her time is spent on boards in order to make connections with provider agencies that may be able to assist. One such agency is the South Shore Elder Services.

JOANNE NAWN

These clients represent two ends of the spectrum, she continues. On the one, are those with no social connectors. Their hope is gone. They no longer believe that life will present them with positive aspects such as friendship and family. On the other, there are seniors that are actively involved with social events in their buildings. They join in on bingo, line dancing, coffee hours and excursions.

One group has strong connections to life, the other doesn't, she concludes. Many of these connections have been the result of programs developed by Nawn in order to break the isolation which she initially saw.

Helping families in need is another responsibility. Nawn underlines that there are many intact, functioning working families in public housing. Because her work primarily deals with crisis management, she rarely gets to work with them except perhaps on job skills. Most of her clients are single female heads of families.

Referring to her own past experiences, she says, "I had the skills to work my way out. I want to give them the same tools.

"I have the heartfelt knowledge of what it feels like to be alone raising children in a culture that doesn't support that."

In addition to dealing with issues such as welfare, job skills training, Department of Social Services involvement and neighborhood disputes, Nawn plans informational programs for the families in her community.

As a part of a concerted effort to include the Asian population which at 16 percent of the total population has been rapidly increasing, she has put together a conference, later, this month, which will address cultural differences in the Asian family. Dr. Susan Weld will be guest speaker.

Funding has always been of primary importance. Writing in cooperation with other agencies, Nawn has succeeded in bringing in $4 million in grants over the past 10 years. She is excited about the changing concept in funding with a focus on community block grants. All agencies, she notes, will have to form consortiums to appeal for money.

"Working with other agencies, I've always felt, I get a broader scope of programs for clients."

Currently, Nawn is in the fifth year of a doctoral program at Northeastern University. She is working toward an inter-departmental degree in law, policy and society in one of the very few programs of this kind in the country. The focus of her dissertation is based on her belief that in order to raise families above the poverty line, the focus should not only be on providing the necessary job skills but also a working knowledge of the broader culture around them.

In her programs, heads of

Caring for someone is knowing when to ask for help.

When certain daily routines become difficult for an older person to handle alone — dressing, bathing, preparing a meal or keeping track of medications — that's when it's time to consider assisted living.

At Allerton House, the South Shore's premier assisted living community, our residents and their families know that help is there if they need it, 24 hours a day. Allerton House provides pleasant, private apartments and a host of personal services that emphasize independence, dignity and well being.

Comforting, too, is knowing that Allerton House is managed by Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, a trusted name in senior living services for over 45 years.

Halloween fun for all ages

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School will host its annual Funraiser, the Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common, Sunday, Oct. 29, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. In case of rain, the event will be held inside the Community Center.

Children of all ages will gather in their Halloween costumes to participate in the traditional costume parade, followed by activities that will include games, cupcake decorating, donuts on a string, face painting, three-legged and pumpkin races, "ghost-ball" and a "moonwalk." Every child will leave each game with a prize. Balloons and refreshments will be available.

Pumpkins of all kinds may be decorated for the Pumpkin Contest and dropped off at the Common at 1 p.m. Pumpkins will be judged in many categories, with each one sure to be a winner.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the fair, four for $1. Most games will require two tickets, most activities, three tickets. Everyone is welcome to attend.

Halloween family day at SSCC

Halloween, traditionally a time of treats for children, will have an adult focus at the South Shore Community Center this year. A Family Day for parents and children is set for Oct.28 from 2:30 to 9 p.m.

Treats for children include a monstrous scavenger hunt, a best-worst costume contest, ghoulish games, pumpkin carving, Halloween refreshments, frightening face painting and a Haunted House of Horrors.

For adults, lunch will include famous Thriller Chili, Boris Karlof Pizza, Chilling Chicken and Howling Ham Salad, prepared especially by Frankenstein's bride. The day's festivities include a special spooky room to view the Notre Dame BC game and a dance in the evening featuring Cohasset's favorite band, the Grateful Dads.

The day is sponsored by the South Shore Community Center, the Cohasset Education Foundation and Gems of Hope, an organization committed to helping needy families in countries around the world.

For further information call the SSCC at 383-0088 or Janice Crowley at 383-6136.

families are introduced to art, music, literature, dance, social skills and fashion.

"I can get anyone a good-paying job but they will quit if they don't have a comfort zone in the culture....They're on the outside looking in."

She points to the Transitional Housing Demonstration Project which she designed and implemented. The goal was to break the pattern of homelessness. Much of its success was due, Nawn states, to the enrichment experiences she built into it.

Her philosophy is not universally accepted.

"I've been criticized for being a bleeding heart liberal, " she admits, "but you can't move out of one class system into another without the necessary tools. And, these tools can be learned and utilized."

'I have the heartfelt knowledge of what it feels like to be alone raising children in a culture that doesn't support that.'
Joanne Nawn

Returning to school at an age when many others are planning retirement was not a difficult decision for Nawn. "I love learning and being with young open minds."

She says she has never felt an age difference.

"I've always been treated as one of the guys."

In the future she would like to have a voice in social welfare public policy. She believes that there are compartments in our lives needing to be filled – the family, work and the community.

In raising her children, she has tried to make them aware of the responsibilities of the place they find themselves in at any given time. Most of her five children are connected to Wall Street. A family saying is, "we can make money because mom is taking care of the rest of the world."

Nawn sees the responsibilities of her work as more of a challenge than a problem. Some have called her a role model, others a survivor.

"It's very satisfying to be able to look back and say, 'I made a difference in people's lives,' " she concludes.

We waited until we thought Mom was ready. Now she wishes she had made the move sooner.

Mom's making new friends and is busy all the time. She loves being independent and secure. In fact, she says she feels younger than she has in years. If we had only known how great it is here, we'd have made the move to River Bay Club sooner.

Nivaud receives tourism award

Francois Nivaud of Cohasset, managing director of the Boston Harbor Hotel, is the recipient of a Spirit of Tourism Award from the Greater Boston Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Nivaud created the Boston Wine Festival, an event of international scope, seven years ago and was one of the founders of the Boston Wine Expo, which has attracted more than 5,000 people annually to the World Trade Center. The Wine Festival has been a catalyst for a citywide winter tourism promotion program and has generated financial support for WGBH-TV.

Conway joins Sandy Beach clean-up

Realtors from Jack Conway & Co.'s Cohasset office joined with community volunteers to participate in the state's annual COASTSWEEP environmental program, which took place Sept. 20. More than 15 bags of trash and marine debris were removed from Cohasset's Sandy Beach.

Participants completed surveys detailing the types of trash and debris they collected. The surveys will be used by the state's Coastal Zone Management division to determine the sources of coastal debris. Conway's Cohasset office coordinated the effort.

Keefe's runs not enough for Cohasset

Cohasset High soccer player Kevin McKenna moves the ball downfield in Monday's 3-2 win over Abington. The victory strengthened the Skippers' chances at qualifying for postseason play.

Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers trekked to White Stadium last week to square off against the South Boston Knights for their sixth game of the season. Heading into the contest, the Skippers were 1-4, coming off a loss to Norwell.

Norwell had come into Cohasset for the team's homecoming and rained on the parade. Dreary weather and uninspired play by the Skippers allowed the visiting Clippers to march to a 44-16 victory.

Despite hard runs by Grant Emde and a touchdown by Kevin Gentile, Cohaset's biggest play on homecoming came from Ben Keefe. Keefe, behind the superb blocking of Nate Caldwell, Alex Russell and Chad Whitman, broke free and sped for 70 yards into the end zone.

Another plus in the loss to Norwell was the chance for Cohasset's freshmen stars to strut their stuff with the varsity. Tim Cullinan made two big tackles from defensive end, and Kyle Bunstein took the reverse outside for solid yardage. Luke Caldwell and Justin Golden also performed well for the defense. Jaime DeMichele had a strong showing for the special teams, while Russell provided good blocking from his center position.

Head coach Bob Knurek was optimistic heading into the South Boston game, but knew his team had to play an excellent ballgame to win.

"If we're not focused, we'll be in trouble," Knurek said. "Physically, we work hard, but we need to get focused and not make the mental mistakes."

Kevin Duffy returned the kickoff to the 20 and Ben Keefe ran for five yards. On his next run, Keefe just missed breaking free, but still managed to get four yards. The Skippers couldn't get the first, however, and Emde punted. Duffy provided nice coverage and held onto Ken Campana long enough for a herd of Skippers to bring him down.

Junior Matt Conley dived on a fumble at the Skipper 23-yard line and Cohasset had the ball back. Keefe ran for four yards, and then for 14, once again just missing a long gain. But on the next play, sophomore quarterback Pat Hurley was smacked just as he was throwing. The ball found its way into the hands of all-purpose star Nasry Aranda, who ran it back for a

Soccer fever grips South Shore as tourney nears

I have soccer on the brain.

No matter how hard I try I cannot get away from the sport.

At the Mariner, I cover boys' and girls' high school soccer teams from the Old Colony League, the Atlantic Coast League and the South Shore League. And with all the quality teams out there is a game to watch just about every day. With this heavy soccer over-load, a fellow learns a few things along the way.

The following are some random soccer observations as the regular season winds down and the tourney picture heats up.

*Last year the Duxbury High boys' and girls' soccer teams pulled off a sweep as the two teams rolled to Division II state championships. This year there's a chance Duxbury may do it again, but my money is on Hanover High for a sweep in Division III.

The girls' team is unbeaten and untied in the South Shore League and is led by high-scoring forward Amanda Ganong. Ganong, coming off a severely broken leg in last year's state tourney, is a shark around the net. She is second in the league in scoring and picks up many of her goals by using her height and jumping ability to sky over defenders near the net and head in goals. For her perseverance alone, Hanover deserves a Division III crown.

As for the Hanover High boys' team, they are undefeated as well and are coming off an impressive 3-0 win against second-place Norwell on Monday at NHS. In that win, Hanover used the high-powered

The time is now for Skipper field hockey squad

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Debby Bostwick likens much of her Cohasset High field hockey team's season this fall to the New England Patriots' heartbreaking loss to the Chiefs last Sunday.

"We're doing a lot of good things, but we're not coming away with the final results," said Bostwick of the Skippers' analogy.

To reach those positive results Parcell's squad must score touchdowns, Bostwick's has to score goals.

There is another similarity between the two teams, a similarity that the rest of the season hinges upon. Neither can make a mistake from here on in if they want to keep their postseason hopes alive. At 3-8 on the season as of Tuesday, Cohasset is faced with the job of coming away with victories in its final five regular-season games to earn a berth in the Division 3 South Sectional tourney.

The Skippers worked the number skills of top-scoring midfielders Mike Eisenhut and Jon Peacock to keep Norwell safely in second place. Longtime Hanover coach Jim Sylvia is also one of the best coaches around in both boys' soccer and ice hockey. He has won multiple league titles in both sports and is due to cap his stellar coaching career with a state title.

*The Norwell High boys' soccer team saw its chances for Division III state tourney glory somewhat dampened when top scorer Dave Goodhue went down with a severe ankle injury on Monday against Hanover. Goodhue hurt his right ankle in front of the NHS fans and had to be taken off the field by ambulance. The early word is a possible fracture. If that's the case, other Norwell players will have to step up to fill the void. By the way, the game was 0-0 when Goodhue's injury occurred. Hanover went on to score three straight goals and win 3-0. Ouch.

*Marshfield High's chances to repeat as Division I girls' state champions also suffered a serious blow as starting goalie Marcy Curtis severely injured her ankle in practice two weeks ago. She could miss the rest of the regular season and may not be 100 percent for the state tourney. As Curtis goes, so goes the Lady Rams.

*Silver Lake boys' soccer coach Bill Johnson captured his 200th career victory two weeks ago. Johnson, who won a Division I state crown in '88, founded the Silver Lake program in '77. Eleven years and three state tourney appearances later, Johnson turned Silver Lake into the best program in the state. Not too bad. I'm wondering if Johnson could do anything for the Celtics or Patriots?

*Hingham High boys' soccer coach Bill Farrell, who won his 100th career victory last year, decided to change his attitude this season and it seems to be working.

Hingham has always been able to win under Farrell but the coach realized he may have been a bit too intense along the sidelines with his young talent. Not that Farrell throws water bottles or slugs his players, but the Harbormen coach thought he may have been pushing the boys a bit much. He's mellowed out and his looser, more fun attitude is resulting in more wins for Hingham. The team won't catch Duxbury for the top spot in the ACL standings, but Hingham could be a sleeper in the Division II state tourney. Fun, fun, fun.

*And lastly, the Scituate High girls' soccer team is too legit to quit. Trailing Norwell 1-0 last Thursday, the Lady Sailors crashed the net to tie the game with 1:58 to play on a goal by Jess Blanchard. Stacia Poulos picked up the assist on a pretty crossing pass. The Lady Sailors need only one more point to clinch a state tourney berth and coach Joe Strazdes said the players deserve all the credit. "They worked incredibly hard in the off-season," he said. "They were ready from the first practice." By the way Blanchard is also one of the South Shore League's best point guards in girls' hoop and Poulos is the best girls' tennis player in the South Shore League. There is no substitute for talent.

If you'd always wanted the chance to break bread with the Patriot Missile, Drew Bledsoe, the 10th annual Medallion Club Dinner, Oct. 30, at Hingham's Notre Dame Academy is offering a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to do just that.

Bids will be taken, starting at $1,250, for groups of eight to sit at a 10-person table with Bledsoe and his guest for the evening. Any fan of the personable quarterback should be out there right now saving as much money as possible. From what the press has said about Bledsoe, he truly is a down-to-earth guy despite his huge popularity in the Boston and New England area.

The evening itself is a treat. The year I went, Master of Ceremonies Will McDonough, the sports columnist for the Boston Globe was extremely helpful to me and made my job a whole lot easier by going out of his way to give me a few minutes to interview former Boston College football coach Tom Coughlin between signing autographs. At the time, Coughlin had made the decision to leave Boston College to take over the General Manager and head coaching duties of the NFL expansion team, the Jacksonville Jaguars and he shared his thoughts on just how tough a decision it was to leave.

Coughlin was extremely polite and you could sense he was a no nonsense type of guy. It was easy to see how his personality carried over to his coaching of the Eagles.

Dave had the opportunity to interview The Big Tuna himself, Patriots head coach Bill Parcells, the previous year. Parcells has never made any bones about the fact he can come down pretty heavy on the press. Dave knew this and thought twice about some of the hard-hitting questions he had for his Tunaship. Parcells, though, did give a number of tips for youngsters just getting started in Pop Warner Football and was very pleasant and friendly with Dave.

It was close, but Scituate's Dick Cohen will be wearing an official number come Patriot's Day 1996 and the 100th anniversary of the Boston Marathon. Cohen, the husband of Mariner reporter Allison Cohen, crossed the finish line of the Baystate Marathon in 3 hours 24 minutes and 37 seconds, qualifying for Boston by 23 seconds. Congratulations Dick and good luck in your trek from Hopkinton to the Pru.

It's pretty clear many South Shore athletes who made in impact for their teams in high school have continued to do the same in college. Hanover's Michael Nelson a junior at Merrimack College and product of B.C. High, is on the Warriors' cross country roster.

Scott Theriault, a 1994 graduate of Cohasset High, is playing varsity football at WPI, and Hanover's Kate Eden continues to be an integral part of the 10-3 women's soccer team at Denison University.

After 11 games Eden was The Big Red's leading scorer with 10 goals and four assists. Her numbers put her fourth on the North Coast Athletic Conference scoring list. Eden had a stellar performance in Denison's 8-2 victory over Thomas More on Oct. 4. She led the attack on goal with four tallies and an assist. Eden is averaging 1.85 points per game.

touchdown. Carl Taylor ran in the two-point conversion and Southie had an 8-0 lead.

Keefe's carries took him out to the 49-yard line, due largely to excellent blocking by the offensive line, which includes Brian Riley, Brian Sasso, John Kasameyer, Caldwell and Chad Whitman. On fourth and 7, Cohasset lined up in punt formation. The play was a fake, sold beautifully by Emde, and Keefe scrambled for the first down.

However, Cohasset couldn't hang onto the ball and a fumble was recovered by the Knights at their own 43. Sasso, Duffy, Gentile, and Keefe all made good plays, forcing a 4th and 20 situation. Cohasset, however couldn't move the offense, and when Hurley and Emde failed to connect on a hand-off, Southie dived on the loose ball.

Southie was stuffed for a loss and Keefe saved a TD with a diving tackle, but the Knights kept marching, looking for sure as if they would score. Good interior defense by the Skippers and two lucky breaks, though, set up 4th-and-goal for the home team. Greg Stevens crushed Aranda and saved a touchdown, getting Cohasset the ball back.

The swarming Southie defense tackled Gentile in the end zone on a terrific defensive play by the Knights' defensive line, causing a safety, and giving the home team a 10-0 edge. The home team narrowly missed another touchdown, a magnificent play by a diving Keefe kept Aranda out of the end zone. After the brief lapse, the Skipper defense held and forced a punt. But, before they could get a drive together, time ran out on the half, with the score 10-0.

South Boston received the second-half kickoff and ran it out to their own 22 yard line. Pat Reynolds made a nice play from his end position to stuff Campana for a loss. Aranda broke loose and scooted to the 50, but paid for it on the next play when Riley crushed him behind the line of scrimmage. Keefe went airborne to snag an interception at the CHS 28.

Keefe then gained a first for his squad but the offense couldn't get another and were forced to punt. Emde's boot was well covered by Jamie Buick and rolled all the way to the 24. Aranda once again got rolling, this time to the 47, where he was brought down by Jarred Batts and Sasso. Despite good defense by Keith Wright, the Knight backs kept eating up the yardage. Finally, Efrim Lopez took the toss from quarterback Damion Rose in the end zone for the touchdown, making the score 17-0.

Emde caught the kickoff for Cohasset and ran it back to the CHS 15. But, on the next play, Keefe did what had been bound to happen all game. His big run ate up 85 yards, all the way to the end zone. His two-point conversion run made it 17-8. South Boston, capping off a great day for the senior tailback.

Cohasset's defense refused to let the Knights into the end zone again, making several solid plays. Gentile had several tackles, Reynolds and Wright combined for a bone crushing hit, and Riley, Eric Snow, and Stevens all had tackles as time ran out.

Cohasset's squad was helped along by Keefe's 157 yards on 14 carries and solid defense by Mike Coates. Keefe's running revealed a major weapon for the Skippers, one which could be exploited in the second half of the season to rack up some wins for CHS.

Knurek was pleased with his team's second-half performance. "We won the second half, which was a goal that we had set for ourselves after the first half. We really improved and rose to the challenge during the last two quarters. Our defense gave us an outstanding effort.

"Next week, we'll face Old Colony. Physically, we're well matched with them. If we can play four quarters of disciplined football, I'm confident that we'll win."

The time is now for Skipper field hockey squad

down from six with their 4-0 victory over Notre Dame Academy of Hingham.

Cohasset not only got the scoring it has been thirsting for all season, but two of the goals came on corner shots, an area where the Skippers usually excel but have been in a rut of late. Natalie Cheel was the player to break the drought. Cheel scored on both corners and Laura Risano garnered both assists.

Ninth-grader Meghan Connolly scored the eventual game-winning shot barely two minutes into the game when she took a pass from Faye Menis and banged a shot past the ND netminder.

Cohasset got more than its share of opportunities to score, lining up 12 shots and seven corners compared to five ND shots.

Katie Buckley added a tally on a rush down the field with Nicole Peterson and Faye Menis. Racing down the left wing, Peterson passed the ball off to Menis in the center of the field. Menis headed toward the net and dropped a pass back to Buckley, who unleased a drive that found the back of the net.

Risano made several solid stops and one spectacular save where she had to dive to knock the shot away. Bostwick said Risano has been especially intense in goal lately and it has showed through her aggressive play.

"Gina was very determined to get a shutout," Bostwick said.

Cohasset dominated the middle of the field in the second half thanks to the play of Emily Collins and Jo Hurley. The half was mainly a defensive struggle. The Skippers were able to get just five shots off, but the defense completely shut ND down by not allowing a single ball to reach Risano without allowing any corner opportunities.

"It was a great team effort," Bostwick said.

Unfortunately, the Skippers will have to do without the services of Chloe Chittick for the remainder of the season. Chittick sustained a broken finger during Cohasset's loss to the first-place Hull Pirates. Bostwick said the subs are going to have to step up and try to fill the vacated position.

With the powerful Hanover squad scheduled for Wednesday, Bostwick saw the game as a pivotal match that could help determine the tone for the rest of the season.

"If we can win Wednesday," Bostwick said, "that's going to be a real pick-me-up for the last games of the season."

O'Day-Clark is taking no team for granted

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

It's that time of year where coaches of teams on the verge of qualifying for the South Sectional tournament don't take any team for granted, no matter how poor its record. Long since out of postseason contention, the players know they have nothing to lose and head into their games with a somewhat reckless abandon.

And that can be scary.

Cohasset High girls soccer coach Maureen O'Day-Clark doesn't foresee any letdown from her 5-3-4 Skipper squad. With four games left Cohasset needs only a win and tie to secure a spot in the Division 3 South Sectional tourney.

But as close as the Skippers are to qualifying, O'Day-Clark knows it is hardly a cinch they'll be playing in November.

"I'd like to say yeah from a coaching point of view but you never know," she said. "Teams (not going to the tourney) have nothing to lose in the final few games and usually play very well.

"We're playing a lot harder and want to be in the tournament, but it's going to be tough."

The Skippers are 1-0-2 in their last three games with tournament-bound Abington and Hanover slated for this week's schedule. Hanover has been nothing short of stupendous this season, racking up a 13-0 record. Abington, too, is having another business-as-usual fall under head coach Jeff Kent.

The Cohasset/Abington matchup should be a classic. The Green Wave is still smarting after Cohasset beat them in the tournament last year and sending them to an early exit. However, O'Day-Clark believes a hard effort from her team against both Abington and Hanover should net the Skippers good results.

"If we could play our game and everyone's in it, we could do very well," O'Day-Clark said. "We'll see what happens.

"I hope we do well against Abington."

The Skippers are coming off Monday's 1-1 tie against Scituate. The tie was a retribution of sorts after the Sailors came back from a 3-1 deficit to pull out a 4-3 win.

Both teams were helped out by good goaltending this time around as Katie Campbell finished with 20 saves. Amber Hopeman was the only Cohasset player to find the back of the net in the contest. She booted a shot between the posts on an indirect kick in the first half for the score. A midfielder who had 48 goals for her team in Kansas City, the transfer student was moved to midfield by O'Day-Clark and she has performed well all season.

Campbell earned two shutouts in the two previous games in Cohasset's 1-0 win over Norton and 0-0 tie against East Bridgewater. Andrea Grew was credited with assisting on Hopeman's other goal in the Cohasset game.

METCO dinner is planned

The annual fall Sunday dinner for Cohasset METCO students and their families, sponsored by Cohasset METCO host families, will be held Sunday, Oct. 29, in the Cohasset High School cafeteria from 3 to 6 p.m. All METCO families, Cohasset host families and anyone from the community who would like to attend are welcome.

Call PSO METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Cliff Chase (383-1574) to reserve a seat, learn more about the METCO program or to become a host family for a Boston METCO student.

DH open house well attended

More than 500 parents attending the Deer Hill School Open House were greeted with the music of Bob Dillon singing, "These times, they are a changin'" and "decorations" of road construction signs and equipment loaned by the Cohasset DPW, all in keeping with the evening's theme, "Under Construction: Work in Progress."

Faculty provided parents with an overview of curriculum expectations, and student work was on display throughout the school. The finale of the evening was a slide show presentation of students at work.

The theme reflects the changes in progress at Deer Hill as a result of both the Education Reform Act of 1993 and the work of the staff under the direction of Donna Hartlage, the school's new principal. In addition to modifying the instructional day to ensure compliance with the new time and learning regulations, DeerHill has instituted a new code of conduct and several new strategies for improving two-way communication between the school and home.

Parents Erol and Tammi Johnson work in the computer room at the Deer Hill Open House. Their daughter, Danielle, is a 4th grade student.

In keeping with the new goals, parents participated in an activity known as a Carousel, in which they were able to provide feedback and offer suggestions for continued improvement. This information will assist the Deer Hill School Advisory Council and faculty in setting both short- and long-term goals.

CHS COMMUNITY SERVICE/Ron Ford

This Saturday, Oct. 21, we have organized a team of volunteers to participate in the City Year Serv-a-thon.

This is a one-day event which raises money for the nationally recognized community service program. Our team made up of teachers and students will board a bus at 7 a.m. in front of CHS and take on the day-long project of cleaning the woods that surround historic Walden Pond in Concord. If you are interested in sponsoring our group of even joining us for the day, contact Ron Ford at CHS at 383-6100. We will take part in the Serv-a-thon festivities on Boston Common and should return to Cohasset at 6 p.m. It should be a great day and we would welcome any support we could get.

Marijuana bust is made

After responding to a disturbance call Sunday night at the Red Lion Inn, police confiscated a total of about 16 ounces of marijuana with a street value of $1,500 to $2,000.

Police arrested Nicholas Paley, 20, of Scituate, who was staying at the Inn and charged him with possession of marijuana and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said as a result of the disturbance call at about 11:19 p.m. Sunday, Officers David Cogill and Paul Laugelle went to Paley's room where several ounces of marijuana were in open view. They arrested Paley and after a subsequent investigation Monday morning, they found about 13 more ounces of marijuana and some drug paraphernalia in the woods near the Red Lion Inn.

Paley was arraigned on the charges in Quincy District Court. The matter is still under investigation, Jackson said.

Tennis courts give assist to local recreation

New facility is heavily used

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

With the upcoming town meeting set to consider further improvements to the high school fields, one aspect of that project has been completed and is working nicely, according to volunteers who helped get it done.

The new field at the high school displaced four tennis courts, which have been relocated next to two existing courts at the end of Bancroft Road. In addition, those courts were refurbished.

The courts cost roughly $130,000, including some $12,000 to refurbish the older courts.

That sum was included in the $775,000 override approved in the spring of 1994.

According to Gary Vanderweil, one of the volunteers who worked on the project, the refurbishing of the older courts should last from two to five years.

The inevitable freezing and subsequent contraction of water creates cracks in the tennis court surfaces.

He explained that workers only filled cracks and spruced up the surface. The asphalt and existing subgrade would have to be replaced for a lasting improvement, he said.

The older courts could also use new nets, he said.

The courts, which were ready for play in June, are receiving considerable use.

"I think it (the new facility) is quite heavily used," Vanderweil said. "I have been very pleased with the use of the tennis courts."

Another volunteer, Wayne Sawchuk agreed.

"It's nice to have all the courts together," he said.

Some players have complained about the lack of netting between the courts, to prevent stray balls from disrupting adjacent games.

Sawchuk said that while it would have been desirable to have the netting, it is not essential.

"Reasonably good players don't send balls across the courts," he said.

In addition, Sawchuk said the courts conform to national regulations, for size and distance from each other.

Vanderweil said that the lights on the two older courts are broken and have not been fixed because no one has requested it.

"So far there hasn't been any demand for it," he said.

The courts, which are under the jurisdiction of the recreation department, are open to the public on a first-come, first-served basis.

A sign prohibiting roller blading and street hockey on the courts was erected this summer. Vanderweil said the high schools courts were seriously damaged by such improper use.

Vanderweil praised selectman Michael Sullivan and high school athletic director Clark Chatterton for their roles in the project.

Officials say the lack of netting between Cohasset's new tennis courts is not essential and that the courts are popular with local residents.

Boat yard makes waves

Fishermen worried about future

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Resident have 30 days to comment on a controversial proposal to reduce the size of the town's only boat yard, the Mill River Marine Railway, Inc., on Border St.

Fishermen and commercial boaters are united in opposition to the project, which they claim would so reduce the amount of space available to boat repair as to make a boat yard on the site an impossibility.

They also charge that property owner William Hanney wants to force the Mill River facility out of the location it has occupied for some 20 years.

Hanney said he cannot spend the estimated $400,000 to improve the site with the approximately $16,000 per year the boat yard pays. This includes $500 per month rent plus boat storage fees.

An appeal of the boat yard's eviction was to have been heard by Norfolk County Superior Court in Dedham on Wednesday.

Coastal Zone Management (CZM) official Dennis Ducsik, who conducted a meeting on the subject this week, agreed to extend the comment period from the original two weeks at the

Henderson to step down as Cohasset town counsel

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Local attorney Richard Henderson will resign as Cohasset's town counsel once selectmen find a replacement following the Nov. 6 special town meeting.

Henderson, 53, a Cohasset resident, has served in the post since 1982 when he replaced long-time town counsel J. Blake Thaxter. For eight years before that, Henderson served as assistant town counsel, a position that has since been replaced by "special counsels" hired by the town to oversee labor, environmental, and sewer matters.

Henderson, who is $85 per hour for his services as town counsel, said that the increased volume of town legal matters and the complexity of his private practice, run from his

Mexican village is perfect palette for area artists

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Cohasset Mariner

Last year, 12 amateur and professional artists – who all happened to be women – went to Mexico for two weeks to paint through a course offered by the South Shore Art Center.

They liked it so much that a group of about nine of them returned to Mexico again this year on their own to paint some more.

Since the original trip in February 1994, the group has exhibited their work together, has communicated amongst themselves through a monthly newsletter, and has gathered on a regular basis to paint and socialize.

"We have bonded," says

Cohasset's Week

Register to vote, Oct. 27

The last day to register to vote for the Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting is tomorrow (Friday, Oct. 27)., Town Clerk Marion Douglas said.

The Town Clerk's office will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., Oct. 27. Registration forms are also available from the Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Forms may be mailed or hand delivered to the clerk's office but must be received or postmarked on or before the deadline.

Senior volunteers thanked

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon thanked the following volunteers "who worked so diligently to label the special town meeting warrants" on Friday, Oct. 20: Ann Leonard, Mary Androcchio, Phyllis Leighton, Connie Tolman, Pauline Keating, Virginia Anderson, Olga Sawchuk, Tillie Nardo, and Helen Murphy.

"They are cheerful, productive, efficient and a pleasure to have around," Doyon wrote in a letter to Council on Aging Chairman Joseph D. Buckley.

Trees to be illuminated

Selectmen will allow the South Shore Community Center to decorate trees with small white lights on the town common during its annual Jingle Bell Walk, from 1:30 to 4 p.m., Nov. 24.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said there are about nine trees around the town common that would be decorated with the lights.

An article annual town meeting last spring directed selectmen to allow non-profit, civic or recreational organizations to light the trees but left the placement under direction of selectmen. The citizens' petition article was put before the town to avert a recurrence of what happened in the fall of 1994 when the community center was told it could not install small white lights on the fruit trees during the Jingle Bell Walk. Selectmen supported the town meeting article.

This week selectmen also approved a request from the Village Renaissance group to light the trees in the village during the holidays again this year. Doyon said the merchants cover the cost of the electricity.

South Shore Community Center president Susan DiPesa and Council on Aging chairman Joe Buckley (center) hold a check with the proceeds from the September golf tournament, a joint benefit for the two organizations. The tourney raised close to $10,000 after expenses. The COA, which oversees the senior center housed in the community center at 3 N. Main Street, returned its share to the community center which will put it toward this winter's heating bill. Buckley said the COA was proud to be associated with the community center and praised both organizations' ability to work together. Also shown in the photo (L-R) are COA board members Austin O'Toole and Gerard Keating, (Di Pesa & Buckley), tournament organizer Chris Horn, and COA director Kathy Bryanton.

Charter school board named

Four Cohasset residents have been elected to the board of trustees of the South Shore Charter School, located in Hull. They all have children enrolled in the school.

Walter Johnson, PhD, is chairman of the physics and engineering department of Suffolk University and is curriculum coordinator of the SSCS. He was honored with the school's Volunteer Hero of the Year Award for his "imaginative and artful leadership."

Donald Trisler is a project manager for Motorola Corp. and was also honored as a Volunteer Hero for his guidance throughout the renovation of the primary school's building.

Anne Reel is co-chair of the school's parents advisory council, and Gregory L. Thornton, Esq., vice president of employee relations at the Boston Globe, was elected to his first term on the board.

Citations from the state Senate and House of Representatives were presented during the school's recent annual meeting.

Cohasset may get out of MBTA district

Town is on elimination list

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Unhappy with delayed decision making by state authorities concerning the restoration of commuter rail service to the Old Colony Greenbush line, and with the large assessments their town pays annually with out receiving any MBTA transit service, disgruntled Marshfield residents voted at a special town meeting last week to get out of the MBTA district.

And if the special legislative commission studying MBTA financing methods has its way, Marshfield may not be the only community getting out.

The Commission on Financing of the MBTA which was established last year and is co-chaired by State Rep. Frank Hynes (D- Marshfield) was formed to review the financing of the MBTA since its inception in 1964 and to recommend possible changes to balance the structure.

The commission has compiled a list of recommendations including removing what have become known as ""fringe communities within the 78 member MBTA district – towns that pay sizable assessments annually but receive no direct public transit service.

Under this proposal, Marshfield and eight other South Shore communities, including Cohasset which pays $153,000 annually, would no longer have to pay the assessments charged against local aid on the state's "Cherry sheets" – instead the state would bear the costs.

Cohasset selectmen took a position this week to support this legislation that would get their community out of the district and eliminate the assessment. There is frustration in town about the annual assessment despite the lack of public transit, but Executive Secretary Greg Doyon said that more recently that frustration has been intertwined with the Greenbush issue.

"People in town are concerned that the assessment will rise if Greenbush is built," he said.

If the commission's recommendations are accepted, Doyon said the extra money could be used for any number of things in the capital or operating budget.

"We certainly have plenty of needs," Doyon said.

In its search for more balanced and equitable financing methods, Hynes said the commission has unanimously recognized that the property tax (assessments) is an unfair source to support a regional transit system.

Ideally, Hynes said assessments in all 78 communities would be eliminated and the expense picked up by the state. But pragmatically speaking, Hynes said the state is not able to cover that $131 million annual tab.

Instead, whatever gap in financing occurs from assessment relief could be more evenly dispersed by increasing the general tax burden on state tax payers.

Another way to recoup lost funds would be to add surcharges to parking fees at MBTA parking lots. In town's where assessments are paid annually, that surcharge could be returned to the community which bears the brunt of costs for maintaining the lot with police patrols and snow plowing in the winter. In town's in which no assessment is paid, the surcharge would go to the MBTA.

Raising fares on subways, buses and commuter rail, is another strong recommendation the commission will make as a means of covering more of the MBTA's operating costs.

While some legislators feel it would be more equitable to shift assessments from fringe communities and begin charging assessments to communities outside the district that have service and benefited from a 20-year old legislative promise that they would never be charged assessments for the expansion of the transit system, Hynes said it would be a grave injustice.

"It would be a breech of faith," he said. "They were promised they would not have to pay an assessment."

The commission is slated to meet and vote on its proposals to the legislature and the MBTA in December.

Marshfield's push to get out of the district may have been spurred on by inaction on Greenbush, but Hynes insists that the fact he represents Marshfield and is a strong supporter of Greenbush rail restoration is totally incidental and coincidental to his co-chairing this commission.

The commission is slated to meet and vote on their proposals to the legislature and the MBTA in December, Hynes said.

"I think this is the best that can be done about the constraints financially, politically and administratively," he added.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

Hunneman & Company-Coldwell Banker has established an Historic New England Properties Division offering training for all sales associates interested in the development of marketing services for the unique architectural styles of the region. Helen Pratt, Lora Labonte, Judy Parsons, Manager, Jacqueline Clark, Liz Warren and Margy Charles, all of the Cohasset office, have completed the course of study and are the designated specialists in the marketing of historic properties.

Instruction was provided by representatives from the Peabody Essex Museum in Salem, Mass. and the National Historic Trust of Washington, D.C. The course surveyed styles and unique details of homes built from the colonial period of the 1600's and 1700's through the modern movement which began in the 1920's. Included were tours of historic homes, local and national historic district regulations, historic designated properties, preservation and restoration guidelines and the effect of period detail on a property's intrinsic value and monetary worth.

If you have an historic home and are interested in its effective marketing, please call our office and ask for one of our Historic Properties Specialists and information on placing it in our Historic Properties Register.

Fisherman worried about yard's future request of selectman Jane Goedecke.

She told Ducsik that since plans for the project – which involve reducing the size and apparently the scope of work done at the yard, plus creating other retail space and three residential units at the site – were only made available Monday, residents need more time.

"We (selectmen) can't move on a dime," she said.

Hanney also agreed to bring copies of the plans to the selectman's office at town hall, so people may take a closer look.

Ducsik requested that public comment include facts and suggestions which officials at CZM and in the waterways division of the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) could consider in determining Hanney's request for a permit.

Ducsik also told the crowd of about 50 fishermen who attended the meeting Monday afternoon at the boat yard, that the state agencies will consider the possible displacement of an existing water dependent use.

He added, however, that they cannot force a landlord to keep a particular tenant.

Furthermore, he suggested that the plans could be altered and a compromise reached.

Hanney said the residential housing was not incompatible with the boat yard.

"I think it can work," he said. "I want to try to save it (the property) before it goes into the water. I think we can live together."

He pointed out that several of the buildings on the site are in need of serious repair.

As to his own plans, Hanney said he had intended to build one large home for himself at the location, but scaled back in the face of community opposition.

"I didn't want to be the most hated man in town," he said.

The fishermen and boaters did not agreed that the project would work.

Several speakers suggested that the boat yard could not operate since the amount of space devoted to boat repair would be cut approximately in half by the addition of parking spaces, landscaping and a public walkway along the water.

They said that it is imperative for the town's roughly 35 commercial fishermen and hundreds of recreational boaters have an accessible place where vessels can be quickly brought for repairs in an emergency.

According to fisherman Michael Wilson, repairs are often made at night so a boat can be ready as soon as possible.

"You've got to get in and get out," he said, suggesting that the late night operating of machinery would be impossible with apartments in the same or adjacent buildings.

Frank Carey, boat yard owner, showed photographs of the repair of various boats, including one large, vintage craft built in the 1920's.

Carey said such complicated overhauls can take years to complete and require heavy machinery, including electric saws and sanders, which take up lots of space.

"With this proposal, a full storage boat yard couldn't work here," he said, adding that all boats stored at the site were also worked on.

Craft not needing repair are almost never left at the boat yard for long periods of time, Carey explained.

Recreational boater Jay Cody was one of many men who agreed.

"The boat yard as it is now requires all the space," he said. "What they're planning here for a boat yard is a joke, like a skit a Disneyland."

Hanney denied that he is trying to force Carey out. He said that he needs a rent-paying tenant in order to pay for the renovations.

However, he also said that when he bought the property, the agreement included a clause that the site be free of tenants.

Stating that he likes Carey personally, Hanney said he would like to bring him back if he is evicted.

Plans call for all buildings on the site to remain, but each will be extensively remodeled.

The large building next to the Gulf River, which currently contains a workshop, would be renovated to include two upstairs apartments.

A residence is also planned for the other building on the Gulf River side.

The three remaining buildings would be used for boat repair, the Lobster Pound store and possibly water-related retail space.

Currently the site includes the dilapidated building known to artists as Motif #1, a favorite subject for area painters.

Henderson to step down

South Main Street office, have made it too difficult to do both jobs.

"I feel there's not enough of me," he said. "It is in the best interest of my private practice that I retire (from town counsel.)"

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown praised Henderson at this week's meeting.

"I am sorry to hear that he will step down," Brown said. "He has done a wonderful job over the years and he will be very missed as town counsel."

Henderson, who said he has enjoyed serving the town, said lack of unanimous support for his appointment as town counsel from selectmen had nothing to do with his decision to step down.

"No one believes me," he said. "But I care little about politics."

In June, selectmen reappointed Henderson as town counsel by a 3-2 vote.

Selectmen Brown, Jane Goedecke, and Michael Sullivan voted for the appointment, while Peter Pratt and Martha Gjesteby voted no.

Following the vote, Pratt said the town was not getting adequate legal advice on certain issues, such as the open meeting law. And Gjesteby said while she was not displeased with Henderson, wanted to investigate other possible legal alternatives in an effort to reduce legal costs, including the use of special counsels to supplement town counsel on particular cases.

Under state law, selectmen hire all lawyers for the town and can designate a large law firm or a lawyer with a small-town practice as town counsel, Henderson explained.

"It's purely discretionary" (on the selectmen's part, he said.

Henderson, a native of Pittsfield, Mass., has lived in Cohasset for 24 years.

Hagerty project to get off the starting blocks

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

The Hagerty Committee got the go ahead this week to pursue permitting to shore up the riprap, grade the parking lot and complete the walkway at the two-acre, town-owned harbor-front site.

Selectmen also authorized a sub-committee including the building inspector, town counsel and health agent to work with the Hagerty Committee to review all issues surrounding the Victorian house at the site. The house was once the showroom for Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit company, which has moved to Hingham. The town has considered selling or leasing the building. A private company would like to buy it and a local resident has proposed leasing it and developing a maritime educational center there.

And selectmen also authorized the removal of the cutting room and the demolition of the concrete pad it sits one.

Hagerty Committee Member Al Moore stressed that the permitting should go forward and that parking can be "reconfigured" later.

"Let's get the permitting in place," he said. Obtaining the proper permits from various state and local agencies may take as long as six months.

Committee members stressed that all plans for a recreational park on the two-acre parcel are preliminary. Two weeks ago, the committee presented plans and sought public input at a forum at Bancroft Hall in the Lightkeepers Residence.

Selectmen directed the Hagerty Committee to come back with estimated costs and a priority timetable for the project.

Name proposed for school field

The town fields committee would like to name the new high school field, "Cohasset Alumni Field."

Selectmen will support the naming of the field before town meeting. The advisory committee felt the field should be named after donations come in.

But Wayne Sawchuk, who is volunteering his time as clerk of the works for the high school fields project, said naming the field now will save a lot of confusion among townspeople who won't know what to call the field and prevent possible hassles over any political arguments.

"We think it's better to name it after the school and town," he said. Sawchuk and athletic director Clark Chatterton, and Gary Vanderweil, who have also provided much expertise and energy into the project, are all Cohasset High alumni.

Rizzotto art is exhibited at South Shore Art Center

A series of acrylic paintings by Hingham artist Lynn Titleman Rizzotto are on exhibit through October at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset. The "Faculty Feature" highlights a featured teacher at the Center each month.

Rizzotto's paintings include colorful scenes of San Miguel, Mexico, Block Island and Lynn's garden in Hingham. As an instructor of art at the Old Colony Montessori School, Children's Creativity Workshops and the South Shore Art Center, she incorporates her work as a painter and illustrator of children's educational materials into her work with her art students.

Mexican village is perfect palette

Rosalind Farbush of Cohasset, who was the group's teacher on both trips.

Before the group formed, many members did not know each other.

The group includes nationally-known watercolorist Mary Lizotte of Norwell, portrait artist Mary Goode of Pocasset, and fashion illustrator Marjorie Murphy of Milton, said Lynn Titleman Rizzotto, who went on both trips and is a children's book illustrator from Hingham.

There was a "camaraderie of different artists," she said.

The group ranges in age from their 30s to their 80s and calls themselves Las Amigas de San Miguel de Allende, said Marjorie Murphy, who went on both trips and who is coordinating a third trip this February.

The group is named after the old colonial Mexican city where they went to paint, called San Miguel de Allende, which was founded in 1542, Farbush said.

This year, "a whole group of us decided to go back on our own," and about five additional artists went along for the first time, too, Murphy said.

"We took over the streets of San Miguel," said Arlene Weeks of Hull, who is an art dealer and decorative artist. The dozen members would travel together with their easels, and wherever they went, "everybody stopped and stared," she said.

"We set up easels on the street and paint," Farbush said. "People are very encouraging and accept us."

Asked why the city is particularly good for painting, Farbush replied, "The color. The buildings are the colors of an artist's palette," such as yellow, pink and turquoise, she said. If you show your paintings to people from the United States, they "think you're making it up." Native Indians wear colorful clothing during festivals and the flowers are colorful, too, she said.

In the evenings, combinations of fiestas and critiquing sessions would be held at Farbush's apartment and once they hired 10 mariachis to play for them, Weeks said.

"No matter what we did, we made kind of a splash. Everybody knew us," she said.

Sometimes, the painters would pay a child or a flower vendor a few pesos to pose for them, Rizzotto said.

The group has exhibited their paintings at Stone Hill College in Easton, Farbush said. Another group exhibit is planned for February at the Norwell Public Library.

In February, when the trips took place, the temperature in San Miguel de Allende is in the 80s, but not humid, Farbush said.

The group meets socially six or seven times a year to "paint and shoot the breeze," she said.

So far only women have joined the group. However, men are welcome to join, too, Farbush said.

The group is becoming well-known, and has gotten invitations from artists and art lovers in Rockport, Block Island, Vermont and other locations who want them to come and paint at their homes, Weeks said.

Members said lodging and food was very inexpensive in Mexico, particularly because of the devalued peso.

For information on participating in the February trip, call 617-696-2748.

Dispatchers' raises approved

This week selectmen approved for the town's civilian dispatchers. The hourly pay for Lindsay Coyle, Joseph F. Perry, Jr., Patricia Douglas and David Weeks will increase from $9.94 per hour to $10.45; and the pay for Albert L. Andrews and Sasha Geddes will increase from $9.39 to $9.94 per hour. The dispatchers were hired last spring to man the town's enhanced 9-1-1 telephone system.

'Creeps by Night' is offered

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is celebrating its 75th year with its presentation, "Creeps by Night," a combination Halloween play and haunted house at Cohasset Town Hall.

The event will be held Friday, Oct. 27, and Saturday, Oct. 28, at 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, Oct. 29, at 5 and 7 p.m. Tickets are $3.

Ann Mitchell named to the dean's list at Fisher College

Bryant College, located in Smithfield, R.I., sends us word that Jennifer L. Wilner is attending the fine school. Jennifer is a freshman accounting major.

Bryant is recognized as one of the leading business colleges in the country by U.S. News & World Report and Barron's. In addition, more than 10,000 business people representing 1,800 firms annually take advantage of Bryant's continuing education programs and corporate outreach efforts through the College's Center for International Business and Economic Development.

Study hard, Jennifer, and we are sure to hear great things about you!

How about our own State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and the good news that they are naming the Nantasket Beach House in her honor?! She has really worked hard to make the renovation a reality, and sure should be proud of all of her efforts to make it happen. You can bet that she will check in from time to time to check the progress being made — she has committed herself to the project!

And, when Mary Jeanette gets the wheels in motion, there they go! We'll let you know when it is to be dedicated, we should all be there to applaud her efforts!!

The Duxbury campus of Fisher College is pleased to announce that Ann Mitchell has been named to the Dean's List for the July academic term. That means that she attained this honor by earning a grade point average of 3.30 or greater, and we certainly congratulate her for her efforts!

It's that time of year again folks, time for the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's 7th Annual Auction. It will be held Nov. 4 at the Community Center. A free dinner kicks off the festivities at 6:30 p.m. with this year's menu featuring pasta with your choice of sauces. Desserts of notable delight will round out the meal. The auction itself begins at 7:30 p.m. and you can expect the same quality merchandise and fantastic bargains the Chamber's auction is famous for. Don't miss this great chance to enjoy a delicious meal and get a jump on your holiday shopping.

The dinner and auction are open to everyone — so, whether you're a Chamber member or not, go there for the great food, great bargains, great fun!

Attention seventh-graders, there is something unique and special headed your way! The Dance Party classes that will be held at St. Stephen's Church. They are a continuation of the sixth grade program and there will be four classes. Contemporary and social, party dances, games and light refreshments are all part of this series, which starts Nov. 7. The other three dates are Dec. 5, Jan. 30 and March 5..

Hopefully all of you received a subscription card, if not please call Martha Equi at 383-0461. RSVP soon!

Cohasset resident Lilian Faulhaber was recently cited for achieving distinction in College Board examinations administered last spring at Buckingham Browne and Nichols School in Cambridge, according to Ward Ghory, director of the Upper School.

Lily, daughter of Susan Playfair of Jerusalem Road, was named a Semi-finalist in the National Merit Scholarship Program and an Advanced Placement Scholar with Distinction for her performance on five AP examinations covering material taught in five Advanced Placement courses. WOW!

Teacher Larry Shultz talks with parent Lyn Previte, whose son, Paul is a sixth grader, during a recent open house at the school. For more school news see page 15.

June (Robbins) and Richard Phillips Lippard have great news to share with us, and his name is Richard Marr Lippard. Richard was born Sept. 13 at 7:53 p.m. and weighed a hefty 9 lbs. 3 oz. He joins his sister, Meridith Doering Lippard.

His maternal grandparents are Wayne Robbins and the late Jane Robbins; his paternal grandparents are Trudie and Dick Lippard of Duxbury. What a wonderful time of year to be born, enjoy all of those wonderful fall walks Richard! We are sure that Meridith will help Mom and Dad "steer" the carriage!

Hats off to all involved in the decision to make Sohier Street one-way during the time the kiddos arrive and leave from the Osgood School–that section of Ripley Road/Sohier Street made lots of parents dropping students off nervous, those little ones can dart out fast!

Everyone is happy to re-arrange their schedules for 1/2 hour morning and night to ensure safety of our children!

Finally, after this week's flurry of leaves, it sure behooves you to call and schedule a raking — call Ami Argus at 383-9325, you'll benefit and so will the Appalachia Service Project!

Don't forget to fill me in on your latest happening, your news makes everyone happy!

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

MAGIC FORMULA

QUESTION: Money is available and it looks like prices are pretty stable. Do you consider this a good time to invest in property?

ANSWER: The secret to success for investing in anything is – buy low and sell high! The trick is to buy property at a lower price than it would normally sell for. How?

The real estate market has its peaks and valleys. If there is any chance of buying right, it is during an ebb in the market. The economic marketplace normally creates such lulls (or opportunities). This is a good time to buy, because after the ebb, competition increases and so do real estate prices. We have several such opportunities on file right now.

World War II veteran

Robert L. Littlehale Jr., 82, of Cohasset, died Oct. 12 after a brief illness.

Born in Cambridge, he was raised in Belmont, moving to Cohasset in 1951.

Mr. Littlehale attended Tabor Academy where he played football, baseball and hockey. He graduated from the University of Maine at Orono, where he was an All-American varsity fullback on the football team. He received a degree in economics from the college.

Mr. Littlehale was the retired owner and president of C.B. Swift Co. of Boston, an interior design firm, which he operated for 40 years. He retired in 1980. The firm was founded by his late father, Robert L. Littlehale Sr., on Newbury Street.

He served as a captain in the Army in World War II in South France, Italy, Germany and North Africa.

Mr. Littlehale was the husband of Louise G. (Ganteaume) Littlehale and leaves two sons, Robert L. Littlehale III of Norwell and Richard G. Littlehale of Pembroke; two daughters, Suzanne Macri of Randolph and Leslie Bloch of New York City; a brother, Willard Littlehale of Fitchburg; six grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

A Memorial service was conducted Oct. 15 at Second Congregational Church by the Rev. Gary A. Ritts. Burial in Cohasset Central Cemetery was private.

Donations in his memory may be made to Alzheimer's Association, 1 Kendall Square, Building 200, Cambridge 02139.

Arrangements were made by the MacNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Leaf rakers are ready

Are falling leaves piling up in your yard and walkway? The Appalachian Service Project of Cohasset has teen-age volunteer teams available to do leaf raking jobs during the weekends of Oct. 28 and 29, Nov. 4 and 5 and 11 and 12.

Call Ami Argus, 383-9325 to schedule a team to help rake leaves. The cost is reasonable and will be determined by the size of the job.

EDITORIAL

Thanks, Rich

Local Attorney Richard Henderson has announced he's resigning as town counsel as soon as his replacement can be found following the special town meeting Nov. 6.

Mr. Henderson has served the town in the capacity of assistant town counsel and town counsel for nearly 22 years.

We agree with Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown who said "he has done a wonderful job over the years and he will be very missed as town counsel."

We've seen Mr. Henderson handling a variety of situations ranging from dog hearings to the town meeting resolutions on the train.

And perhaps the most trying task of all is working for five political bosses, the selectmen, who are often at odds with each other.

To his credit no matter what the situation, "Rich" always seemed to rise above the fray and give his informed opinion even when it was unpopular.

As members of the press, we'll miss his openness and most of all his accessibility. How many town counsels can you call at home in the evening with a question about an issue?

Selectmen will soon have the difficult task of finding a replacement. Rich may not be politically savvy, but there's no doubt he cares about this town.

We wish him the best of luck and continued success in his private law practice.

Farmer's market

It's too bad for all of us that plans for a farmer's market at the former North Cohasset Fire Station may not come to fruition after all.

A local resident proposed leasing the structure from the town in order to open a market selling organic and locally grown vegetables and homemade breads. But the building may be needed for a pumping station if the town chooses the "Hull alternative" to solve its sewer woes.

This week selectmen said while it's very unlikely the town will need the site, they must keep all options open and therefore cannot commit to more than a two-year lease.

Now The Ancient Farmer's Market must make a business decision about whether it's prudent to take a chance and develop the site.

We sympathize with the cooperative's Michelle Goodson, who was frustrated at last week's selectmen's meeting when she heard the news for the first time about the pumping station from Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild.

And it's no wonder. Selectmen gave her the green light last summer and the zoning and planning boards also gave her the go ahead.

This week, Ms. Goodson said she has nothing but praise for all the boards that supported the proposal. Remarks she made to the Mariner in a telephone interview last week were not directed toward any particular governmental body in town but just an expression of her frustration that plans were allowed to move forward without anyone bringing the pumping station to her attention until now, she said.

In light of all the effort and energy put into the proposal, we admire Ms. Goodson's magnanimous attitude toward town officials.

But we feel while it's impossible for selectmen to know everything that's happening in town, they should have known better. Being ignorant about whether or not the site might be needed for a pumping station is no excuse for not checking it out before encouraging the applicant.

The good news is: the possibility of a market at the old North Cohasset Fire Station doesn't appear to be completely dead.

We hope the cooperative will take a chance that the town won't need the site two years down the road because The Ancient Farmer's Market would be a nice addition to Cohasset.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Condition of tennis courts disputed

To the Editor:

This summer my son and husband drove to Weymouth each evening to play tennis on their courts because they are lit until 11 p.m. I read Mr. Vanderweil's remarks regarding lights on our tennis courts with incredulity and exasperation. To say the old lights have never been repaired because no one has requested it and there has been no demand is simply untrue. Perhaps Mr. Vanderweil will recall the meeting at the Community Center when the plans for the news fields were unveiled to the public for comment. I repeatedly requested lighting for the courts along with lighted volleyball courts, and Mr. Vanderweil referred to my repeated requests "as beating a dead horse."

At the same meeting, Clark Chatterton assured me "that he would get my lights." Many years ago I met with Mr. Doyon to request the repair of the existing lights and suggested a timer be installed so nearby residents would not be bothered by late night light and noise.

Mr. Sawchuk's remarks regarding balls going across the courts is also not based in reality. Reasonably good players send balls across courts all the time. Furthermore, what will happen during high school team play – will the coaches have to stop play on all courts to retrieve wayward balls? Netting absolutely should be installed between the courts not only to facilitate tennis players but to prevent the rollerblade-hockey games being played on the courts.

Perhaps the cement retaining wall is crumbling because hockey pucks are being hurled into it by people using the courts for hockey games. At the rate these courts are decomposing and the lack of general maintenance, all efforts should be made to protect the surfaces.

In view of the fact that an additional $25,000 is to be requested of the taxpayers for this ongoing project, those in charge should make the people of Cohasset feel their money was not wasted. These courts should be lit and locked by the police each evening to assure the taxpayers that no further vandalism affects these courts.

Virginia Ferenz is responding to a story on the tennis courts that appeared on page 24 of last week's Cohasset Mariner.

Upscale towns with rail thrive

To the Editor:

Two more empty store fronts have appeared in the Village very recently, making for a current total of four. We see this over and over, as hopeful stores open and then fail. Worse, I read that our historic, landmark Red Lion Inn is for sale, owing back taxes.

When the Greenbush line ran, we did not have this failure rate. Upscale towns with commuter rail thrive, as we did.

The Greenbush right-of-way foes and their "coastal coalition" of a few thousand people are holding our town and the whole South Shore economy hostage.

The Greenbush right-of-way has been there for more than 100 years. Restoration has been under study for at least 10. What excuse is there for people to have bought along the track and then try to stop the train? It reminds me of those who used to buy near the Music Circus and then complained about the music.

Anyone who favors Greenbush restoration should please call or write the Governor. He needs and wants to hear from you.

Osgood School — facility and educational deficiencies

By RICHARD SILVIA

Officials say the gymnasium, shown here, is inadequate at the Osgood School.

The School Facilities Study currently underway by the Town of Cohasset School Facilities Committee and the architectural firm of Earl R. Flansburgh & Associates has confirmed that the 70-year-old Osgood School is profoundly inadequate to meet our district's educational requirements. Moreover, the Cohasset Fire Department is on record with substantial concerns related to the site and the building. Site safety concerns which they have noted are as follows:

a) Ripley Road to Sohier Street is a major response route for the Fire Department. Congestion at the intersection and by vehicles making curbside pickups and drop-offs severely impairs rapid response by fire and ambulance trucks.

b) The natural attraction to emergency vehicles by small children makes for a very dangerous mix in this area. There is little buffering between the drop-off area and where emergency vehicles pass.

c) Emergency vehicle access to and around the facility is a problem during school hours. Frequently, fire lanes and other access routes are blocked by unauthorized parking of automobiles.

Building safety concerns:

a) There area a multitude of cubby holes, closets, storage areas, stairs and nooks and crannies where youngsters tend to hide in a fire situation.

b) Over the years, cloakrooms have been co-opted for other uses and now the hallways are lined with clothing and displays that would contribute greatly to the rapid spread of fire in the exitways.

c) Excess dead storage in the basement area is contributing to the overall fire loading of the building.

These individual conditions collectively add up to a dangerous condition in the event of a fire either at the Osgood School or in the immediate neighborhood. In addition, the electrical system design of 1926 could not have anticipated an educational program with "Star Wars" technology of Xerox machines, personal computers or television! The typical Osgood classroom has two electrical outlets. The overloading of these outlets further increases the possibility of fire. The building-related concerns of the fire officials are a direct product of the educational obsolescence of the facility.

The original Osgood School was built 70 years ago as Ripley Road School. A 1950 addition added four classrooms. In recent years, the auditorium/gymnasium was converted into classrooms and the former rifle range in the basement has been converted into a library and resource rooms. This 29,981 square foot, wood frame structure serves 416 students in grades K-3. The current educational program incorporates 16 classrooms, one special education classroom and three special education resource rooms, one Chapter One area, a library, a physical education room and one room which is shared by the art and music programs.

Space needs of a modern educational program and an expanded enrollment have overtaken the storage and classroom spaces and reduced the size and/or displaced much of the core space as well at Osgood. Major areas of concern:

• The Osgood School no longer has core facilities to serve as school gathering space or a cafeteria.

• The physical education space is inadequate in size to accommodate the curriculum.

• The original library has been replaced by classrooms; and the current library, which is too small to accommodate the current enrollment, is located in the basement. It has no natural light or handicapped access.

• The joint art/music room, which is too small for either use, must be reconfigured daily so that it will accept both uses.

• Classrooms are too small and below state standards.

• Storage space is virtually nonexistent in the classrooms and throughout the building.

• The heating system is very old and in need of repair as well as a boiler replacement.

• The electrical system has numerous deficiencies and must be completely replaced if it is to safely serve modern technology requirements.

• The windows throughout the building must be replaced.

• Handicapped accessibility is a major problem. Upgrading the building to meet current standards would require an elevator and ramps.

If Osgood is retained, it must be completely reconfigured and renovated to meet minimum code requirements and to provide the space to meet the educational program of the district. Its renovation to meet the minimum educational program as a K-3 facility would reduce the number of classrooms available from 16 to 12 and would be undertaken without state financial assistance.

For all these reasons, the state no longer considers it to be a viable educational facility. The state has notified Cohasset that the Osgood School does not meet the state's criteria for reimbursement assistance for two primary reasons: the site is too small to accommodate an elementary school (four acres versus a minimum of 14), and the facility is a 70-year-old wood frame building that cannot meet fire codes for school use. The state will not participate in any renovation or addition to the school building or site.

This comprehensive study has confirmed physical aspects at each of our three schools that fall below minimum standards to accommodate current instructional requirements. At Osgood, areas of deficiency include classroom size, core spaces which are inadequate or nonexistent and a physical inability to provide access to technology. At the Deer Hill School, classrooms are reasonably sized to meet the educational program for fourth-, fifth- and sixth-graders, but all the core spaces including the library/media center, gymnasium, cafeteria, art and music rooms need to be expanded to accommodate our current student population. Additional classrooms will also be required. However, the study concluded that at the Junior/Senior High School the existing facilities are adequate to meet enrollment needs through 2005.

Based on these findings, the Cohasset School Facilities Committee and its architects are developing several options to meet the school district's space needs over the next 10 years. One of these options will incorporate the renovation of the Osgood School at town expense. Other options would permit our needs to be met with the 60 percent state funding available. These options would result in replacing the Osgood School with a new building and finding alternate uses for the Osgood site.

At the upcoming Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting, the members of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee will present the result of the study and present several options involving renovations and/or new construction to our existing schools to meet our long-term educational needs. Voters will be asked to support additional funds to further investigate these options to determine the most comprehensive and economically realistic approach to meeting the educational needs of the Cohasset Public Schools.

Informational meetings will be held at the Deer Hill School cafeteria Thursday, Oct. 26, at 7:30 p.m. and the Osgood School library Thursday, Nov. 2, at 7 p.m., to discuss the existing conditions at our schools and the educational needs for our elementary schools. A tour of each school and a question and answer session are scheduled.

For additional information call Richard Silvia, chairman of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee, at 383-0500 or Stephen Hart, superintendent of Schools of the Cohasset Public Schools, at 383-6111.

Richard Silvia is chairman of the School Facilities Committee.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CHL comment letters appreciated

To the Editor:

I'd like to thank the hundreds of Cohasset residents who sent in comment letters to Dept. of Environmental Protection (DEP) Commissioner David Struhs on the pending Site Assignment Application submitted by Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) for their proposed 27.5 acre, 900 tons per day landfill expansion. Those comment letters will have an impact, and will help stop this expansion once and for all.

In 1991, when CHL was trying to convince us of the benefits of dumping MWRA sludge, grits and screening at CHL, they sent out a letter to everyone in town to tell us of the disadvantages of an expanded garbage landfill, which is what they are proposing right now. In that mailing, CHL described a "trash landfill" as follows: "high gas production," "leachate could be toxic," "wind blown litter can be a problem" and "generally big operations," and "a facility disposing of 40 to 50 truck loads of solid waste per day." How right they are!

Even though the formal comment period ended Monday on the Site Assignment Application, there is still something we all can do before DEP makes its decision on the application Dec. 1. Write to Gov. William Weld, State House, Boston, 92133 (FAX# 727-9725) and ask him to reject this application, because, according to CHL, the proposed expansion will increase noxious odors throughout Cohasset with high landfill gas production; further contaminate wetlands, surface and ground waters with potentially toxic leachate; blow litter into the adjacent Whitney Woods; and increase traffic of large garbage trucks over Route 3A and Route 228.

Train revival is bad idea

To the Editor:

Instituting a state-of-the-art ferry system around the Boston shoreline is a wonderful idea. With feeder buses on shore and ferries to use the roadway of the sea, the traffic woes around Boston could be greatly alleviated. With this in mind, the revival of the defunct Greenbush rail like along the coast of the South Shore seems ludicrous. The old train line winds through hundreds and hundreds of backyards and has at-grade crossings on more than 40 heavily traveled streets.

The South Shore has changed greatly during the 30 years the tracks have sat unused, and this rail line is no longer a viable option. The projected time of travel by train from Greenbush to Boston beats the Plymouth and Brockton bus, which currently runs along the same route through Scituate, Cohasset and part of Hingham, by only 10 minutes.

Please, Governor Weld, it's time to come out and admit that the revival of the old train is plainly just a bad idea. There are better alternatives that are less expensive, less intrusive and just as efficient. Let the people in those towns that would be ruined take their lives off of hold and let them start looking forward to using the water road to Boston, rather than dreading the diesel fumes and 105-decibel whistle in their backyards.

Proposed Sohier Street driveway gets first run

Cohasset Plaza access sought

By ALISON SHYER
Cohasset Mariner

With a warning that approval would probably come with "a laundry list of conditions," the planning board last week sent Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko back to the drawing board with his plans for a new entrance to the plaza.

Staszko has proposed adding an entrance/exit driveway, separated by an island, about 200 feet from 3A on Sohier Street across from the Mobil station.

The entrance, according to Staszko's attorney Charles Humphreys, would be for the convenience of those shoppers coming west on Sohier Street from Cohasset center. Instead of making the difficult left turn onto 3A to reach the Plaza's existing entrance, there would be the option to make the left turn into the parking lot from Sohier Street. The exit onto Sohier Street would be a right turn only, according to the plan.

Although some members of the board seemed to be against the very idea of a new entrance, Chairman Alfred Moore asked Staszko to rework the plans but said that he couldn't guarantee that they would be accepted.

Humphreys questioned the usefulness of the undertaking.

"Don't send us on a fool's errand," he said. If the "fundamental positions were against the plan," he said, then the board should "deny it now and let us go onto the next step."

At issue is the entrance, to the right of the island, that is curved towards 3A. While seeming to invite more traffic from that direction, it would actually facilitate making the 180-degree turn into the driveway which will funnel traffic one-way around the building.

"We want to make the entrance accessible to everyone," Humphreys said. "But the plan can be reconfigured."

Another point of contention was whether the plan would, as according to the proponent's traffic analyst, cut down on 3A traffic. The new entrance, according to this study, would cut traffic on 3A by 6 percent or 22 cars during peak hours.

Moore angrily discounted the study as falling far short of a complete analysis of the impact the new entrance will have on traffic.

But Staszko said in a telephone interview this week that Andover-based Vanasse Associates, the firm he hired, conducted a full-blown traffic study.

Moore went on to say that he was upset and angry that Staszko wasn't being forthcoming about his plans for the Plaza.

"It's unfair to look at traffic flow without addressing what might be there that will significantly alter (that flow). Instead of coming in and laying the cards on the table, you shuffle and wave...and underestimate our intelligence," Moore said.

Humphreys, who said several time that Staszko "only wants to be treated like everyone else," was incensed by Moore's comments.

"This is a simple, straightforward plan. All we propose is to improve traffic access to our site.

"We're not responsible for every other event and we don't lose rights because the highway department or the town has neglected to do (its job).

"To suggest that there is anything disingenuous (about this plan) is prejudicing."

Moore later apologized for losing his temper.

"I don't like to be misled...If I was vociferous, I apologize. It's not my style or my intent."

But, he added, "I'm not going to apologize for being upset."

Staszko said any development of phase III of the plaza would be subject to a site plan review and the planning board could decide close the driveway at that time.

He said he wants to make accessing the shopping center safer and the proposed driveway would have no economic benefit to him.

It would not help Stop & Shop "sell another head of lettuce," Staszko said.

While Moore declared himself still open minded, other members of the board seemed to feel that the project was a bad idea, no matter how presented.

Citing the fact that Sohier Street is a "major thoughfare" with two schools, neighborhoods and pedestrain traffic, board member William Good, who said he felt "strongly," called the plan "an accident waiting to happen."

"We are charged with good planning," he said. "And I think this entrance will just encourage people to drive faster (onto Sohier Street from Rte. 3A)."

Board member Jean Simonds who called the intersection "one of the worst corners in Cohasset" said that she agreed with Good.

"There's no reason to make (this corner) worse, which is what I think this will do."

The only real encouragment to come from the board was from Robert Sturdy, who said that he was initially against an added egress when plans for the Plaza were presented in the late 80s, but who has since apparently changed his mind. He cited the board's decision to allow Shaw's supermarket a driveway on a residential street, and the need for consistencey and a "level playing field."

Shaw's, which owns Cushing Plaza and plans to develop it with a supermarket, has approval for driveway on Beechwood Street. The current plaza has two driveways on Beechwood.

Sturdy agreed with the board that the plans needed to be crystallized and suggested changes that he thought would help accomplish the

Computer to streamline record keeping, chiefs

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

To streamline an outdated record-keeping system, a majority selectmen will support a request from the police and fire chiefs to spend $55,000 for a new state-of-the art computer system.

Voters will have the final say on the proposal which will come before the Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting.

Selectman Peter Pratt will not support the request because it is taking the town further away from establishing a regional 9-1-1 emergency communications system with other towns.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said she met with Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and toured the departments' full storage facilities.

What she found is "a Byzantine paper trail required to meet legal requirements state has for reporting," Goedecke said.

She noted that a single arrest for operating under the influence (OUI) requires a police officer to fill out 13 forms, a process that can take about two hours.

While the computer system won't completely do away with that type of drudgery – it will streamline things, she said.

Acknowledging other towns are also spending money on this type of system, Pratt said "this is the final brick in the final wall of a fiefdom of our own dispatch center."

"As much as I believe in CAD (computer system), my fear is this is essentially giving up a dream, the prospect of a deliverable 9-1-1 central dispatch center," he said.

Cohasset led the charge two years ago to form a regional fire district which would include 9-1-1 central dispatch but other towns in the proposed district opted to go ahead with their own 9-1-1 centers.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the town should continue to pursue regional issues "but there's not a lot of interest (in regional dispatch) right now."

Goedecke said if the town doesn't go ahead with its own computer system, it would be hurting itself.

"You want the tail to wag the dog," she told Pratt. "The tail has tried to wage the dog and the dog won't budge.

"We'll be hurting ourselves by waiting longer."

Noonan said, 9-1-1 aside, the new system would still "revolutionize what we have."

Lincoln said the system would "do away with an antiquated system of dispatch record keeping."

This week at Pratt's urging, selectmen decided to see if any other towns in the area would like to pursue regional 9-1-1 dispatch service. Cohasset will send a letter to Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Hull to see if officials there are interested in discussing the issue.

goals of the project. The main issue, he said, is that while the Plaza could use a new entrance, it doesn't need a new exit.

"Exiting is a breeze," he said.

Sturdy said he agreed with a suggestion from Moore that the turn onto Sohier be sharpened, to force cars to slow down. He also wondered whether extending the existing island on Sohier Street would deter cars from crossing Sohier to get to the Plaza from the Mobil station.

Aside from the board members' misgivings, there were several concerned Cohasset residents at the meeting.

Max Pounder, a member of the town's design review board, address the issue of aesthetics, including the impact of the necessary elimination of some of the tree lines; a view of dumpsters, transformers and gas meters.

He said without the screening from the trees, Sohier Street would look onto "the back of buildings, with elevated doors and cement stairs...not a very handsome sight."

Kevin O'Donnell of Fair Oaks Lane argued that there was no consideration for pedestrians and suggested that the board require sidewalks at the intersection.

Robert Davenport of Sohier Street expressed concern about the certainty, by his estimation, that traffic from Scituate would increase on Sohier Street.

"People will go Sohier Street to avoid King Street (3A)," he said.

Staszko plans to come in front of the board with his revised plans Nov. 15.

Chiefs not opposed to driveway

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said in an Oct. 18 letter to Donald Staszko, owner of Cohasset Plaza, that he is not opposed to the additional driveway to the existing Plaza.

He explained that Sohier Street would provide the fire department with a "more favorable response route" to the Plaza.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said he is not against a Sohier Street entrance to the Plaza.

He said there were "a lot of near misses" from people turning left onto 3A and the the new entrance would alleviate that problem for Cohasset residents who would be able to access the Plaza from Sohier Street.

Noonan said the driveway's proposed location 200 feet from 3A would allow those turning onto Sohier from 3A enough room to stop for any cars making a left turn into the Plaza.

Caring for someone is knowing when to ask for help.

When certain daily routines become difficult for an older person to handle alone — dressing, bathing, preparing a meal or keeping track of medications — that's when it's time to consider assisted living.

At Allerton House, the South Shore's premier assisted living community, our residents and their families know that help is there if they need it, 24 hours a day. Allerton House provides pleasant, private apartments and a host of personal services that emphasize independence, dignity and well being.

Comforting, too, is knowing that Allerton House is managed by Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, a trusted name in senior living services for over 45 years.

Residents' water concerns fielded in public forum

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

"How can we fix the water if we can't even turn on the lights?" The rhetorical question echoed from an unknown official and the dozen people sitting in the dark of the Cohasset town hall auditorium last Thursday evening were in complete agreement.

The water commission's public hearing on problems and complaints of town residents came close to being abandoned before it could even begin. No one knew where the auditorium's light switches were located. Luckily, the selectmen's office was the one vacant (and illuminated) room left in the town hall and it was commandered for the hearing.

Once under way, commission chairman Fred Koed stated he hoped the hearing would serve a three-fold purpose. First, to discuss water main improvements of this past summer. Secondly, to highlight pipe replacements to take place next summer and, finally, to inform residents of future planned improvements to the town's water system.

One resident from the Forest Avenue area brought board members a first-hand example of her dissatisfaction with road conditions as a result of last summer's construction.

Spindrift Lane resident Susan Suddath produced a care tire rim which was badly dented. Suddath claimed that the rim's damage had occurred when she drove into a pothole on Forest Avenue. She further related that prior to this accident her car had sustained two flat tires on the same stretch of road.

Diane Watson, also of Sprindrift Lane, gave commissioners a list of post-water project concerns from area residents. These included unsatisfactory clean-up after construction, problematic paving and road conditions, as well as missing street signs.

Commission consulting engineer Domenic Tutela of Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc., said he would inspect the Forest Avenue area and report back to the commission. Tutela informed residents that the present covering on Forest Avenue was a temporary overlay and next summer the town highway department would put down a permanent surface.

Commission member William Montuori admitted, "Forest Avenue is a main road but of very poor quality."

Resident of Beechwood Street complained of extremely low water pressure. One resident in particular stated that he "had not been able to fill an upstairs washing machine and at the same time take a shower for more than 30 years."

Tutela explained that this was due to the size of the piping in that section of town. Undersized copper pipes (1-1/2 to 2" in diameter) were in place instead of 8" pipes which are the current standard.

While noting residents' concerns, Tutela said a more immediate problem with low water pressure was the fact that virtually no fire protection could be offered to homes fed by undersized water mains. He then showed residents a town map highlighted with improvements due to take place over next spring and summer. Included were the cleaning and lining of water mains on Jerusalem Road and Pleasant Street and the laying of new 10" mains on Sohier, Beach and parts of Pond Street.

One resident questioned the commission about last summer's town-wide water ban. Koed admitted that low pressure, not lack of water, was the main reason.

"It's silly to have to put a (water) ban on, but because of a lack of pressure it was necessary," he said. Citing the desire of certain town residents to place a high priority on green grass, Koed reasoned, "If it comes to watering lawns or taking showers, I know where I'll stand."

"And we know where we'll stand," laughingly responded fellow commissioner Rob Kasameyer.

Because of severe drought conditions of the past spring and summer, Koed stated the water level in the town pond was a record 11 feet below normal.

Tutela, in agreement, warned that "there might have to be some sort of restriction if not a ban" possibly for next summer as well.

Another area of discussion concerned public roads versus private ways when it came to water main improvements. One resident challenged the board as to how they could expect public road taxpayers to foot the bill for improvements made to homeowners on private ways.

Koed explained that "we (the town) don't maintain beyond the private property line," therefore while a public road may receive a new larger main, the piping from that main into homes on a private way would still be furnished with undersized piping unless replaced at the homeowners' expense.

But Koed stated that "we (the town) need to get on the ball and make some policy decisions" concerning the repairing and improving of water facilities on private ways.

Citing Beechwood Street resident Wayne Sawchuk's caution that lack of swift completion of next year's piping improvements could hurt future requests for additional town funds, Koed agreed. The commission understands that funds are more easily obtained when a majority of residents benefit than when it is the minority which is asking for improvements, he said.

Selectmen to back town paying for new bleachers

Selectmen will support the town borrowing $60,000 to pay for new, permanent bleachers on the new high school field.

The request will be put before voters at the Nov. 6 special town meeting.

The cost can be incorporated into the long-term the debt the town incurred to pay for the $775,000 athletic complex at the high school and would add about a penny to the tax rate, Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said.

At first selectmen seemed to be against spending the money for permanent bleachers.

"Do you think it would be a major setback if folks had to sit on the hillside for a couple of seasons?" Selectman Peter Pratt asked.

But athletic director Clark Chatterton explained that the slope on the home side of the field is steeper than initially envisioned and there is not much room for spectators to stand along the sidelines.

The existing 30-year-old high school bleachers have been repainted and are being used on the visitors' side of the new field. The new bleachers will seat over 400, Chatterton said.

Chatterton agreed to approach the school committee about the possibility of assessing a 50 cent surcharge on tickets with the money going to help pay off the bleachers. He said gate receipts will be up because the high school can hold night games on the fields, which are lighted.

"I think we have a first-class facility," he said.

The fields committee will try to secure private funding to install a press box on the bleachers, Chatterton said.

Students make strides against breast cancer

On Sept. 24, the American Cancer Society held its annual Walk for Breast Cancer in Boston, with more than 15,000 people participating. Five members of the Community Volunteer Service at Cohasset High School were among the thousands of walkers.

Andrea Mercurio, Maureen Murphy, Christine Burns, Liz Kidder and Kristen Moore raised more than $2,500 through pledges donated by friends, family and peers. An additional $150 was collected during both lunch periods a week before the walk and donated in the name of Cohasset High School. The walk brought in more than $1.5 million.

The Cohasset Council on Aging is offering many programs for seniors this fall.

A Step Program is being offered Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 7:30 to 8:15 a.m. with Mary Jane Butera. ($2 per class)

Bridge classes are held Mondays and Tuesdays with Barbara Elliott at 2 p.m. The cost is $24 for six sessions.

Craft classes are offered Tuesdays with Dotty Bryanton at 10 a.m. ($2 per class)

"Stretch, Tone, and Strengthen" exercises are held Tuesdays and Thursdays with Marion Acher at 7:45 a.m. ($2 per class)

Easy Does It Exercise takes place Tuesdays at 11 a.m. ($2) with Ginny Waterman.

Chi Gong is offered Fridays at 9 a.m. ($2) with Barbara Alger.

A Gourmet Cooking Class is taught by Anna Abbruzzese Monday, Wednesday and Thursday ($3) in St. Stephen's Church kitchen (Monday, Wednesday) and Thursday at the South Shore Community Center.

Watercolor Classes are instructed by Kit Bryant Thursday at 1:30 p.m. for $2.50 per class.

Bowling for Seniors takes place Thursday at 9:30 p.m. with Bill O'Connell ($1/string, $2.75/three strings).

A Knitting Class is held Friday at 1 p.m. with Edna Finegan ($2).

A Book Discussion Group, led by Sandie Kent, meets Monday at 10 a.m. (donation).

Travel Troupers is for those interested in discovering new sights, food and fine art.

Line Dancing with Rita Sanford is offered Wednesday at 9:30 a.m. for $2.50.

There are several Computer classes with instructor Mary McElroy on Friday, including Quicken, Windows, Word and Works.

Other classes offered include Fit It, Make It, Paint It! with Ray Thompson (Monday, 2:30 p.m., $40 for 10 weeks); and Ikebana/Japanese Flower Arranging (with Fran O'Toole, Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon, $60/$40 for over age 60, 4 sessions).

The Senior Center provides referral information and assistance with programs such as home care, health care, supplemental security, legal assistance, visiting nurse, fuel assistance, Medicare and respite care.

A shuttle is available to help seniors meet essential needs such as medical appointments, banking, shopping, hair appointments and attending church services. Call 383-9112 for information.

Seniors to 'visit' Hawaii

A motorcoach trip to the Huke Lau Restaurant in Chicopee, Mass. is being planned for seniors Thursday, Nov. 16. The $35 price includes a lunch and entertainment, which will feature an exciting show taking seniors on a "trip" to the Hawaiian Islands, and Hawaiian fire, war and explosive volcano dances.

For reservations call Libby Pompeo at 383-0711 or sent a check made out to "G & W Tours."

Alzheimer's program offered

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Council on Aging is sponsoring an Alzheimer's Program Wednesday, Nov. 8, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., at the Cohasset Senior Center in the South Shore Community Center. The event is in honor of Alzheimer's Month.

All are welcome to attend, including caretakers and those who wish to become better educated on the subject. Admission is free and refreshments will be served.

For further information or to reserve a place call Pat Carleton, LICSW, at the League, 383-0771 or Anna Abbruzzese at the Senior Center, 383-9112. Seating is limited.

Girls sleepwalk into tourney

Limp 1-0 win over Hull worries coach

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The Cohasset High girls soccer team qualified for the Division 3 South Sectional tourney, but if the Skippers did it any uglier they may just scare away the competition.

Cohasset, whose record now stands at 6-5-4 on the season, allowed the lowly Hull Pirates into the game by dropping play down a notch. Make that a few notches.

"I was relieved we won yesterday," said a none too pleased Maureen O'Day-Clark, the Skippers' coach. "They (Hull) worked hard and went to the ball."

After an embarrassing first half where Cohasset wasn't able to split the goal posts with a tally, the Skippers finally decided to go to work and settle matters once and for all. Their first goal and eventual game-winner came at the 30 minute mark. Andrea Grew grabbed a give and go and proceeded to boot a nicely-placed shot between the post and netminder on the left side.

O'Day-Clark was pleased with the defense and steady game put forth by midfielder Tammy Maitland. However, as far as the offense goes, the Skippers have no choice but to play a more up-tempo game if the team expects to cause any damage in the tournament.

"We really didn't have much offense," O'Day-Clark said.

With the tournament pairings expected to be announced next Thursday, O'Day-Clark's role will

Goal-scoring drought is field hockey's downfall

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The Skippers were as fierce a competitor as any field hockey team in the South Shore League this season. In the last week they played second-place Hanover to a scoreless tie, lost by one goal to third-place East Bridgewater and tied Atlantic Coast League squad Marshfield, 1-1.

But as tough as Cohasset played this fall, the squad couldn't seem to knock home the clutch goals to put teams away.

The team's current 3-9-2 record was the furthest scenario head coach Debby Bostwick envisioned during the preseason.

"When I looked at my squad this year I thought we were golden," Bostwick said. "The thing was we couldn't put the ball in the net. But it's not because the girls didn't try. We had a lot of inconsistencies. It was the luck of the

Fantastic finish lights football fire

Leading things off is Dave on high school football.

Just when I thought high school football had turned dull and lost some of its thunder to the South Shore soccer boom, Sunday's battle between Marshfield and Hingham restored my gridiron faith.

You want excitement? How about this. Trailing 36-27 with 1:59 to play in the game, the MHS Rams scored a touchdown, recovered a Hingham fumble with 27 seconds left and then booted a 35-yard field goal as time expired to somehow win 37-36.

Holy Heroics, Batman! Or as MHS coach Lou Silva said afterwards, "The football gods were looking over our shoulder and smiling on us."

It was one of the best football games this reporter has ever seen and if you weren't there, you missed something special. Consider the following:

*There wasn't a single punt the entire day as the two high-octane offenses scored 73 combined points in 44 minutes of action. (The Atlantic Coast League plays 11 minute quarters while the South Shore League plays only 10 minute quarters.) It was almost like flag football out there as both teams moved the ball over the field almost at will. "Where was the defense today?" Silva said. "I don't know. Hingham's offense was just awesome. Their quarterback (Steve Shore) ran the option about as good as I've seen." The Ram offense was led by QB Mike Marino and the speedy running back trio of Matt

Reardon

Generous, Matt Kalapinski and Dan Gemme. The Rams had more than 500 yards in total offense.

*Ram Ben Loomis hadn't kicked a field goal all season prior to the 35-yard winner on Sunday. Chris Melvin usually handles short field goals and extra points for the Rams, but when it's time for long distance, it's time for Loomis. And with only two seconds left on the clock, Loomis lined up from the left hash mark and boomed the ball right through the uprights with plenty to spare. In fact, I was ten yards deep in the end zone and the ball sailed way over my head as I attempted a leaping catch. The ball may have been good from 50 yards.

*Several of the game's big plays were highlight reel material. For Hingham, Jimmy McDonough returned a first period kickoff 85 yards for a touchdown. In addition, wide receiver Wes Marcks was almost parallel to the ground as he caught a roll-out TD pass from QB Steve Shore in the fourth period. It was a catch Vincent Brisby would draw."

Netminder Gina Rosano deserved better. Her skill in goal and timely saves kept the Skippers in every game. Over the past three contests she registered 57 saves, many of them absolute gems many goaltenders wouldn't have been able to get close to.

The Skippers struck first against the Rams with nine minutes left in the first half. On a corner shot, Katy Medinger drove the ball across the net to Meghan Connolly, who drilled a shot past the Marshfield netminder.

Rosano saved 19 of the 20 shots she faced, but Cohasset wasn't able to poke home the go-ahead goal. The Skippers finished with 12 shots on net.

Bostwick credited the defensive work of Katie Buckley and Katy Devine and midfielders Faye Menis and Jo Hurley for their play in setting up the forwards around the Marshfield net. Still, the Skippers couldn't capitalize.

Used to playing on their home field, the smallest in the SSL, Bostwick believes the girls became fatigued, especially on the heels of two games. "The girls were tired because it was windy on a large field.

Rosano made a pair of diving saves late in the game during the 0-0 tie against Hanover in a defensive battle. Cohasset was only able to put seven shots on net, though the Skippers had their scoring opportunities.

"We had some really good shots," Bostwick said. "It was a defensive game."

Emily Collins, Menis, Hurley and Alia Afshir stood out stopping the Indians' rushes to the goal and took as much heat as possible off of Rosano.

The EB game was probably the most physical the team has been involved in all year. Bostwick compared it to a football game and three Cohasset players were injured along the way. Connolly missed the entire second half after being hit in the face with the ball. Allison DiLorenzo injured her cheekbone and Menis also sustained an injury.

"We always have a tough time up there," Bostwick said.

Cohasset got off to a slow start and really didn't put pressure on the Vikings until 11 minutes had passed. Again, the team had its chances, but couldn't find the back of the net.

"We played well but we couldn't put the ball in the net," Bostwick said.

Bostwick is already looking ahead to playing on a brand new, regulation-size field next fall. She said more stick-handling will be emphasized, something this year's squad couldn't spend much time on because the restrictions placed on it by the small size of the Cohasset field.

Bostwick knows it wasn't a lack of talent that kept the Skippers from qualifying for this year's tournament, just back-and-forth play.

"Our inconsistency basically kept us from the tournament," Bostwick said. "The seniors knew we were in every game."

Ice skating lessons begin Nov. 12

The Cohasset Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Bay State Ice Skating School, is pleased to announce registration for indoor ice skating lessons for children age five through adults.

The fall seven-week session will be offered Sunday evenings, at the MDC Skating Rink in Weymouth. Sunday classes begin Nov. 12 at 5 p.m. The session consists of seven classes over a seven-week period. Participants may use either figure or hockey skates for lessons. The fee for the seven-week session is $70 for children and $80 for adult participants. The fee includes the weekly rink admission. Should you wish further information or want to register for the indoor skating lessons, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791.

Approximately 12 levels of instruction will be available in groups of 8 to 10 age-appropriate participants by professional instructors. Helmets are mandatory for ages five and six but recommended for all beginners regardless of age.

Registration will be held Sunday, Nov. 5, at 5 p.m., at the Weymouth MDC Ice Rink, however, you will be assured of a place pre-registering by calling 383-6791.

have been proud of. As for Marshfield, QB Mike Marino threaded the needle on a 36-yard TD pass to Brian Caswell in the second half. Also Dan Gemme caught a screen pass deep in the Ram end with under two minutes to go and dashed 65 yards to the Hingham ten yard line. Gemme's catch and run was the key play in the game as it set up the Rams last TD which cut the lead to 36-34.

*Hingham needed only one more snap to win the game. With the ball on their own 44-yard line, 27 seconds left on the clock and the Rams out of time outs, the Harbormen only needed to down the ball one more time and the win was theirs. But somehow the ball was fumbled after being snapped to QB Shore and the Rams recovered. The Rams smartly completed a quick sideline pass to get into field goal range and Loomis came on to make the winning kick. Ouch.

*And lastly not only was it a big game, but it had Super Bowl implications as well. Both the Harbormen and the Rams went into the game tied for first place in the ACL standings with Whitman-Hanson, Rockland and Duxbury (each team had one league loss going into the weekend.) With the Hingham victory, the Rams still have one league loss and if they win the rest of their games and Rockland stumbles (as it almost did against Dennis-Yarmouth on Friday) they could be going to the Division III Super Bowl. Hingham now need some serious help for the post-season.

The worst part of sports isn't losing, it's dealing with injuries.

On Friday night, tragedy struck as Boston University hockey player Travis Roy fractured his neck and became paralyzed after crashing into the boards on what seemed to be a harmless play.

The injury really hit home for South Shore hockey fans. Last year, Hanover native Matt Messing went into cardiac arrest and died after being checked during a Quincy-North Quincy hockey game. Later in the season, a Whitman-Hanson hockey player had his throat sliced open with a skate during a game at Rockland Rink. Another player also had his throat slashed with a skate during a pick-up hockey game at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham in the spring. Only quick work by coaches and EMT's on the scene saved the lives of those two injured players.

And even less serious injuries have been piling up in so-called non-contact sports.

Last week I attended several soccer games. At a Norwell-Hanover boys' match-up on Monday, Norwell's top scorer Dave Goodhue had to be taken from the field by ambulance after fracturing his ankle in the first half. The injury took all the spark out of the Clipper team and the crowd fell silent as Goodhue was carted off.

Then on Thursday at a Hingham-Marshfield boys' soccer game, Hingham's top scorer Mike Sheridan had to leave the game after he collided with another player during a free ball at midfield and knocked out several of his teeth.

For several moments after the injury took place, Sheridan shrieked on the ground in pain. Finally after a few minutes, Sheridan, with bloody towel in hand, left the field and headed right for the orthodontist. Sheridan is one tough player. Last year he played most of the soccer season with a special pad covering the severely bruised kidney he sustained in a lacrosse game.

I enjoy playing and watching sports as much as anyone. And as a former player, I've had to recover from the assorted sprains and pulls. But when you hear an athlete shrieking in pain or lying motionless on the ice, it puts a knot in your stomach.

But the games will go on as they always do. And the injuries will keep mounting. Sports is supposed to be about fun and competition but every once in a while, they show you how fragile life really is.

Joe takes a look at the Sacred Heart and South Shore Vo-Tech sports action and gives his thoughts on what he believes to be the futile efforts of Native Americans calling for baseball fans to boycott what they believe to be offensive souveniers sold at the World Series games between the Braves and Indians. And finally, runners at the back of the Boston Marathon starting line should have no problem hearing the starting gun come April, thanks to changes made in the method of kicking the race off.

Sacred Heart of Kingston's volleyball team continued its steady march to the South Sectional tourney, keeping its perfect 14-0 record alive after dropping Upper Cape in two games. Nicole Silvestri dropped in eight serve points and Danielle Doucett added seven more of her own. The Saints then went on to beat a tough 10-4 Avon squad in three games, 2-1. The final game was a back-and-forth affair with Sacred Heart eventually pulling out a 16-14 victory.

After falling behind 4-0 in the third game, the Saints put together a six-point rally for a 6-4 edge. Emily Hall, Silvestri and Shannon Boggs made the difference for Sacred Heart.

Paced by four goals from Geoff Anstatt, Sacred Heart easily defeated non-league opponent Hull, 6-3, in boys soccer. Kevin Cooper scored for the Saints and Eben Bubbins added a pair of assists. Netminder Mike Sepoy registered eight saves for the win.

Anstatt didn't lose a beat, slamming home four goals in Sacred Heart's 5-2 victory over Bristol-Plymouth. The Saints weren't quite so fortunate in their 4-1 loss to Westport. Randy Gomes provided the only bit of offense for Sacred Heart with his goal. Sepoy played a strong game in goal with 11 saves.

In cross country action, Sacred Heart swept past Avon and Bristol Plymouth in a Mayflower League tri-meet, 25-30 and 25-34, respectively. Sean Patton and Chris Hopkins finished in the third and fourth slots, the top-two finishers for the Saints.

The Lady Saints fell to Avon, 20-35, but received strong showings from Jen Taylor and Claire Sunderland in third and fifth, respectively.

South Shore Vo-Tech was treated to a hat trick from Mike Carey and Ryan Michaelangelo found the back of the net to lead the Vikings to a 4-3 win over Southeastern. A pair of penalty-kick tallies from Michaelangelo and a goal from Carey preserved a 3-3 tie against Tri-County.

* * * *

The days of clicking on the race timer manually when the gun sounds to start the Boston Marathon is over. The 100th running of the Hopkinton-to-Boston classic will feature an elaborate starting method. The starting gun, a .38 calibre police revolver, will have a transducer attached to it that sends an electronic signal to clocks along the 26.2-mile route when fired. The gun will also trigger a pre-recorded howitzer explosion when fired, magnified plenty loud enough for the runners at the back of the pack to hear.

* * * *

Straying into professional sports for just a moment. If the Native Americans think they've received the short end of the stick when it comes to political correctness surrounding the teams in this year's Cleveland-Atlanta matchup in the World Series, they should take a good hard look at Notre Dame's nickname and logo.

The "Fighting Irish" have one of the more ridiculous looking logos; that midget leprechaun with his fists up, ready to duke it out with anyone who crosses him.

Funny thing is, you don't hear a peep from the those people of Irish descent. They love the logo and so do I. The Native Americans are dreaming if they truly believe baseball fans are going to boycott Indians and Braves T-shirts, hats, pins, mugs and all the other souvenirs peddled at Jacobs Field and County Stadium. They're picking the wrong occasion for their fight. It's not the time or place where fans of both teams, aching for a World Series win, are going to ponder the issue. They want to see their team's win.

Cougars put Skippers on the skid

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Skippers traveled to Rochester Monday to face the Old Colony Cougars, after the game had been rained out Saturday. Cohasset couldn't come up with a win, losing by the score of 21-8. Senior Ben Keefe scored his team's only touchdown, with the extra point tacked on by freshman Greg Taylor.

OC struck quickly, scoring on the opening drive when Captain Jonathan Picard hauled in the TD pass from Sean McCleary. The extra point split the uprights and put the Cougars out in front, 7-0. The Skippers couldn't get rolling and were forced to punt. Thiago Leonor snagged McCleary's second TD pass of the quarter, and the extra point once again soared through, giving OC a 14-0 edge.

The Skippers scored in the third quarter after a high snap to OC's punter gave Cohasset the ball with great field position; the OC 17-yard line. Hurley's pass to Taylor was incomplete. But, the pass was thrown backwards, which caused it to be ruled a fumble. Taylor picked it up and rumbled 11 yards before being knocked out of bounds at the 6. Keefe pushed it in from the 6 and Taylor carried for the two-point conversion. That would be all the scoring for CHS, however, as OC went on to push in for another score.

Coach Bob Knurek's team performed well on defense, with key performances turned in by Mike Coates and Brian Riley, who led the team with nine tackles, freshman Kyle Bunstein, Keith Wright and Pat Reynolds. Brian Sasso, the Skippers' force at inside linebacker, was in on several key tackles and kept the OC offense confined to the outside. Bunstein, who also started at linebacker, and Reynolds, playing defensive end. Each came up with eight tackles. Senior Kevin Gentile had four tackles and a fumble recovery.

Taylor gained 61 yards on six carries, quite impressive stats, particularly for a freshman. Taylor's longest run was a 32-yard sprint and he capped off Cohasset's scoring with the extra point. Pat Hurley, the Skippers' sophomore QB, has continued to improve and just missed hitting Keefe for what would have been a sure touchdown pass in the second half.

"You can see our inexperience," said Knurek. "We played a very good game, just let down a few times and Old Colony took advantage of their opportunities. Mentally, we were into the ball game. We just had a few letdowns, and those are what hurt us."

include getting her team ready mentally, as well as physically. The Skippers are in somewhat of a funk at this point and O'Day-Clark knows this is the worst time of year to be playing lethargically.

"You really have to get them pumped up mentally," she said.

Last year, after eliminating Abington in the tournament with a rousing 4-0 victory, Cohasset lost all its rhythm against eventual divisional winner, Sacred Heart of Kingston.

"We played like we couldn't kick the ball," O'Day-Clark said of the loss to SH.

The Skippers can't afford a letdown if they win a big game in the tourney this year. O'Day-Clark plans to do her part in not letting that happen. The rest is up to the girls.

Frosh gridironers loaded with potential

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset High School's freshman team, one which plays both freshmen and JV, has quietly rolled to a 2-2 record, while holding back an unknown amount of potential.

The freshman squad, led by captains Alex Russell, Adam Sasso and Greg Taylor, is comprised of 19 freshmen, five eighth-graders, and eight seventh-graders.

Cohasset jumped out to a 1-0 record with a win over Hanover, then fell to 1-2 after two losses to Scituate and Norwell. But last Saturday the Skippers hosted the Nantucket Whalers at Milliken Field and rolled to a 16-6 victory over the visitors.

Taylor scored both touchdowns, behind the dominating offensive line of Luke Caldwell, Sasso, Jordan Fiore, Russell and Greg Parkinson. Justin Golden led the aerial attack with several strikes fired to end Sean Parkinson.

The defense shut out the Whalers; the only touchdown was allowed on a kickoff. Defensive prowess was displayed all over the field by the Skippers. Lineman John-Paul Laugelle and defensive back Benny Roine provided Cohasset with bone-jarring hits and key tackles. Mike Rossi at defensive back and linebacker Raheem Shepard terrorized the Whaler offense.

Cohasset's special teams are led by Jamie DeMichele, Andy Curran, Danny Mulligan and Sean Conte. Rossi serves as kicker, providing booming punts and kickoffs for Cohasset.

The Skippers' best strength might be their depth. When a lineman or linebacker goes down, eighth-graders Liam O'Donnell and Matt Santoro can step into the role without a problem, providing either solid blocking or tight defense. Versatile freshman Tim Cullinan can play virtually any position on the field and made an important tackle in the Nantucket game during one of the Skippers' defensive stands. Ben Ketchum can play end and defensive back and gives the Skippers leadership both on and off the field.

The Cohasset backfield could be the most solid unit on the team. Kyle Bunstein, Rossi, Shepard and Taylor have all put points up on the board for the Skippers this year. Not only are these backs capable of running the ball, but each has thrown ferocious blocks for the others.

But all has not come up roses for the Skippers this season. During the Nantucket game, both Roine and Shepard sustained injuries; Roine to his shoulder and Shepard to his hand. Brian Hurley has also seen time on the disabled list. Both Sasso and Russell, key members of the line, have been banged up, while freshman defensive end Greg Boyne has also missed games.

Head coach Torin Sweeney and coach Brandon DeVoe have masterminded the Skippers' season this year. Sweeney also is the wrestling coach and softball coach at CHS, while teaching physical education at Deer Hill. DeVoe, who also played football at CHS, has kept the defense fired up all year long and will continue to do so.

If and when the Skippers unleash their potential on the gridiron, teams all over will be heading for cover while the Cohasset defense throws more shutouts and the offense continues to put points up on the board. The Skippers freshman squad should provide Cohasset with a strong group of gridiron stars for many years.

Cohasset Business

Stop & Shop may purchase Purity supermarket chain

Some stores will be divested, officials say

By ROB ROGERS
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset business leaders say they do not yet know what effect Stop & Shop Companies, Inc.'s proposed $225 million acquisition of the Purity chain will have on the local business community.

"Things are still so nebulous at this point that it's hard to take a position, and idle speculation is never appropriate," said Keith Knowles, president of the Cohasset chamber of commerce. "We would need to see what actually took place before we would be able to respond. We are always concerned with any issue that affects the business community, and we are always looking for ways to enhance our position within the local economy."

Stop & Shop spokesmen say they expect to reach an agreement on the purchase with the Federal Trade Commission and the state Attorney General's office within the next week. Spokesmen for the Quincy-based company believe the agreement will require Stop & Shop to divest 17 of its Massachusetts stores.

While Stop & Shop spokesmen say they do not yet know which stores the company may have to sell as part of the deal, federal officials say they will likely target areas in which Stop & Shop would have a virtual monopoly.

"Those (areas) could have two stores across the street from each other, two stores in the same town, or two stores in the same county," said Richard Smith, an attorney for the Federal Trade Commission's pre-merger office in Washington, D.C. "It depends on whether we feel a particular chain has a lock on grocery shopping within a certain area. We look at how far people are willing to drive to shop, and whether there are other, smaller stores – like a 7-11 – who might also be providing competition in the area."

Stop & Shop spokesmen say they are not sure whether that requirement will force the company to choose between Scituate's Purity Supreme and Cohasset's Stop & Shop superstore, two major supermarkets operating within the same market area.

"It really depends on the volume of people and competition in the area," said Stop & Shop spokesman S. Terry Vandewater. "In Quincy, for example, we have two stores, but there are plenty of other players in that market: Star Market and Roche Brothers, for example. If we did have to make a choice, we would stay with the store that was the most profitable and that brought in the most members of a community."

Shaw's Supermarket spokesman Bernie Rogan said whatever Stop & Shop does will have no effect on Shaw's plans to build a shopping center with a supermarket at Cushing Plaza.

"We have no intentions to do anything other than to open a Cohasset store," Rogan said.

Eighty-seven percent of Stop & Shop's annual sales volume comes from 60,000-square-foot superstores like the Cohasset store, according to the company's 1994 report to the federal Securities and Exchange Commission.

While the deal could force Stop & Shop to divest its Scituate Harbor Purity Supreme, Scituate business leaders say they do not believe the area will be without a grocery store, whatever the outcome of the Stop & Shop deal.

"What Stop & Shop has told us is that if they cannot hold on to the store, they will be looking to divest it to a company interested in operating a smaller type of store, rather than a superstore," Joseph Hayes, president of Scituate Federal Savings Bank, said.

Stop & Shop currently operates 130 stores, including 103 superstores, in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and New York, with fiscal 1994 sales of $3.8 billion, according to a news release from the company.

Annual sales have risen by $436,636 since fiscal year 1992, according to the company's 1994 annual report. The company currently employs about 30,000 people – 14,000 in Massachusetts – and owns 4,956 square feet of selling space, making it the largest supermarket chain in New England.

Investment club to start

All area residents interested in forming an investment club are invited to attend a startup meeting scheduled for Thursday, Oct. 26, at 7 p.m. in the meeting room of the Scituate Town Library.

Topics to be discussed include organizational planning, membership requirements and goals.

Halloween fund-raiser set

The Haunted Path, a fund-raiser to help raise awareness and funds for the Scituate animal shelter, will be held Friday and Saturday at the Jenkins School, First Parish Road in Scituate.

From 6 to 8 p.m. Friday, youngsters 10 years old and under can take part in Friendly Night. Scary Night will be held from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Saturday for youngster 10 years old and older.

This is the fourth season that Jacari Services has presented "Walk the Haunted Path."

Organizers Susan Jacobs and Faun-Marie Oliari expect some 2,000 visitors; admission is $2.

R&C Farms of Norwell will offer a hayride for everybody for $1 per ride, and S.H.O.R.E. (Scituate High Opportunities and Resources for Education) will hold a small concession stand for the "victims" to nibble on while waiting in line. Special items will be "spider cider" and "parasite poppers" or popcorn.

The shelter will be selling items, and Jacari Services has offered four different raffles: guess the weight of the pumpkin; three decorative holiday flags, handpainted folk art hanging and handcrafted Sanibel shell frame.

Mystery night at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cushing Plaza, Cohasset, will hold a Mystery Night Wednesday, Nov. 1, at 7 p.m. Boston and Cape Cod mystery authors Jeremiah Healy, Sally Gunning and J. Dayne Lamb will read from, and talk about, their books.

Healy, a first-rate mystery novelist, has written 10 books featuring John Francis Cuddy, an ex-Army MP turned insurance company detective, who is a fascinating mixture of toughness and vulnerability.

Gunning's Cape Cod roots go back many generations, allowing her to create a fictional Cape Cod setting for her Peter Bartholomew mysteries. Her sleuth runs an odd-jobs company and is alternately helped and hindered by a unique employee — his ex-wife.

Lamb's smart and savvy heroine, Teal Stewart, is a 30-something CPA who lives on Beacon Hill and works for a fictional Boston accounting firm.

Admission to Mystery Night is free, but reservations are requested. Refreshments will be served. Call 383-2665 for further information.

Halloween fun for all ages

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School will host its annual Funraiser, the Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common, Sunday, Oct. 29, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. In case of rain, the event will be held inside the Community Center.

Children of all ages will gather in their Halloween costumes to participate in the traditional costume parade, followed by activities that will include games, cupcake decorating, donuts on a string, face painting, three-legged and pumpkin races, "ghostball" and a "moonwalk." Every child will leave each game with a prize. Balloons and refreshments will be available.

Pumpkins of all kinds may be decorated for the Pumpkin Contest and dropped off at the Common at 1 p.m. Pumpkins will be judged in many categories, with each one sure to be a winner.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the fair, four for $1. Most games will require two tickets, most activities, three tickets. Everyone is welcome to attend.

Tickets are now available for the opening night performance of "The Secret Garden" at the Company Theater of Norwell, Accord Park Dr., Nov. 10 at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets, $25 per person, include the performance and a gala cocktail and hors d'oeuvres party with the cast following the performance. To reserve tickets, call 383-6141. Proceeds will benefit the programs of Boy Scout High Adventure Troop 78.

Halloween family day

Halloween, traditionally a time of treats for children, will have an adult focus at the South Shore Community Center this year. A Family Day for parents and children is set for Oct.28 from 2:30 to 9 p.m.

Treats for children include a monstrous scavenger hunt, a best-worst costume contest, ghoulish games, pumpkin carving, Halloween refreshments, frightening face painting and a Haunted House of Horrors.

For adults, lunch will include famous Thriller Chili, Boris Karlof Pizza, Chilling Chicken and Howling Ham Salad, prepared especially by Frankenstein's bride. The day's festivities include a special spooky room to view the Notre Dame BC game and a dance in the evening featuring Cohasset's favorite band, the Grateful Dads.

The day is sponsored by the South Shore Community Center, the Cohasset Education Foundation and Gems of Hope, an organization committed to helping needy families in countries around the world.

Cohasset readies for flu season with clinics

Seniors and chronically ill are most at risk

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

With cold and flu season around the corner, local health boards have been busy inoculating residents against this years most serious strains of the influenza virus.

The flu is a viral infection of the nose, throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs that can make people of any age ill with fever, chills, coughing and aches in the back arms and legs.

Flu season runs from November to April and while influenza is not life threatening to most people, several thousand die each year from the flu or flu-related complications

This year's nastiest flu strains include the Texas, Johannesburg and Beijing flus and the vaccine is specially formulated to fight these components.

Still, Cohasset Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons said the flu shot is not a panacea for all flu viruses.

Inoculating senior citizens and those with chronic illness are our first priority, she said.

Two senior health clinics have already taken place in town and another open to the general public is slated for this Saturday, Fitzsimmons said.

"The shot is good for seniors 65 and older to avoid complications that can arise with the flu like chronic lung problems and pneumonia," she said.

People who work in health care services, teachers, or anyone who deals with the public on a regular basis or can't afford missing work due to a long bout with the flu is also a good candidate for a flu shot, Fitzsimmons said.

The shot is free of charge, takes about two weeks to become effective in fighting the flu and contrary to popular belief, the vaccine cannot give some one the flu.

"This is a killed virus and there is no chance to get a reaction from it," Fitzsimmons said.

Also free this season from Massachusetts Department of Public Health are tetanus booster shots and the pneumococcal vaccine which protects from the most common types of pneumonia.

Like the flu shot, Cohasset has offered the pneumonia vaccine free of charge for the last couple of years but it is not offered to the general public.

While Fitzsimmons estimates that the town administers about 800 flu shots annually, only about 100 pneumonia vaccines are offered each year. One of the reasons for this is that the pneumonia vaccine is in many cases a one time shot. Those with severe lung problems might need a booster after the initial inoculation, she said.

And all adults should have a tetanus shot once every ten years, Fitzsimmons added.

All three shots will be offered on Saturday, Oct. 28 from 11 a.m to 1 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church.

Public health nurse Judy Fitzsimmons gives Dave Walkenstein his shot during last Saturday's clinic. Another clinic is scheduled from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday (Oct. 28) at Bates Hall in the Second Congregational Church. Call the Social Service League at (617)383-0771 for more information.

From Hingham – Monica Marchione as Little Girl 2 and Margaret Troyer as Martha Cratchit.

From Rockland – John Rice as Stout.

The play will be directed by Chris Wilder and produced by Dawn Rota and Amy Wilder. Costumes are being designed by Debbie Carleton, with sets painted by Nancy Wheeler.

The show will run weekends starting Nov. 25 through Dec. 17 at Cohasset Town Hall. Show times are Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights at 7:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for general admission and $8 for groups of 10 or more.

Concert for all ages slated

Force Productions, a local production company, will hold a concert for all ages Friday, Oct. 27, at the Sons of Italy Hall, East Weymouth, beginning at 6 p.m. The show will feature local bands, including Fun in the Kitchen, The Lucky Charms, The Unseen and J-Base. There will be dancing and Halloween-oriented activities, including door prizes for best costumes, apple-bobbing and other games.

Many different musical genres will be represented: Cohasset's Fun in the Kitchen will bring punk, funk and hip-hop to the stage; the Lucky Charms, from Hull, who are currently number one on WFNX's local music show, "Boston Rocks," will present their surf-funk California-style sounds; Hingham's Unseen will offer heavy chords with a straight-up, punk hard-core set; Plymouth's J-Base is a funky hard-core ensemble complete with turntables and two MCs.

The cost is $5 at the door, with proceeds to benefit the construction of the new skate park in Scituate. For further information about the show, call Kevin O'Donnell, 824-7680. For directions, call 335-9820.

Dancing, Etc. at art center

South Shore Arts Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, will present Dancing, Etc. (Martin Street Collage), an experience in creative forms, Friday, Nov. 10, at 7:30 p.m. The small dance company, which centers around evolving ideas, with an interest in silence and meditation, is led by director and founder Kay Brown, a well-known Cambridge painter.

The live performance will feature multi-media dance improvisations by the group, which includes Massachusetts Cultural Council Artist Grant winner, choreographer/dancer Arawana Hayashi, 1993 cultural ambassador and New England Conservatory faculty member. Percussionist Jon Hazilla and award-winning videographer Bruce Petchek are also involved in the group. Admission is free.

The audience is encouraged to join the flow and draw during the performance, or create paintings of the mind, using pen, charcoal or other media. With no musical score or planned choreography, audience response is original, spontaneous and exciting. The group, which has performed for more than a decade, travels throughout New England.

For further information or to arrange a performance, write to Dancing, Etc. at 16 Avon St., Cambridge, MA 02138.

SSAC presents art-to-wear

"Contextures IV: Art to Wear" will open Friday, Nov. 17, at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, featuring "Inspirations," a fashion show with a unique twist.

Curated by Ann Wessman, the Center will present a dynamic collection of "wearable art" from more than 26 New England artists and designers, created with fibers and fabrics of mohair, woven wool, monofilament, chenille, chiffon, silk, leather and other unusual materials.

Artists and designers include: Beth Beede, Vivian Cheney, Barbara Goldberg, Allessandrina Costa, Cynthia Smiszek and Chun Pil Kim. Items from Underground Velvet, Iro Designs, The Glover's Needle, Hodges & Young, Sara Kaufman Textiles and the Mobilia Gallery of Cambridge will be modeled.

The evening will include wine and hors d'oeuvres, the fashion show and the opportunity to purchase items from the designers. Tickets are $30 per person and may be purchased by calling the South Shore Art Center at 383-ARTS. The exhibition, "Contexture IV: Art to Wear," will run through Dec. 21. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m.

Public Notice

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION

DOCKET NO. 95P2460E1

Estate of EDWARD T. ATKINSON late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that SALLY K. ATKINSON of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on November 22, 1995.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this tenth day of October, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five.

The Morning Glory

When you meet a morning-glory,
Be careful how you act.
Look gentle, quiet and refined
And show a lot of tact.
The reason may seem very strange –
May seem unpleasant too –
He's the garden-plot policeman
In his uniform of blue.
He looks into your window
At early dawn – my dears –
To find out if you've said your prayers
And washed behind your ears.

From "These Blooming Friends, a Little Book of Garden Scandal," by L. Young Correthers.

Jody Butman, 17 Spring Street, certainly has the "magic touch" when it comes to growing Morning Glory. As most gardeners know, you cast your seeds and wait and hope for the beautiful blue blooms, and just when you think summer is about over, you wake one morning to these vines filled with dazzling blue color. The wait is long but the rewards are rich.

Michael Kennedy mulls run

Gerry Studds to step aside

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Dozens of die-hard supporters of U.S. Rep. Gerry E. Studds packed Carolyn and John Stouffer's Crow Point home in Hingham on Sunday to hear first-hand that Studds won't run for re-election to the Tenth Congressional District seat.

Smiling broadly at the sea of friendly faces – Studds, who announced at a press conference Saturday on Martha's Vineyard that he will not seek a 13th congressional term – arrived to cheers, tears, handshakes and hugs.

'But now we have to think who are we going to get to run and who can raise that much money.'

– Polly Logan, Republican party vice-chairman

"Were you expecting a wake, Gerry?" someone called out.

Sporting a Studds button and a Kennedy tie clip from the early 60s, Weymouth's Edmund J. Rainsford made no secret what his political persuasion is.

"Twenty-five years ago, we all got going," Rainsford, 75, recalled about Studds' first campaign. "We both made it."

Among young and old alike at the reception, speculation abounded about who might make a run for Studds' seat.

Studds told supporters in Hingham that at an earlier reception in Quincy, he was practically "trampled" by democrats interested in running for the Tenth District.

A crowded field of potential candidates has emerged including Cohasset's Michael Kennedy, who is U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy's nephew and heads the non-profit Citizens Energy Corporation.

Michael Kennedy, who lives in Cohasset, will make a decision about entering the race for Studds' seat by the end of next week.

Elevator episode not uplifting

Media blitz hits town hall

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Long-time town hall employee Pat Walsh had no idea last week that some friendly advice might come back to haunt her.

"My wrist got stuck in the elevator door," Walsh recalled. When someone saw her preventing any swelling by running her wrist under the cold water at the bubbler, the woman later told her the next time she'd better jump into the elevator.

So at about 11 a.m. Saturday when Walsh arrived at town hall, she pushed the elevator button and when the doors opened she went in as quickly as she could.

At the same time, the town hall was experiencing a "brown out" or drop in electricity due to Saturday morning's storm. So once Walsh was inside and pressed the button to go to the second floor – there wasn't enough power to run the elevator and that tripped the circuit breaker, Building Inspector Robert Egan said. The elevator fan and lights, which were on for most of Walsh's ordeal, are on a separate circuit, he explained.

"I entered quickly and pushed the button. The lights flickered and then went out and came on again. But the only button that worked then was the alarm," Walsh said.

There's a cabinet inside the seven-year-old elevator for a telephone which was never installed. Town officials said this week that as a result of this mishap, arrangements have been made to install the phone which will hook directly up to the police station.

For about 37 hours, the about four-foot square elevator became solitary confinement of the worst kind for the 65-year-old conservation commission secretary.

'I could go crazy or get angry – so I got angry.'

– Pat Walsh.

"I kicked and yelled and got no response," Walsh recalled.

She pressed the alarm button using the Morse Code sequence for

Plaza access plan withdrawn

Majority of board opposed driveway

The possibility of a Sohier Street driveway into Cohasset Plaza is off the table for the time being.

In a letter to the planning board this week, attorney Charles Humphreys - who represents plaza owner Donald Staszko – said his client requests to withdraw the application for the new access way.

"The application is being withdrawn due to the fact that four of the five members of the planning board have indicated that they can see no merit in the proposed access way," Humphreys wrote. "It is unfortunate that this proposal is presently seen in such a light.

"My client proposed the access way in simple good faith, because of Cohasset Development Trust's belief that the access way would relieve congestion and provide a simple and safe means for certain patrons to enter the Plaza.

"It was a proposal designed solely for this stated purpose and was not intended to result in any direct or deferred financial benefit to my client."

Town meeting starts Monday

Special town meeting Monday will tackle one of the biggest warrants for a "special" in recent memory.

Voters will have the chance to decide on more than 50 articles ranging from routine business like unpaid bills to paying for new bleachers on the high school athletic fields.

The town meeting gets underway at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 6, in the high school auditorium.

Town Moderator George L. Marlette said he'll wrap the meeting up by 11 p.m. And if a second session is needed, it will get underway at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

A quorum of 100 is needed before town meeting can start.

"This is the largest warrant I can remember," Marlette said. However, he added that he didn't expect any of the articles to be overly controversial and anticipated that much of the business before the voters will move quickly.

Some of the articles include: leasing the North Cohasset Fire Station; upgrading town hall computers; banning fishing on Straits Pond; air conditioning for the library; dedicating several town squares to Cohasset veterans; and appropriating money for tuition payments for Cohasset students attending the South Shore Charter School.

Cohasset's Week

Rep. Murray on the record

Members of Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), a citizens group opposed to expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill, are demanding that state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray go on the record in writing against the proposed expansion of the Rte. 3A landfill.

In a flyer, the group states that "because of this curious reluctance to go on the record on this critical environmental issue, the Department of Environmental Protection is getting a mixed message from our elected representatives."

The group commends state Sen. Robert Hedlund for his Oct. 11 letter urging the DEP reject CHL's application.

Murray said Tuesday that she has sent a letter to DEP commissioner David Struhs clarifying her position. In the letter Murray describes the situation at Cohasset Heights as serious and says she has "pointed out the ramifications of allowing the continuance of solid waste at this landfill as well as expansion of the area."

In a visit to the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham, Murray said her lack of sending written comments is a matter of style. She prefers to use the telephone where she gets better results.

"Letters go in and pile up with all the rest," she said. "I can be a real pain in the neck on the phone."

Murray, who says she's been calling 14 years on the Cohasset Heights issue and is opposed to the planned expansion, said she will send a letter to the DEP asking it to reject the site assignment application.

Murray added that she has commented in the past in a 1993 letter she sent opposing the expansion to former Secretary of Environmental Affairs Susan Tierney.

SAFE's recent lobbying of Murray appeared to have been spurred by a meeting that the DEP held with two Cohasset selectmen last week during which Murray's position was discussed. Murray later learned that selectmen were reportedly told she was in favor of the proposed CHL expansion.

In response, Commissioner David Struhs said he shared with the selectmen at the meeting his uncertainty as to whether Murray had a position on the expansion of the site for construction and demolition debris – but had not said she favored the expansion.

"I was disturbed to learn that my meeting last Friday with representatives from the town of Cohasset may have been mischaracterized to you," Struhs wrote to Murray.

Murray said she was very disappointed about the way the matter has unfolded.

"Everything is misconstrued and it hurts," she said.

Moderator seeks town counsel appointment

Town Moderator George L. Marlette has asked selectmen to consider appointing him as town counsel replacing Richard Henderson, who will step down later this year.

Marlette said he does not plan to resign as moderator if appointed town counsel and said there is not a conflict in holding both positions.

The duties of the moderator are covered in "Town Meeting Time: A Handbook of Parliamentary Law" which the town refers to in its by-laws for governing town meeting. Town moderators are permitted to hold positions like treasurer-collector or town counsel which are not policy-setting posts, the handbook states.

"My position as town moderator is very important to me and I am very much interested in running for re-election," Marlette said.

In a letter to Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, Marlette said his "most compelling credential in any assessment of personal and professional qualifications for town counsel may well be my long-time residency, demonstrated devotion to the town, and many years of public service to the town in a variety of capacities."

Marlette, whose office is in Brockton, said he has been exploring leasing a second office in Cohasset and should he be selected as town counsel would accelerate his proposed timetable to open that office.

Marlette praised the job that Henderson has done.

"Richard Henderson, throughout his long tenure as town counsel, has epitomized more than just capable lawyering. He has served our town with the highest personal ethics, dignity and candor.

"Although he will be a tough act to follow, I would undertake the challenge with determination and enthusiasm."

Cohasset water ban is lifted

Due to recent wet weather, the Cohasset Water Department has lifted the water ban enacted last summer.

Three consecutive rainy Saturdays have helped replenish the water supply, but the precipitation deficit still remains almost 10 inches below normal.

Cohasset water department manager Dick Cohan said the Aaron River Reservoir is up three feet with nearly 6-1/2 inches of rain in four storms this month. But this source of Cohasset's water is nine feet below its normal level.

Cohan said that the October 5 storm, which was the remnants of a tropical storm, contributed more than 3 inches. On October 14, the water department measured .83 inch; October 21's rainfall measured 1.51 inches; the most recent storm, on October 28, added almost another inch.

According to records from Mariner newspaper weatherman Bob Skilling, October was the first month since January with above-normal precipitation. The year-long drought saw the rainfall deficit reach more than a foot below normal in early September. With data compiled through October, precipitation is now just under nine inches below normal for the year.

Cohasset's Week

Scituate skeptical of regionalization plan

SCITUATE – A letter from their Cohasset counterparts on regionalizing emergency services inspired a philosophical discussion of local government by Scituate selectmen Tuesday.

"It makes all the sense in the world," said Selectman Kevin Kinsella, citing the predominance of county government in other parts of the country. "I still think we should make every attempt to work with Cohasset on the economics of this."

But Town Administrator Richard Agnew said New England's long tradition of town government has stymied recent regionalization attempts.

"It works down South because there is no local government down South," Agnew said.

Agnew said South Shore regionalization attempts are "going absolutely nowhere. There is one individual in one town that doesn't want to see it die, and it has long died."

The board voted to appoint Kinsella as the liaison to Cohasset selectmen for any future discussions of regionalizing emergency dispatch services.

Selectmen Chairman Donald W. Brown said regionalizing emergency services, while an attractive option for some towns, "wouldn't be a good deal for Scituate. One or two towns are expected to make out by it. The town of Scituate is one of those that would end up paying the bill."

Brown added that his support for the Greenbush commuter line has been weakening rapidly in light of recent opposition to the rail in Weymouth and Norwell. A recent proposal by Cohasset resident Kevin O'Keeffe to end the spur near Queen Anne's Corner attracted opposition by Norwell selectmen last week.

Brown said any regional project like the Greenbush line "has to be a good deal for everybody," and that critical remarks by Norwell selectmen Chairman Donald LeClair were "not exactly the spirit" that encouraged regionalization.

U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds to step aside

Fleischman said this week that Kennedy is "very satisfied with his work here at Citizens Energy Corporation but Congressman Studd's retirement has provided an opportunity to serve that Michael will have to consider."

Fleischman said Kennedy could make a decision when he returns from a business trip at the end of next week.

Other potential candidates on the democratic side include: Marshfield's Philip W. Johnston, a former state representative who now serves as regional director of the U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, a Clinton appointment; former state senator Paul Harold of Braintree; state Sen. Therese Murray of Plymouth; and state Rep. Paul Haley of Weymouth. Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt of Quincy said this week he is in the race.

State republican party vice chairman Polly Logan of Cohasset said the news of Studds' departure opens up the field for republicans too.

"To have an open seat makes us all delighted. It's like a dream that's about to come true," she said.

"But now we have to think who are we going to get to run and who can raise that much money."

Logan, who estimated it will cost $800,000 to run the campaign for Studds' seat, said state Rep. Edward Teague of Yarmouth is considering running. She added that millionaire businessman Mitt Romney, who unsuccessfully tried to unseat Kennedy last year in the race for his U.S. senate seat, is being urged to run by supporters. Romney has a house on Cape Cod, Logan said.

Selectman Peter Pratt, a democrat, praised Studds for his dedication to local issues.

"I'm said to see Gerry retire," said Pratt, who noted that he's always been proud to see (D-Cohasset) after Studds' name.

"He said to me tonight, 'we'll get Cohasset Harbor dredged,'" Pratt said. "Whoever replaces Gerry from whatever party has to have a real understanding of marine affairs and what that means to the district."

Studds, whose brother Colin and his family live on Black Horse Lane, told his supporters in Hingham that he would lead the charge to ensure that a republican does not win his seat.

"No way in heaven will this district send to Washington someone whose first vote is for Newt Gingrich as speaker," he said.

Studds, who has represented the district since 1973 and is known for his staunch support of marine environmental issues, said his reasons for retiring are personal. Studds said even if republicans hadn't won enough seats to take control of the house and senate last year, he would be making the same announcement.

"It's simply time to move on and to find other ways to fight the same battles. Either with a public or private hat on or a combination of those, I'll be in that battle with you," he said.

"Without exception, it has been an incredible honor to serve. The beauty of this district is matched by the incredible decency and common sense of its people."

Studds aide Brendan Daly said that Studds, who is the first openly gay member of Congress, may take some time off to write a book when his term ends in 14 months.

Elevator episode not an uplifting experience

S-O-S and alternated that with quick continuous blasts of the button, both to no avail.

Still shaken from her experience, Walsh described Tuesday how she thought about climbing on the towel-rack like railings in the elevator to see if there was a door at the top. But with recent surgery on the carotid artery in her neck, Walsh – who has arthritis in her knees – thought if she fell, she'd be in real trouble.

"I'd of ended up like O.J.'s wife," she said.

Having no watch and no window to the outside world, Walsh – who suffered the humiliation of having to use the elevator as a bathroom – said she had no idea how much time had passed.

But she decided early on that she had a choice.

"I could go crazy or get angry – so I got angry," Walsh said.

Town Executive Secretary Greg Doyon said in a memo to department heads this week that the policy for use of the building by employees during non-business hours needs to be re-evaluated and a staff meeting was planned to discuss the issue.

"Any individual in the building alone is potentially at risk," he wrote.

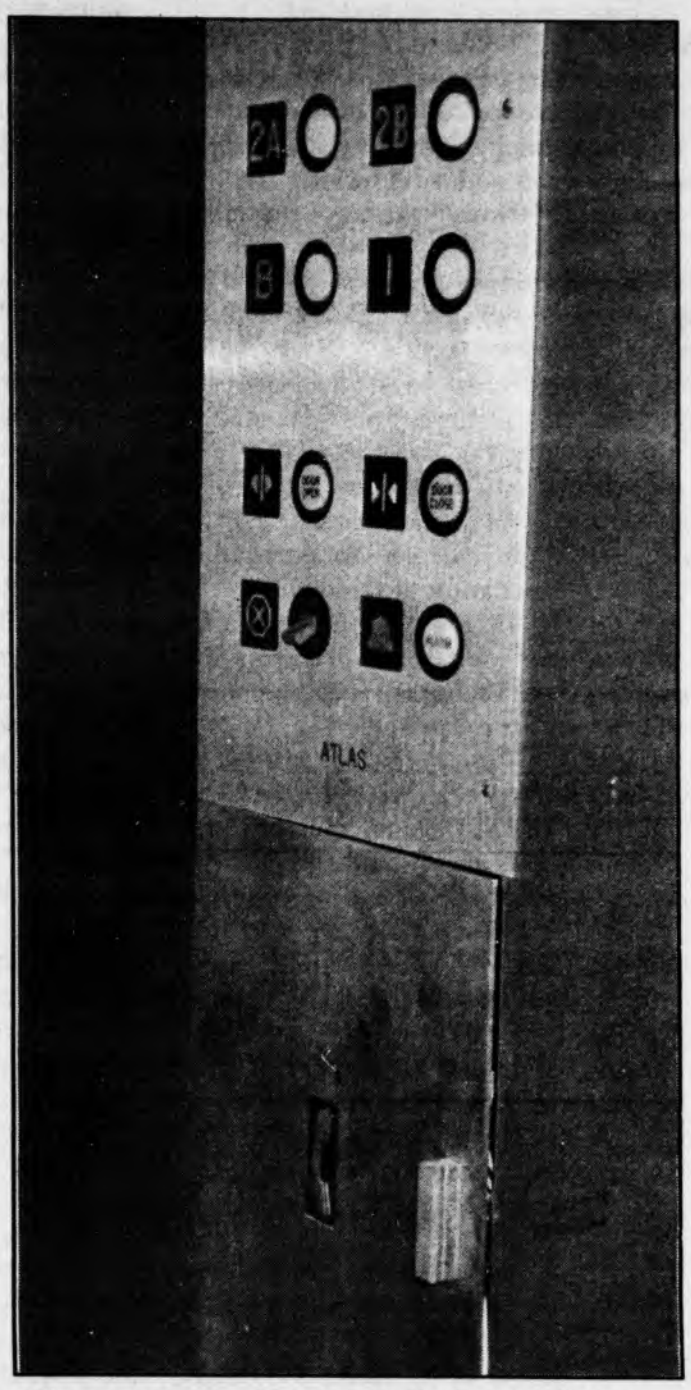
Doyon said the elevator was inspected and tested following the incident.

He noted that the alarm bell was working but was apparently not heard by persons who were in the building from time to time during the hours that Walsh was trapped.

Under current policy, while the town hall is not open for regular business on Saturdays, the building can be occupied between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Like many employees, Walsh – who often works late at night following conservation commission meetings – has a key to the outside door at town hall.

Walsh, who in the past has driven up to Maine on the spur of the moment to do some Christmas shopping, explained that because she does not own a car, she rents one when she has a lot of shopping and errands to do. As a result her husband, who goes to bed early, didn't become frantic until Sunday morning when he started calling relatives and he didn't recognize the rental car, which was one of many parked at town hall. He alerted police Sunday night when he saw a single car parked outside town hall and after he looked in the back where he recognized a pair of his wife's shoes.



The seven-year-old town hall elevator has a cabinet for a telephone, shown here, but the phone was never installed.

Staff photo/Mary Ford

Opting to go right home after being found, Walsh declined an offer from police to take her to the hospital.

Her ordeal has since made headlines in newspapers and television.

A brother of Walsh's neighbor said "I made the news in Amarillo, Texas," Walsh said. But all the attention doesn't change what happened.

"There was no need for people to go through this," Walsh said. "There was no loud speaker...the alarm rang but just over my head and wasn't loud enough for people to hear."

When asked Walsh, who isn't sure when she'll feel up to returning to work, said that she had not consulted with a lawyer about the incident.

owns the plaza which houses the Super Stop & Stop.

A continued hearing on the proposal was scheduled for the Nov. 15 planning board meeting. At their last meeting, planners with the exception of Robert Sturdy were critical of the driveway which would provide access to shoppers coming up Sohier Street from Cohasset village.

The police and fire chiefs said they were not opposed to the driveway and said it would enhance safety.

Humphreys said if the planning board should contact him or Cohasset Development Trust if it revisits the question and determines the access would be in the best interest of the community or plaza.

Informational session on school facilities is held

By Doreen Leggett
Special to the Mariner

Last Thursday night at Deer Hill School, the School Facilities Committee held its second informational meeting on the condition of the Cohasset schools and the suggested proposals to improve the existing buildings.

Three parents attended.

"(The turnout) is abysmal," said Susan Galligan, a parent.

The three mothers, who all have a kindergartener at Osgood, were encouraged to ask questions throughout the informal presentation, which gave a brief overview of the options proposed to solve the need for additional elementary classrooms in Cohasset, and why those options were necessary.

If Cohasset's elementary schools were renovated to meet the state's minimum guidelines, a food preparation area, cafeteria, school libraries and other educational facilities would have to be created or expanded at the schools. These renovations would result in eight classrooms being converted to another use.

Superintendent Stephen Hart demonstrated to the parents, by means of a graph charting population growth, that by the year 2005 an additional 14 classrooms will be needed.

"We don't have sufficient amount of classrooms now," said Hart. "It is not going to get any better."

On Oct. 5 the school committee approved three options, which were suggested by the school facilities committee, to address the classroom shortage.

The options are: A: retain the Osgood School, which serves kindergarten through fourth grade, and build an addition onto the Deer Hill School, B: build a new elementary school, renovate the Deer Hill School and create a middle school.

Richard Silvia, chairman of the 25-year-old Building Facilities Committee, said that two out of the three educational consultants for the state reviewed Osgood and deemed it unacceptable as an educational building.

Cohasset's Police and Fire Departments, as well as its Board of Health were "not happy" with the condition of Osgood, said Silvia.

However, the committee does not want to rule out Osgood as an option until it is sure renovating Osgood is not cost effective.

Silvia, who was educated at Osgood, said the staff, if not the structure, at Osgood are high quality.

"Make no mistake," he said. "You can get an outstanding education at Osgood."

To give the audience a better idea of the problems with the school, a video was shown at the meeting.

The video, narrated by Hart, dealt with the inadequacies at Osgood, which include, but aren't limited to, the absence of a cafeteria, an under-sized library and gymnasium, and lack of storage space.

Galligan and Adrienne MacCarthy, a parent, said they were aware of some of Osgood's faults, but the video pointed out numerous shortcomings that they hadn't been aware of.

Sidney Bowen, an architect at Earl Flansburgh and Associates - a firm hired by the town to assist the School Facilities Committee, said that if the town decided to retain Osgood, the state would not fund the project.

However, the state would fund 60 percent, including building costs and interest, of the other options.

"(The Massachusetts Board of Education) is treating Osgood's 16 classrooms like they don't exist," said Bowen. "(The board) is not saying you can't use (Osgood), they are simply saying they won't fund the work."

The major problems with Osgood are that the site is too small (Osgood sits on a 4.1 acre site and the minimum required is 14 acres), and Osgood has a wooden frame, which can be a fire hazard.

The state also will not fund the building of a cafeteria and gymnasium if a middle school is added to the junior/senior high school. The cafeteria and gymnasium at the high school now are 60 percent bigger than the state requires, added Bowen.

A parent asked if Cohasset taxpayers would be told the amount of the projected tax increase if one of the options were approved.

Hart said that at the January town meeting estimates will have been done and that the impact on the tax rate would vary and would eventually go away.

He added that at the meeting hypothetical increases would be used as examples, for instance, if your house is assessed at this amount then you will pay this amount.

At the Nov. 6 meeting the building committee will ask for additional funds to study the options more and perform a cost analysis on each of them.

If the town chooses to build a new elementary school, it will most likely be built somewhere on the 77-acre plot between Osgood and Deer Hill, said Bowen. Six sites have proven to be acceptable.

Silvia said if Cohasset decides not to grant an override and approve any option, the structural problems at Osgood and the shortage of classrooms will continue to adversely affect the quality of education.

He added that the need for additional classroom space has not "suddenly" arisen.

He pointed out that in 1971 a study done on the Osgood school found it "completely inadequate as a elementary school" and that quality at the 70-year-old school "can best be described as primitive."

The override that year was voted down by a small margin, he said.

MacCarthy, who also was among the 14 parents who attended the first meeting, and Galligan both said it was important for more parents to learn more about the options and their ramifications.

"Information is published in the paper but (at the informational forums) you get a chance to ask the questions – ask the questions that affect us," Galligan said.

MacCarthy, who has two pre-kindergarten age children, added, "It is important for me to know what the future is for the next 6 years."

The last informational meeting is Thursday, Nov. 2, at 7 p.m. in the library at Osgood School.

School board gets video tour of Osgood

School Committee and audience members took a tour of Osgood school via a video cassette at a recent meeting.

The video, narrated by Supt. Stephen Hart, dealt with the issues at the kindergarten through third-grade level school.

Inadequacies of the school, such as the smallness of the four-acre site, limited play area, crowding of hallways with backpacks and jackets, cramped offices and classrooms and lack of a food preparation area were explained in the video.

The area for physical education "is referred to as a gym, but it is a play area," narrated Hart. "One-third the size of a standard gym."

Hart added that the small "gym" limited the activities that a gym teacher could accomplish with the children.

The video also stressed the high-quality staff who were successfully dealing with the less than ideal situation.

The 15-minute video is another piece of information to help identify the most appropriate option in solving the need for additional elementary classrooms. At its Oct. 5 meeting the school committee approved three options which will be presented at the Nov. 6 Special Town Meeting.

At the Nov. 6 meeting the school committee will ask for funding to further research the options and do a cost-analysis study, said School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder.

The options are A) retain Osgood as a school, but build additional classrooms elsewhere, most likely at Deer Hill School B) build a new elementary school, or C) build a new elementary school, renovate Deer Hill School and create a middle school.

The third of three informational forums on the options is Nov. 2 at Osgood. The video is now available at Hart's office.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Ann Leonard welcomes a new great-grandson

I had the nicest chat with Virginia Anderson the other day, she called to let us know of her daughter and son-in-law's latest feat!

Marie (Anderson) Peterson and her husband Erik have just completed hiking the Appalachian Trail.

They started at the end of March at Springer Mountain in Georgia and ended at Mt. Kathadin in Maine Oct. 19 – figure it out folks, that is almost seven months of hiking with backpacks! Incredible, isn't it? That's more than 2,100 miles! No wonder Mom is so proud she is "busting her buttons"!!

By the way, many of you remember Marie from her days at Cohasset High School, she is a 1959 CHS grad. Wait until they have their next class reunion, will she ever have some wonderful and exciting tales to tell!

As reported a few weeks ago, the Fone family is happily ensconced in Denmark, Maine – they do love it there. "Pop" Fone already has had his first memorable experience, he was looking out of his window at the lake and saw a huge moose emerge! You can just imagine his surprise, they are certainly huge animals. Many people who have lived there for years haven't been able to see one, that's probably because they don't get up as early as Pop does!

Good going Pop, we're proud of you!

This Tuesday was a special day for young and old – and everyone gets treats!! All of the little trick-or-treaters got bundles of goodies, and we hope that one of our special seniors did to.

Mary Grassie celebrated her ??? birthday on that day, and from all reports it was a grand one! Mary is a resident of senior housing in Cohasset and was honored at a party with her friends.

We all extend our best wishes to you, Mary, and hope that you celebrate many more Halloween birthdays!

Ann Leonard sure had an exciting week recently, she is so relieved and happy that it is all over!! The reason for all of her happiness is Kevin William Kane, who was born Oct. 11, and who is her great-grandson! Kevin's mom, Christine, and dad, Joseph, are mighty happy to have him here too, she really had a difficult pregnancy. They all live in Everett (but Kevin was born in Scituate), you can believe that the Leonard clan will be doing lots of travelling back and forth! He weighed 7 and one half pounds and has tons of black hair.

Ann and her daughter Patty probably lost 7 and one half pounds with all of the walking and pacing that they did waiting for Kevin to arrive!! We can't wait to hear all about the christening, Kevin is going to be wearing the same dress that his great-grandfather wore for his!

Hearty congratulations to you all!

Obituaries

George F. Walling

George F. Walling, 74, of Cohasset, died Oct. 23 at home.

He was a mechanic for the Cohasset Country Club for 40 years, retiring in 1982. He was also a decorated Army Air Corps pilot, serving with the Army Air Corps during World War II in India, Burma and China. He received the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal, Asiatic Pacific Theater campaign ribbon, China Memorial ribbon and the Good Conduct Medal.

Mr. Walling was an accomplished pilot who made his first solo flight on Dec. 12, 1939. He owned his own plane and flew for many years from the Marshfield and Plymouth airports. Experimental aircraft were one of his hobbies.

Mr. Walling leaves two brothers, Walter Walling of Rockland and Ronald Walling of Boynton Beach, Fla.; four sisters, Natalie Collins, Bertha Walling and Pauline Walling, all of Weymouth, and Ruth Foley of Pembroke and several nieces and nephews.

A funeral service was held Oct. 26 at Downing Cottage Funeral Home, Hingham. Burial was in Hingham Cemetery.

Sophia M. DeNapoli

Sophia M. (Von Schleinitz) DeNapoli, 84, of Cohasset, died Oct. 28 at Massachusetts Respiratory Hospital, Braintree, after a long illness.

Born in Chicago, she was a Cohasset resident for 28 years.

Mrs. DeNapoli was the former wife of the late Samuel Rose and leaves her husband, Anthony C. DeNapoli; a son, William Rose of Cohasset; four stepsons, Robert DeNapoli of Glencoe, Ill., Donald DeNapoli of Cary, Ill., and Richard DeNapoli and Roger DeNapoli of Plymouth; a sister, Elizabeth Adlon of Elkhart, Ind., and six grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated Nov. 2 at 11 a.m. at St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be in Woodside Cemetery. Visiting is prior to the Mass from 9:30 to 10:45 a.m.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Time to think about the post-Studds era

U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds has announced he will not seek re-election next year to the Tenth Congressional District.

He said he's giving plenty of notice so voters and potential candidates can "assess the consequences of his decision."

We should all take Studds' advice and give careful thought to a successor between now and the election in November 1996.

It's been nearly a quarter of a century since Studds first took office in 1973 and most Democrats and Republicans will agree that he has represented our seaside district well.

Coastal concerns and environmental issues – including his role in the Clean Water Act, Endangered Species Act, extending the U.S. waters' territorial limit, and his tireless advocacy for the fishing industry – will be the hallmarks of Studds' congressional tenure.

He's also been an outstanding communicator.

Cohasset's Polly Logan, who is state Republican Party vice chairman, said Studds is a role model for other congressmen.

"I don't know anyone who communicated more with his district," Logan said. "He'll be missed."

To sit with, chat with and listen to his constituents, Studds conducted hundreds open meetings over the years in the four dozen communities within the district. Under his leadership, his staff continues to be responsive to concerns and calls for help from the public.

In his remarks to supporters in Hingham this week, Studds had plenty of criticism for the Republicans in Washington and what he sees as their dismantling of the federal government.

But to us, what is more significant were his thoughts on the American voter and how too few are paying attention.

So whether conservative Republican or a liberal Democrat, as Studds said, it's critical that each and every one of us pays close attention to what's being done in our name to us by those elected to represent our interests.

Whatever the political persuasion, we all ought to do our homework and know what the agenda is.

"I still subscribe to the notion that public discourse and political campaigns are supposed to help articulate and illuminate matters of importance so citizens can make intelligent decisions in their lives and at the polls," Studds said.

Over the next year, we'll have the opportunity to hear what the crowded field of contenders for Studds' seat from both parties has to say. We should ask hard questions and demand solid answers.

In the Tenth Congressional District, Gerry Studds has paid attention to us.

We all have the responsibility to listen carefully in the months ahead, so whomever we choose to send to Washington will continue to serve our best interests.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rep. Murray should take a stand

To the Editor:

I would like to have our state representative, Mary Jeanette Murray, give a written public position regarding the expansion of the Cohasset Heights Limited Landfill.

Does she support the position taken by Cohasset and Hingham town boards as well as hundreds of citizens, which is in opposition to any expansion?

Or, is she supporting the interests of on, just one, businessman who stands to make millions of dollars at the expense of our communities and our environment?

Linda Keller
Two Cushing Rd.

Linda Keller is president of SAFE, Stop Any Further Expansion, a grassroots citizens group opposed to the expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Murray should go on the record

To the Editor:

We are very distressed to learn of the lack of commitment from our representative, Mary Jeanette Murray on the critical issue of the Cohasset Heights Landfill expansion.

Rep. Murray apparently finds no problem with the consistent threat this facility represents to the quality of life in Cohasset. She apparently sees no issue in the request to expand the present dump to include another 15 acres filling Scituate Hill to a depth of 200 feet (the highest point in town) with household trash and construction debris. She apparently finds the site perfect even though the present dump has contaminated more than six acres of conservation land, one mile uphill from our water supply, with chemically tainted groundwater.

She has no problem with the fact that the real supporter of this application is none other than BFI, one of the largest trash disposal companies in the world.

Make no mistake, there are many here in town that expect our public officials to exert some leadership and to follow the will of their constituents. We feel that this application is a critical test of our will to control our town. We feel that, aside from the education of our children, this application is the single greatest issue in Cohasset today. It affects our health, our property values and our future. Every key official in town is against CHL on this. Robert Hedlund, our state senator, is against CHL... but where is our state rep?

Where do you stand Mary Jeanette? Remember in politics, "...if you're not with us you're against us...". If you can't come with us on this issue, you don't deserve our support.

Football team support appreciated

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the parents who helped to make our annual tailgate party and pasta feast the fun and success that they were.

I would also like to thank the Gridiron for all their time and support. The Cohasset football program continues to be successful because behind every player there is a supportive coaching staff and loving parents, who all work together to make this season a great one.

But most of all, we have the players who make up our varsity and jr. varsity teams, who in spite of some losses, show up every afternoon for practice and go to every game with unending enthusiasm and determination. They play long and they play hard and most of all they never give up.

I know that I can speak for everyone involved in the football program when I say that we are very proud of you Skippers – keep up the good work.

Town support for school options sought

By RICHARD SILVIA
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset School Facilities Committee will give a presentation on the findings of the Cohasset Schools Needs Study to address the safety concerns, educational deficiencies and the overall facility needs at the Osgood School, Deer Hill School and Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School. Due to the aging physical plant, overcrowding at the elementary school level, and the growing student enrollment, the study confirmed that our present capacity in Grades Pre-K-6 is inadequate to serve the educational and space needs of our current and future elementary student population. Also, the 70-year-old Osgood School is substantially below minimum state educational standards and is no longer considered to be a viable educational facility. The committee will also discuss the preliminary options involving renovations and/or new construction to our existing schools that have been developed by the architectural consultant, Earl R. Flasburgh & Associates, to meet our longterm educational needs.

The next phase of the study will be to develop cost estimates and schematic plans of the proposed options and to select the option that will best meet the needs of our school system and take full advantage of 60-percent state reimbursement the town will receive, if it meets the Massachusetts State Board of Education's deadline for submission of plans by June 1, 1996.

These options include the renovation of the Osgood School; an addition and renovation of the Deer Hill School; renovation of Osgood School and additions to the Deer Hill School; and build a new elementary school.

Voters will be asked at the November Special Town Meeting to support additional funds to further investigate these options and prepare cost estimates to determine the most comprehensive and cost effective solution to meeting our long-term educational needs. The town meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Junior/Sr. High School auditorium.

For additional information, please call Richard Silvia, chairman of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee, at (617) 383-0500 or Stephen Hart, superintendent of the Cohasset Public Schools, at (617) 383-6111.

Group charts goals for school system

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Special to the Mariner

While the need for additional elementary classrooms is being addressed by the school building committee, another committee, the strategic planning committee, is mapping out the future for the Cohasset school system.

At a recent school committee meeting, Alicia Shea, director of student services, outlined the progress made at the Strategic Planning Workshop, a 12-hour session that took place last month.

At the workshop the 23-member committee prepared a plan where goals and directions for Cohasset schools during the next five years were drafted.

Participants in the workshop included selectmen, advisory committee members, students, school committee members, school council members, school administrators, teacher's association members and the superintendent.

There were four focus areas that emerged out of the workshop, those focus areas include 1) evaluate/develop/refine curriculum and instruction practices, which are in line with current research 2) look at building facilities and the support and maintenance of adequate facilities 3) garner more community support for education/develop a public relations campaign 4) examine/improve the technology curriculum as well as wiring/networking the system.

"The feedback was that this was a very productive two days," Shea said.

Four groups, one for each focus area, will continue to meet and draft specific written proposals which will come before the school committee.

This is the second time, the first was five years ago, where a committee was formed to lay out the framework for the school system's next five years.

Guido Risi, the superintendent's staff assistant, used the strategic planning committee's fourth focus group, technology, as the stepping stone to outline the South Shore Educational Collaborative's technology initiatives.

The collaborative received a $40,000 grant, $37,500 from Nynex and $2,500 from Bay Bank to purchase and install computer networking systems for 11 area high schools.

The system, installed by the Merrimac Education Center, would allow the high schools, which include Cohasset, to be linked to the Internet and one another. After the first four months, which will be free of charge, Cohasset will pay $587 a month for unlimited use of the network.

"The only reason we are doing this is to improve curriculum," said Hart.

As of now, Risi said, the math lab at the high school is networked into the system and 50 students can use the system simultaneously.

Support for library is urged

Dear Cohasset Resident:

For over 26 years, the goal of the Friends of the Cohasset Library has been to achieve library services and facilities beyond what your tax dollars provide.

Financial Support:

During the past year, contributions to the Friends enabled the library to

- purchase a computer work station for the Reference Room, consisting of an audio/video computer, a printer, 8 CD Roms, a CD Rom Changer, and a work table.
- restore the valuable and historic McIvor Reddie murals in the rotunda.
- add to its book collection.
- fund a summer reading program and puzzle club to improve children's reading skills.
- renew family passes to the New England Aquarium, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Museum of Science and the Children's Museum.

Volunteer Efforts:

The dedicated efforts of more than 50 volunteers – a labor contribution valued in excess of $30,000 – enabled us to

- design and to donate 5,000 new bookmarks to the library.
- donate an original painting and print for the children's room.
- conduct the annual book sale.
- organize a volunteer recognition evening at the library.
- continue a weekly "Library Corner" in the Cohasset Mariner to keep the community informed about library programs and activities.

New This Year:

In addition, Friends initiated special events which included:

- opening receptions for artists whose work is exhibited in the library.
- a Little Women's Tea and drama club presentation from "Little Women," in the Children's room.
- children's vacation workshops.

As we begin our 27th year, the Friends invite you to join us by sending your tax-deductible contribution. We will implement dynamic plans next year with your assistance. To the Friends who responded to our appeal last year, and to our life Friends, we extend our thanks for your continuing support.

55th village fair set

Cohasset's legendary Village Fair, which has been staged since 1940 as a major joint benefit event, will take place for the 55th year Saturday, Dec. 2, turning the historic Common and buildings around it into a bustling celebration from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., offering hand-crafted and home-baked items as well as attic treasures for holiday shoppers.

Sponsoring churches include Second Congregational, St. Stephen's Episcopal, Greek Orthodox and First Parish Unitarian. The Appalachian Service Project will also participate.

St. Stephen's will feature a Book and Bake Sale, silent auction of green centerpieces and tables of homemade breads, cakes, pies, cookies and jam. All proceeds will benefit the church's Outreach Program.

The Unitarian Parish House will hold a Jumble Sale of attic and basement treasures at giveaway prices and a Coffee Shoppe featuring homemade Swedish coffee bread.

This year, Santa Claus will return to Cohasset Common by fire truck, and ASP volunteers will take instant photos.

Santa's Workshop in the Second Congregational Church will offer craft-making opportunities for children from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The church will also host a gift boutique, bake table and Chowder Bar.

Members of the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will sell decorated wreaths and swags and present a Bargain Bazaar, a boutique of holiday gift items and Greek pastries and delicacies.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

Education Foundation announces new members

During the first meeting of the Cohasset Education Foundation in September, new members and officers for the upcoming academic year were announced.

New members for the CEF are: Nader Afshar, Tom Barrett, Bernadette Faulkner, Gary Garber, Charlie Kelly, Ed Lappen, Phil Lehr, Jack McCarthy, Marge Murphy, Rich Strecker and Kevin Ulmer.

Returning members included: Clark Chatterton, Rick Flynn, Steve Hart, Mike Hurley,Anne Lane, Agnes McCann, Susan McNamara, Kevin O'Donnell, David Replogle, Rick Shea, Malcolm and Pamela Speed, Midge Stone, Andrea Wade and Jim Kinch.

The new slate of officers is: Rick Shea, returning as president, Michael Hurley, vice president, Andrea Wade, treasurer, and Sue McNamara, returning as secretary.

Rick Shea summarized the events of the past year and listed goals for the coming year. Key accomplishments included completion of the Osgood computer lab, reaching the funding goal of the Skillful Teacher Program, the joint spelling bee fundraiser with the PSO and the development of a Comprehensive Business Plan for the Foundation.

It was announced that the updated CEF brochure has been reprinted and distributed townwide. During the summer, the Conservation Foundation awarded a $10,000 grant to fund CEF's Naturalist in Residence Program.

Shea reviewed the efforts made on several funding programs, including added support for the nature trails at Deer Hill and Osgood schools and targeting the High School language lab.

Committee responsibilities were announced, and several new candidate programs were discussed, including the field lab concept at the town's Hagerty property, which was referred to financial review.

The CEF is an independent, non-profit organization focused on developing new and non-traditional sources of support for the Cohasset Public School system. For further information, call 383-2833 or write to the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 to request a copy of CEF's brochure. All donations are tax-deductible.

Straits Pond hookup with Hull on table

Sewer commissions to meet Nov. 9

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Sewer commissioners from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset met recently to discuss a sewer plan that will benefit all three towns.

The project which would involve sewering town trouble spots like Cohasset's Straits Pond area and the Bonnie Brier or Weir River Watershed Area (WRWA) of Hingham were on hold since early this summer as Hull commissioners began studies to determine how much capacity their treatment plant could offer the two towns.

According to Cohasset Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild, Hull is offering the two towns a combined capacity limit of 110,000 gallons per day at this point.

The break down currently under consideration would give Cohasset the ability to sewer about 260 homes near Straits Pond on Forest Avenue, Purgatory Swamp and Hull Street and pump 65,000 gallons of sewage per day to Hull's treatment facility. In Hingham about 160 homes in the WRWA on Rockland, Kilby and Hull Streets and Bonnie Brier Circle would receive a hook up and 45,000 gallons of sewage would be pumped to Hull daily.

While originally conceived of as a tri-town project, Guild said he is pushing to negotiate the inter-municipal connection with Hull unilaterally. If over time, coordinating with Hingham offered cost savings for both towns, Guild said it would be pursued.

Guild said the area around Straits Pond has been an on-going problem for the town and the state's tough Title V regulations have drawn more attention to a worsening situation. The pond itself is an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC) said Guild, who noted that nitrates and phosphates produced by septic systems adjacent to the pond encourage the growth of weeds that can choke off the pond.

The Hull hook-up for the Straits Pond area would be a project separate from a larger sewer plan being pursued by the town under a court agreement for judgement by the state to sewer 1/3 of the town (about 650 homes) by April 1, 1999, Guild said.

Under the Straits Pond hook-up plan Cohasset would be responsible for laying sewer pipes and building a pump station, most likely on the site of the old North Cohasset Fire Station, to pump the sewage into Hull. Guild would not estimate project costs but said all capital costs for the project would go on to the town's tax rate – while operating and maintenance costs through a user fee would be charged to the new users.

Guild is pleased the project seems to be going forward and expects to be able to bring the plan to the annual town meeting floor this spring. If approved, work on the project could be under way by spring of 1997.

In Hingham, sewer commissioners disappointed by the failure of an earlier joint venture with Hull to build a septage receiving facility behind the Hingham District Courthouse on George Washington Boulevard with a sewer line to the Hull treatment plant, are entering cautiously into this new agreement. Like Guild, Hingham Sewer Commissioner John Brandt is eager to find a sewer solution for his town's trouble spot – the Bonnie Brier or Weir River Watershed Area. Failed or failing septic systems in that area overflowing and polluting the Weir River has long been a problem for Hingham.

But for now, Guild seems intent on putting Cohasset residents first and is sure that as both towns share Straits Pond, the Straits Pond hook-up with Hull is something both Cohasset and Hull want.

Hull commissioners will present their draft municipal agreement to Hingham and Cohasset at a joint meeting in Hull on Nov. 9.

Murray to address AAUW

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) of the 3rd Plymouth District will meet with local AAUW women Tuesday, Nov. 14, at Plymouth River School, High Street, Hingham. The meeting will be held in the school's LMC.

Refreshments at 7:45 p.m. will be followed by Rep. Murray's presentation. After a brief discussion of issues of particular importance to women on the South Shore, Rep. Murray will participate in a roundtable discussion. Murray is a a 10-term state representative to Cohasset, Hull and Hingham and a member of the local affairs legislative sub-committee.

AAUW's has a continuing interest in public policy issues and in recognizing women on the South Shore who are leaders in the community, in service and in politics.

For reservations call 749-5493. For membership information call 749-5926.

Antique show at Deer Hill

Ripley Road safety issue resolved

To better ensure the safety of students and their families, the selectmen have approved the Cohasset Police Department's request to authorize Ripley Road as a one-way street during key times Monday through Friday.

As of Monday, Nov. 6, Ripley Road will be one-way northbound during Osgood school arrival and dismissal times (8:45 to 9:15 a.m. and 2:45 to 3:15

Native American program

The students of Deer Hill School will participate in "Native American Life Ways" programs Tuesday, Nov. 7, presented by Rob Aptaker and his partner, Pat Miner. The program will assist in social studies programs for the fourth, fifth and sixth grades and special needs students.

The children will participate in Native American games, hear stories and songs and will learn about the culture of the Woodlands People. Students will have the opportunity to acquire Algonquin vocabulary words and an understanding of Native American History, with the goal of dispelling stereotypical ideas.

Aptaker has been involved with Native Americans since 1978, participating in their culture and learning stories, songs and physical life ways from the past. He has lived on reservations, joining in ceremonial life and living in traditional dwellings. He is a member of the Walking Bear Singers drum group, performing in pow-wows and Native socials throughout New England.

In his presentations to children, Aptaker emphasizes not only the ways in which native cultures vary from modern American life, but the commonality of needs and motivations which find expression in each society.

Miner is of Iroquois and French ancestry and has been involved with the Native American Community in New England. She sings with Voices of Creation Singers drum group and is co-founder of Eastern Woodlands Inc., a company that promotes awareness about Native American issues by producing clothing bearing positive messages and images concerning Native Americans.

When she speaks with students, Miner describes the matriarchal and matrilineal culture of Iroquois tribes and the role of women, who are highly respected in Native societies.

Other presentations, sponsored by the Cultural Enrichment Committee of the Cohasset PSO, will be presented next year: in February, "Dance in America," and in April, "Children of the Blue and Grey."

PAC to meet Nov. 7

The Parents Advisory Council will hold its regular monthly meeting Tuesday, Nov. 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill teachers lounge. All parents and guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome.

For further details, call PAC co-chairs Ann Whiteley (383-9310) or JoAnn Pilczak (383-0268).

METCO dinner a success

Many Cohasset families turned out Sunday afternoon to welcome METCO students and families at the annual fall Cohasset Host Family Dinner. Many new families met each other for the first time, while families who have participated in pst years enjoyed visiting with one another and catching up on family news. The Cohasset METCO Committee thanks all who participated in the event.

The METCO Committee will sponsor a matinee trip to Black Nativity Sunday, Dec. 10. The performance, which is a gospel rendition of the birth of the Christ Child, will take place at Boston's Tremont Temple. Bus transportation will be provided to and from the event, leaving Cohasset Town Hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 performance and returning before 7 p.m. Tickets are $20 per person and should be reserved as soon as possible by calling PSO METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Cliff Chase (383-1574).

'Juice' cards going nowhere

Shop owners and dealers show no interest in Simpson

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The verdict in the O.J. Simpson double-murder trial may have rocked the country from coast to coast, but local sports cards dealers and shop owners throughout the South Shore say it was business as usual with only mild interest in the former Buffalo Bills hall of famer's cards.

"It has been dead for awhile," said Scott Chisholm, the owner of Hanover Baseball Cards. "Even when he was arrested no one called inquiring about the cards."

When Simpson was first arrested and charged with the murders of his estranged wife, Nicole Brown and her friend Ron Goldman, his 1970 Topps rookie card was in high demand in California, selling upwards to $600. Simpson's other cards rose from 33-50 percent on the average.

Chisholm believes those people caught up in buying Simpson's cards, particularly his rookie card, weren't true collectors or sports fans at all, but simply wanted souvenirs of the former Heisman Trophy winner whose drawn out trial kept a nation glued to its T.V. sets around the country.

"It was the people who really don't collect cards who were interested," Chisholm said. "It (rookie card) became a novelty item. When the novelty wore off, it went away."

Hanover's Jack Cavanaugh, who has been traveling to shows and selling cards since 1986 experienced first-hand just how much interest in Simpson's cards had waned from the time of his arrest in June of '94 to his acquittal, 16 months later.

Cavanaugh opened a pack of Signature Rookie cards while at a show in New York in September and pulled a limited edition card, autographed by Simpson. Beckett Magazine, the publication dealers use in pricing cards, assessed the autographed card at $400. Despite the fact there were just 2,500 of the cards and Cavanaugh priced his at $100, there were still no takers.

However, there was one exception

Skippers easily sink Anchormen

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers went into last Saturday looking for a win against the St. Clements. They would not get it. Rain forced the game to be postponed until Sunday, when the Skippers faced off against the Anchormen, still looking for the win.

And win they did. The Skippers romped, whipping the visitors by a score of 33-0, with five different players scoring. Junior Grant Emde scored two touchdowns, while senior Ben Keefe, senior Kevin Gentile and sophomore Andy Hamilton each broke into the end zone once.

At halftime, the Skippers only held a 7-0 lead. The Skippers' points had come when Emde rumbled in from two yards out and John Kasameyer split the uprights with the extra Cohasset point. Coach Bob Knurek got his team worked up at halftime, giving what he called "the intensity speech."

"After that, we came out fired up and really played well from there on," Knurek said.

On the first play from scrimmage in the second half Keefe sprinted through an enormous whole in the offensive line and ran 63 yards for the touchdown. The 13-0 lead was added to when Gentile broke free around end and into the end zone from 10 yard outs. Kevin Duffy carried the reverse in for the two-point conversion, making it 21-0.

Emde's longest run came when he took advantage of the offensive line's dominance, and ran 74 yards for the touchdown. He was nearly tackled at the Anchormen's 30-yard-line, but magically stayed on his feet and cruised into the end zone, making it 27-0.

Perhaps the most remarkable play of the day was one that was called back. Cohasset's Greg Stevens crushed St. Clements QB Sean Thornton, knocking the ball loose. Co-captain Brian Riley picked it up and rolled 86 yards for the touchdown. Unfortunately, an illegal block in the back was called and the run was called back.

Stevens' play was one of many excellent efforts by the defense, which tossed a shutout for the second time this year. Junior Doug Sheerin

Love for horses drew 11-year-old to competition

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Eleven-year-old Emily Larson's love for horses has always been far greater than her passion for competing in the equestrian events.

For example, the Derby Academy sixth-grader has no aspirations of someday representing the United States in the Olympic Games. It's not because Larson shies away from the competition. The reason is much simpler.

"I've loved horses since I was little and decided I wanted to ride," said Larson, who began riding at the age of 5. "I really don't want to do the Olympics because I feel bad for the horses. The higher jumps put more strain on the horses."

But Larson doesn't have to worry about that now. Knowing the jumps are lower and her Arabian Welsh Pony, "Abby" is in no danger of injury, Larson's competitive fire rises to the surface and she competes with a vengeance.

From May to October Larson competes nearly every weekend. This past summer, riding "Abby," whose show name is "Child's Play," Larson took first place in 12 shows in the Short/Stirrup and Hunter Division. What makes Larson's achievements all the more impressive is the fact that last summer marked her first full season of competitive riding.

Now that the offseason has arrived, Larson trains twice a week and rides 5-6 times weekly at the River Wind Farm in Pembroke. She works extra hard on keeping her back straight and riding without stirrups in order to force her legs to stretch further. Larson goes over the course and its jumps, trying to improve on each as her workout continues.

Cohasset's Abby Greer, a rider herself, who has been teaching and coaching Larson since she was 8, said "she's much more into the competition" now than she was when first starting out.

"Emily aspires to compete at the national level once she has a little more experience under her belt," Greer said. "She has moved up very quickly so far."

Next season Larson will be moving up and competing against teenagers and some adults. Because of the move, she also plans on purchasing a larger pony named "Oliver" which recently competed in a show in Washington D.C.

Greer said she enjoys working with Larson because "she is very easy to coach" and has a dedication, not only to the sport, but the animals themselves.

"Emily loves the horses, first and foremost," Greer said, "and she loves taking care of her own horse. "She started at a very early age and she's much more into the competition than

Soccer pairings due Thursday

The Cohasset High boys and girls soccer teams will learn who they will be playing in the Division 3 South Sectional soccer tourney when the MIAA releases the seeding order on Thursday. Soccer action is expected to begin on Friday and Saturday for most teams. Neither of the Skipper squads are expected to receive a bye in the first round.

Shop owners, dealers show no interest in Simpson to the lukewarm interest in Simpson's cards. Chris Yourell of Weymouth, owner of South Shore Sports Cards, was able to sell his Signature Rookie card for $200 the day following the verdict.

"We were watching the verdict at work and I said, 'I wonder how this will affect my autographed card because it's worth $400'," Yourell said.

One of the women who was also watching the verdict asked Yourell how much he was willing to sell the card. He told her he'd cut the price in half. She wound up buying the card. Then, much to Yourell's surprise, she asked him if he could pick up a few others.

"She showed all her friends and they all wanted one too," he said.

Yourell, though, shares the sentiments of other local dealers. He merely believes he was in the right place at the right time to make the sale.

"If I had tried to sell it a week before, I probably couldn't have," he said. "Whoever was swept up in the hysteria already has their momento. They got their one card. Now they don't want anything else."

Since then, the value of the card has dropped to $350 and many shop owners and dealers believe it will continue to drop.

Yourell saw fewer and fewer of Simpson's cards on dealers' tables at shows as time went on after the murders. Collectors were more focused on Cal Ripken Jr.'s cards as he closed in and then broke Lou Gehrig's all-time consecutive games played record.

Weymouth's Chris Yourell holds up O.J. Simpson's 1970 Topps rookie card. The owner of South Shore Sports Cards sold an autographed Simpson card the day after the former Heisman Trophy winner was acquitted of double murder, but says the demand for Simpson's cards has all but disappeared.

Mickey Mantle's death in August brought a renewed interest to his cards. The cards of younger stars like Atlanta Braves pitcher Greg Maddux and Ken Griffey Jr., of the Seattle Mariners also were in great demand.

There were other sets of cards released dealing with the trial and the characters involved. Rockland's Elliot Goldberg who owns Pastimes in Cohasset, never displayed Simpson's cards in his shop. The lone exception, though, was the "In Pursuit of Justice" cards he carried.

The 50-card set, released in 1994 by Interlink News Service, featured cards of Simpson, Al Cowlings and the low-speed Bronco chase, Goldman and the lawyers involved.

Goldberg says he had reservations about carrying the cards at first, but finally decided to stock them because a portion of the proceeds from the sale of the cards were donated to support the prevention of domestic violence and benefit shelters for abused women and children.

The highest Goldberg saw Simpson's rookie card selling for at shows was between $200 and $250. Since the verdict a handful of people have called Goldberg's shop and inquired if there was any change in the current price of $160.

Goldberg says people within the hobby knew better than to buy cards at inflated prices. Speculators, not hobbyists, were buying Simpson's cards.

Only time will tell if Simpson's popularity in the sports card business will ever rise again.

Bledsoe wows 'em at NDA fund-raiser

Pats QB tells fans to keep the faith

By DAVID McKEE
Cohasset Mariner

New England Patriot quarterback Drew Bledsoe traded his game jersey and football for a business suit and microphone Monday evening to help raise funds for Hingham's Notre Dame Academy.

And despite the Patriots iess than spectacular record, the more than 200 people in attendance at the tenth annual Medallion Club Dinner welcomed the tall quarterback with open arms and hearty cheers.

Bledsoe, who grew up in Walla Walla, Washington as the son of two teachers, was more than happy to help out the school.

"Anytime you talk about education, you're talking about something dear to my heart," he told the crowd. "Education should be the number one priority so that the young kids of today can carry the torch."

Bledsoe also had a message to Patriots fans distraught over the team's recent poor performance on the field.

"Keep the faith. Right now things aren't going our way but there is still hope for this season," he said. "And with the ownership we have in place, this team will be a force for a long time."

Bledsoe, was self-deprecating and totally at ease as he traded quips with the overflow crowd and NBC sportscaster and master of ceremonies Will McDonough.

When an audience member asked what changes the Patriots would need to be successful next year, Bledsoe groaned, "Already talking about next year."

The fun continued when Bledsoe was asked how his grades were in college before he declared himself eligible for the NFL draft after his junior year at Washington State.

"Hmmm," he coughed. "Well, I haven't graduated from college yet but I intend to when I get the chance. Prior to declaring, I had about a 3.2 grade point average. But it went down somewhat that last semester."

Bledsoe also took a dig at McDonough.

When asked what he would be doing if he wasn't playing football, Bledsoe said. "I wouldn't mind working with kids in some way, maybe coaching. But it wouldn't be at the pro level, it would be high school or college. Or I could do something really easy, like writing for a newspaper."

Bledsoe also expressed how comfortably he has fit into life in New England. During the football season, Bledsoe lives on the South Shore with his girlfriend.

"I'm really enjoying it out here," he said. "When I was drafted, I'd never been east of the Mississippi River and I thought people on the east coast all lived in crowded cities. But it's been great here and the people have treated me nicely."

Bledsoe's appearance helped make this year's Medallion Club Dinner the most successful, according to McDonough. The annual dinner raises funds for NDA's athletic program. Previous guest speakers have included NFL coaches Bill Parcells and Tom Coughlin and sportscaster Bob Costas.

"After I explained what the event was all about to Drew he agreed right away," McDonough said. He approached Bledsoe during mini-camp over the summer. "And a couple weeks ago I reminded Drew that all he had crunched Anchormen running back Steve Carrerio. Senior co-captain Brian Sasso turned in his usual stellar performance at middle linebacker. Duffy corralled an interception to go with his two-point conversion and Jaime Buick batted down Thornton's passes and nearly reached the quarterback several times from his spot at defensive end. While Mike Coates and Pat Reynolds both persistently chased Thornton all over the field, senior Kevin Smith made several key tackles on Carreiro. Keith Wright and Matt Conley both played well on the defensive line, while Jared Batts also performed well for the Skippers.

A pair of freshmen also impressed the fans. Tim Cullinan made an excellent catch after quarterback Pat Hurley drilled him with a spiral. Cullinan appeared to be headed for the open field, when he was tripped up from behind and brought down. John-Paul Laugelle also played well by pressuring Thornton in the second half and nearly coming up with several big sacks.

Cohasset's backfield showed its depth in the second half. Eric Snow streaked for several yards and Hamilton wheeled in from 46 yards out, capping the scoring and bringing the final tally to 33-0.

Hurley turned in a very solid performance, displaying his strong throwing arm with the pass to Cullinan and his guts when he came back from two hard hits. Hurley, only a sophomore, has continued to improve since his first football game, just five games ago.

Knurek credited the offensive line with much of the team's success. "Before the game, the offensive line promised us 40 minutes of persistent blocking," he said. "We got that and that was what helped us to run the ball so well."

Indeed, the offensive line of Nate Caldwell, Chad Whitman, Sasso, Brian Riley and John Kasameyer seemed to block the Anchormen's defensive unit without much of a problem, allowing five different Skippers to score.

Hopefully, Cohasset's massacre of the Anchormen can be carried over into this Friday's game, when the team faces off against Charlestown at Milliken Field at 2:30 p.m. If the Skippers can play with the kind of intensity and skill they played with on Sunday, there's no telling how many Cohasset players will score.

when she first started.

Larson is still an infant at the sport as compared to the Olympic riders, most of whom compete at the games in their 40s. That she started riding ponies at such a young age can only work to Larson's advantage.

"You can do it and be at the top of your game for a long time," Greer said. "To start at an early age is very important."

Larson's grace and adeptness on ponies caught the eye of well-known children's book author, Jan Brett of Norwell, who also rides at River Wind Farm. Brett took photos of Larson while she was riding, getting on and off her pony and posing for the pictures. In her recently published book, "Armadillo Rodeo," Larson's likeness appears in stunning detail.

Larson admits she was shocked when she first saw the illustrations.

"I thought they did actually look like me and I was pretty amazed," she said.

During a promotion of the book at Thayer Academy in October, Brett introduced Larson to the audience and read her work to those who attended. The promotion was a celebration of sorts with a Texas barbecue, hay and pony rides. Larson got a round of applause when Brett introduced her as a model for one of the characters in her book.

The applause was much like the adulation she receives during a competition and should continue in the years to come.

Eleven-year-old Emily Larson works out on her Arabian Welsh Pony "Abby" during the equestrian season last summer.

Ice skating lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Bay State Ice Skating School, is pleased to announce registration for indoor ice skating lessons for children age five through adults.

The fall seven-week session will be offered Sunday evenings, at the MDC Skating Rink in Weymouth. Sunday classes begin Nov. 12 at 5 p.m. The session consists of seven classes over a seven-week period. Participants may use either figure or hockey skates for lessons. The fee for the seven-week session is $70 for children and $80 for adult participants. The fee includes the weekly rink admission. Should you wish further information or want to register for the indoor skating lessons, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791.

Approximately 12 levels of instruction will be available in groups of 8 to 10 age-appropriate participants by professional instructors. Helmets are mandatory for ages five and six but recommended for all beginners regardless of age.

Registration will be held Sunday, Nov. 5, at 5 p.m., at the Weymouth MDC Ice Rink, however, you will be assured of a place pre-registering by calling 383-6791.

Mo Vaughn hitting clinic

CYBA has been contacted by Pawtucket Red Sox standout Paul Rappoli to see if there are any Cohasset ballplayers interested in attending a three-day hitting camp at Northeastern with Red Sox slugger Mo Vaughn. There will be two daily sessions. The morning session will be for ages eight to 12 and the afternoon session will be for ages 13 to 18. The cost of the camp is $200. For further information call Bob Moody at 383-0385.

Rafferty's Pub race on Nov. 5

Rafferty's Pub is sponsoring their 12th annual five-mile road race on Nov. 5. The race starts at 12 noon.

The '94 race attracted 318 finishers with more expected this year on the Webster Street course.

The race starts and finishes at Rafferty's Pub.

Proceeds from the race will benefit the MHS track and cross country teams.

Commemorative T-shirts will be provided to all participants pre-registered by Oct. 30.

Entry blanks are available at Rafferty's Pub.

For more info call 834-4468.

Basketball registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department Boosters' Basketball registrations will be held for girls and boys in grades one through eight at the town hall Saturday, Nov. 4, from 9 to 11 a.m. The fee for the program is $30. Checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset and the shirt fee charge is included in the fee.

Details on the basketball program will be available at registration. Games are played on Saturdays, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts.

The Recreational Basketball Program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department.

Bledsoe, who was a few minutes late for the start of the event, was even the topic when Sister Anne Monica said grace at the start of the dinner.

"And above all God, send us Drew," said the sister to rousing laughter.

The prayer seemed to work as Bledsoe strolled in a few minutes later.

After dinner, Bledsoe spoke briefly to the crowd, took some questions and then posed for pictures and signed autographs.

During his speech, he talked about how people in his generation often don't appreciate the hard-fought freedoms offered in the United States.

He related a story about how his grandfather lost his best friend during an air battle in World War II.

"I can go out and play a game for a living," he said. "And I get to travel all over the place because of the freedoms won by our older generations. My generation and the one below it, take a lot for granted. We really don't realize how blessed we are."

Cohasset Business

Annual Chamber auction is Nov. 4

Will benefit Appalachia Service Project and Cohasset Harborfest

The eighth annual Chamber of Commerce Community Auction will be held Saturday, Nov. 4, at the Cohasset Community Center. A free spaghetti dinner will be served at 6:30 p.m., followed by the auction at 7:30 p.m. Proceeds from this year's event will be divided between the Appalachia Service Project of Cohasset and the Cohasset Harborfest.

Antiques, fine dining certificates, holiday gifts, jewelry and other items will be featured. The auction will feature the following dinners: a five-course dinner for eight (including New Orleans skillet barbecued shrimp, smoked salmon artichoke hearts and Laurie's Cheese Pie) for a Chamber of Commerce project; seven-course Italian dinner from soup to juice for eight prepared by Papa Razzi executive chef Ann Marie Lagrotteria and sous chef Jim Lagrotteria for Cohasset Harborfest. The dinners will be served at home. (Beverages are not included.)

Auction items may be previewed from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. by those unable to attend the dinner and auction. Bids may be left at that time. Donations of items or services for the auction are welcome. For further information or to make a contribution, call the Chamber at 383-1010.

Mariner appoints 2 editors

Adams leads Scituate, Rogers heads Ab-Rock

Mariner Community Newspapers has appointed Steve Adams editor of the Scituate Mariner and Rob Rogers editor of the Abington-Rockland Mariner.

The appointments were made by David M. Levine, editor-in-chief of the South Shore-based newspaper group.

Adams, who had been editor of the Abington-Rockland Mariner for nearly three years, replaces Marilyn Jackson, who was named managing editor of Mariner Community Newspapers. She will have day-to-day responsibility for the Marshfield Mariner, the company's flagship newspaper, as well as other administrative duties.

Rogers had been a stringer and full-time reporter in several South Shore communities, including Marshfield and Scituate. A native of Plymouth, Rogers was graduated from Sacred Heart High School, Kingston, and Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio.

ADAMS
Scituate resident

Adams, who lives in Scituate, is a 1987 graduate of Connecticut College, where he received an undergraduate degree in government. From 1987 to 1990, he was a staff reporter at Shore Line Newspapers, where he was assigned to the town of Ledyard, Conn., and chronicled the growing pains of the Mashantucket Pequot tribe as they prepared to launch their Foxwoods casino. He later covered East Lyme and Waterford, Conn.

Levine said both appointments are aimed at strengthening the newspapers' management team. "Both Adams and Rogers have a strong track record as newsmen and bring to the Mariner a fine record of journalistic achievment," he said.

The appointments are effective Nov. 1.

Business roundtables set at Community Center

The South Shore Community Center will be the site for Business Roundtables '90, an educational resource being offered by the Business Center at the South Shore Community Center on Nov. 9 at 7 p.m. Business Roundtables supports small businesses, entrepreneurs and business professionals living and/or working on the South Shore. The goal is to blend new businesses with mature established companies with good track records for counsel and advice.

The monthly meetings will match "mentor" with "protégé" companies, which are asked to submit a business or marketing plan whenever possible for review by the Roundtable selection committee. Mentor companies are asked to bring their expertise. A trained facilitator will lead the creative brainstorming sessions and guide participants through the agenda. This method is patterned after the "Success Teams" developed by well known author, Barbara Sher.

"The purpose of the roundtables, said Nina Belsan, executive director of the Center, "is to help new businesses succeed and mature businesses to prosper."

The fee is $5 for members and $8 for non-members. For further information call Nina Belsan at 383-0088 or 545-5462.

Harvest fair to benefit local food pantries

Jack Conway's Cohasset sales office will hold its second annual Harvest Fair Saturday, Nov. 18, from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., to benefit the Cohasset and Scituate food pantries.

The fair will feature a bake sale and a silent auction of goods and services donated by local businesses. Hamburgers, hotdogs and other refreshments will be served.

Harvest Fair organizer Marge Gorman, who is a realtor with Conway, said, "We hope to surpass the $3,000 raised in 1994."

For further information or to make a donation of a baked good or silent auction item, call Marge Gorman at 383-1800.

Suspected thiefs caught

Following up on a general broadcast from Weymouth police about a larceny from an antique store, Det. Richard Grassie and Sgt. Robert Jackson apprehended the two suspects at 1:15 p.m. Thursday at 3A Antiques in Cohasset.

Police charged James H. Arnstein, 44, [redacted] Midledge Ave., Hull with receiving stolen property valued over $250; operating a motor vehicle after revocation; being uninsured and having a forged inspection sticker. Arnstein was bailed with a return court date of Dec. 12, Jackson said.

Police also charged Randall W. Ruscansky, 41, 27 Sagamore Terrace, Hull, with receiving stolen property over $250 and shoplifting. There were also numerous warrants for Ruscansky, Jackson said.

Ruscansky plead guilty to receiving stolen property and was sentenced to one year at the Dedham House of Correction. He was committed to 30 days with the balance suspended until Jan. 26, 1996, Jackson said.

Public Notice

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 95P2529E1

Estate of GERTRUDE HOOPER late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will and codicil of said decedent be proved and allowed and that ROBERT C. HOOPER of CAMBRIDGE in the County of MIDDLESEX and GORDON M. STEVENSON, Jr., of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executors named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on November 29, 1995.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this sixteenth day of October, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five.

Town passes tobacco test

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset tobacco retailers, stung in earlier compliance checks by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program, got a perfect score in compliance this time around.

Fourteen attempted purchases were made by out-of-town teens and all 14 were turned down, said the collaborative's Health Educator Susan Cronin.

Getting tougher on teen puffers

This was the third and largest tobacco sting the collaborative has initiated since beginning its tobacco control program two years ago. Funded by a 25-cent cigarette tax, the collaborative has an on-going program of education and shares a state-wide tobacco control goal of decreasing tobacco use 50 percent by 1999.

In addition to school health education and Cohasset's PALS for Wellness program, which teaches students the hazards of getting hooked on tobacco – merchants learn their own lessons on how to comply with local and state laws which prohibit the sale of cigarettes and other tobacco products to minors under the age of 18.

Merchant training sessions held throughout the South Shore by the collaborative have updated retailers on the law and how to comply with it as well as providing correct signs and methods to identify teens, said Cronin, who made a point to visit all area merchants personally this fall in order to put a face behind the collaborative's programs and offer assistance.

"We send out so much information," said Cronin, who stressed that the collaborative is there to help merchants.

Over all, 396 tobacco retailers were

Special to the Mariner

Although the Wilson House and the Maritime Museum are now closed to the public for the winter, the Cohasset Historical Society, which operates the two, is anything but dormant.

Newly elected president David Pottenger said the society has several activities planned for the winter months.

Social events for members, as well as historical lectures for the public, will be held at the Lothrop House, the society's headquarters. The society will also display pieces of its extensive costume collection in various storefronts throughout the Town cemetery off 3A is still alive and well

Beechwood cemetery upgrade is planned

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

A town cemetery off Rte. 3A near the Super Stop & Shop is still an option, Joseph Jerz of the Cemetery Study Committee town town meeting this week.

He explained that the CSC is studying using the parcel which abuts the Red Fox Lane subdivision.

"This is an excellent parcel in terms of citing a new cemetery," Jerz said.

The parcel was rejected about 18 months ago by selectmen when the developer of Red Fox Lane objected to having the access to the cemetery through his land. Preliminary plans proposed taking some land by imminent domain.

But Jerz said this week that the CSC is studying accessing the parcel from Sohier Street or from the westerly side of the Deer Hill School property.

At the same time, the committee is proceeding with plans to upgrade and expand the town-owned Beechwood Cemetery. Engineering design proposals have been solicited and received from two companies, Jerz said. Work could begin on Beechwood, which will be expanded by 280 graves, by early summer 1996.

A note to our readers

Dear Cohasset residents:

This week we are mailing the Cohasset Mariner to every home in town.

To those of you who haven't yet been convinced that the Cohasset Mariner is the indispensable source for everything that is Cohasset, please accept this free copy of the newspaper as a sample of what you're missing.

To those of you who are already subscribers, we thank you.

We continue to do our best to make the Cohasset Mariner an honest reflection of the town we serve. We are proud to publish the most thorough coverage of the place you call home, be it in the schools, sports, town government, community events, civic groups or people around town.

We're both warm and fuzzy and hard-hitting. We'll let you know who's on the dean's list while at the same time serving as a government watch dog. We'll dazzle you with our photographs and make you think with our editorials.

There's more to the Cohasset Mariner. But don't take our word for it. Sit back, relax and enjoy this issue. Be sure to read about Jan Brett's new book in South Look, where you'll also find the classified section and regional calendar filled with what's happening on the South Shore.

If you'd like to come aboard and have the Cohasset Mariner delivered to your mailbox each Thursday for only 42 cents a week, please take a moment to fill out the subscription form on page 30 or call us at 1-800-649-6661. And as an added bonus we will donate $3 of each new subscription to the Teen Center. To learn more about the Teen Center, please see the story on page 14.

Valuations ready for inspection

The fiscal 1996 Real Estate Assessed Valuations have been completed and have been submitted for certification by the Massachusetts Department of Revenue.

The new values are available for public inspection at the Assessor's Office, Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., during regular business hours. Due to staffing limitations, telephone inquiries about valuations will not be accepted.

Additional copies of the value listings are available for inspection at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 106 South Main St. Any problems regarding valuation will be handled through the abatement process. Call the Assessor's Office staff for more information.

Elevator phone installed

An emergency phone in the town hall elevator is now hooked directly up to the police station, police said.

The button-and-speaker system, which is inside the elevator telephone cabinet, was tested successfully Tuesday morning and comes through on the 9-1-1 line.

Town officials hooked up the new line in the seven-year-old elevator after conservation commission secretary Pat Walsh was trapped in the elevator for 37 hours last week.

A telephone had never been installed in the special compartment and Walsh – who was trapped in the elevator after she went to town hall Saturday, Oct. 28 – had no way to call for help.

Town administrator Gregory Doyon said the new system cost less than the $1,200 appropriated for an elevator phone at last spring's annual town meeting.

The system inside the elevator includes a button and a speaker. There is no handset. Once the button is pressed, a dial tone can be heard and then the 9-1-1 dispatcher answers and then the person who is stuck can talk into the speaker. However with enhanced 9-1-1, which Cohasset has, the address "town hall elevator" comes up automatically on the screen and police would respond even if the trapped individual was unable to answer.

In the Oct. 28 incident, the circuit breaker switch tripped cutting off power to run the elevator due to a sudden "brown out" or drop in power. Walsh rang the alarm bell but apparently no one who was in town hall that day heard it or her calls for help.

Fire department commended

Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko commended the fire department for its quick response to a trash compactor fire, Oct. 26 at the rear of Super Stop & Shop.

"The professionalism shown by Captain Silvia and his fire-fighters extinguishing flames and venting smoke out of the building was instrumental in preventing serious harm to employees, patrons and the structure," Staszko wrote in an Oct. 27 letter to Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

"I would like a special thanks to Thomas McKay of 3A Towing for his quick response with a large tow truck in moving the compactor away from the building so your fire-fighters could work more efficiently.

"On behalf of the Super Stop & Shop Supermarket Companies and myself, I would like to thank you, Capt. Silvia, and all the men of your department for a job well done."

Teacher standards is topic

At a recent meeting, the school committee discussed the evaluation of performance standards for teachers and administrators.

Under the Education Reform Act, the state has issued a set of performance standards as guidelines for the evaluation of teachers and administrators.

Cohasset has had a set of guidelines in place since 1992-1993.

"It is fortunate in Cohasset that we did spend a great deal of time in the development of an evaluation instrument," said Hart. "It parallels the direction the state has pursued."

The school committee, through communication with the state, will decide if Cohasset's evaluation tool matches or exceeds the guidelines drawn up in the state's tool.

School committee member Nancy Sandell suggested that the committee be allowed to examine the state's standards further to see "if we might be able to strengthen our instrument according to the state."

Some of the criteria addressed in both evaluation tools are: learning atmosphere, which should promote mutual cooperation and respect; classroom management; communication; how students interact with the teacher and vice versa; and professional responsibilities which include participation in department and building activities, including extracurricular activities.

The standards will be negotiated with the teacher's association.

The school committee also approved the 1995 Junior/Senior High Handbook.

"(It is) such an improvement from last year," Sandell said.

School committee member James Kirk agreed but suggested highlighting the sections that have changed from the previous year.

Cohasset's Week

Ambulance billing update

In October, the fire department billed for 22 ambulance calls totalling $7,467.52.

Also last month, the town collected $10,244.70 in outstanding ambulance bills. So far this fiscal year, the town has collected $34,117.18 out of a possible $42,524.65, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln wrote this week in a memo to selectmen.

Title change is explained

Town meeting voters approved changing the town's "Executive Secretary" position to "Town Administrator."

Selectmen explained the new position, which is held by Gregory Doyon, does not include any change in duties or salary increase.

Doyon oversees clerical staff at town hall and is the town's chief procurement officer in addition to other duties and performs duties more in line with town administrator, selectmen said.

"The purpose (of this article) is to simply change the name of the position to better reflect the professional level of the job," Selectman Jane Goedecke said. She explained that "executive secretary" sounds like a clerical position and the position should carry a title commensurate with its duties.

The town meeting action changes the town's by-law "Appointed Town Officers" by substituting Town Administrator wherever Executive Secretary appears.

Veterans to be remembered

This week, town meeting agreed to spend $3,000 in free cash to procure photographs of Cohasset servicemen who lost their lives in World War II, Korea and Vietnam. The pictures will be hung on the wall of the town hall auditorium with those of the five men who lost their lives in World War I.

The town will also spend about $4,500 to install signs to name traffic squares and islands in memory of nine Cohasset veterans who lost their lives in Vietnam and Korea. The stories of these men will be included in the next published narrative history of Cohasset.

Clean catch basin covers

All Cohasset residents are encouraged to clean off any catch basin covers near their homes to prevent flooding and subsequent damage to their properties.

The Highway Department cleans these covers as often as possible, but during this time of year with leaves falling quickly and the current rainfall, the Highway Department cannot continually clean off the basin covers, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

30-day window enacted

The Advisory Committee will receive collective bargaining agreements for perusal 30 days before town meeting.

This by-law change approved by town meeting this week gives the advisory board ample time to scrutinize the agreement and prepare a recommendation for town meeting, proponents said.

Selectmen's proposal to half the window of time failed and objections from Peter Pacetti, chairman of the personnel board, didn't sway voters.

Pacetti explained that personnel negotiations take time and this by-law change would add an unnecessary burden to the process. He said most contracts expire June 30 and negotiations don't get serious until January, three months before the annual town meeting.

Ray Kasperowicz of 172 S. Main Street, one of the article's proponents, said voters were frustrated about "being hit over the head at the last minute" when asked to approve funding for labor contracts.

Another proponent F. Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane Street, said that "we the people have the right to digest the information and make an informed vote."

Town has some extra dough

The town increased its stabilization fund, used for capital purchases under $50,000, by $75,000 this week.

Town meeting voters agreed to take the money out of the town's $965,000 in free cash.

"Why pay interest when we can collect interest?" advisory board chairman Roger Whiteley asked Town meeting will have to agree by a 2/3 vote to use money in the stabilization fund.

Whiteley explained that the town should pay cash for equipment like school buses and minivans which cost less than $50,000 and avoid borrowing which will save the town money.

Town meeting articles were slated to use up about $400,000 of the town's surplus. Another large amount will be put toward covering an anticipated fiscal year 1997 deficit of about $300,000.

The town's surplus is due to increased excise tax revenue, an over estimation of health insurance premiums, and money being returned to the general fund by the water department.

Water Department housekeeping matters handled

Voters approved four "housekeeping" articles for the water commission, including a reduction in the cost of backflow prevention inspections for non-residential water users.

Water commissioner Robert Kasameyer explained the state-mandated semi-annual inspections are now billed at $50 each. But the cost can be reduced to $40 for each inspection (article 37).

On a unanimous vote, town meeting approved a $19,777 transfer (article 36) from water company revenues to pay additional operating expenses of the water management company.

In addition, a $55,000 transfer from the capital improvement account was also approved (article 39). Advisory committee member Roger Whitley said this money is in the water commission's budget, for a principal payment that it does not need to make this year. Only the interest payment is due.

Voters also approved warrant article 38, to transfer $30,000 from water department revenue to set aside in the event it is necessary to pay unemployment insurance claims for three former employees who chose not to be hired by the private water management company.

Sewer matter is reconsidered

The sewer commission came back to town meeting Tuesday, to change their sewer rate increase schedule.

Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild said the article that passed Monday night, raising sewer rates, was to go into effect on December 1. However, since the sewer rates are based on water usage, the two bills must coincide. Water bills are issued on February 1.

Town meeting unanimously voted first to suspend town meeting rules than prevent reconsideration of an article, and then to make the change.

Town moderator George Marlette explained that it is proper to suspend the rules in this case because the requested action is "more protective."

Town can lease old fire station

With no discussion, town meeting voters also authorized selectmen to enter into a lease of the former North Cohasset Fire Station at 245 Hull Street. Selectman Michael Sullivan said the board was aware that the sewer department may need the property for a pumping station, and would keep that in mind when negotiating a lease.

Earlier this year, Michelle Goodson of the Ancient Farmers Market asked to rent the property.

Bleachers and other field improvements get nod

Complex to be named 'Alumni Field'

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Town meeting voters approved four warrant articles that grant an additional $103,000 to complete the construction of the new high school athletic field, with improvements to the adjacent Milliken and Lillard fields.

Voters also supported the field committee's request (article 43) to christen the new field "Cohasset Alumni Field," over the objection of the advisory committee.

Of the four warrant articles concerning the athletic fields, the request to borrow an additional $60,000 (article 44) for permanent bleachers, to seat approximately 500 spectators, generated the most comment, and resulted in counted vote to determine the two-thirds required to authorize the borrowing.

The measure passed 83 to 26, despite objections from the advisory committee.
A related article (article 46), for $18,000 for Milliken and Lillard field improvements passed by a 93 to 5 margin.

Admitting that the bleachers are "over-priced", field committee member Wayne Sawchuk explained that there is a limited number of bleacher suppliers and the committee had found the best deal it could. Of the total cost, $8,500 represents installation of the bleachers with steel beams and concrete footings. He also noted that the bleachers are expected to last for 30 years.

Advisory committee member Richard Flynn acknowledged the hard work of the field committee but reminded voters that borrowing $60,000 for the permanent bleachers would ultimately cost the town $97,000 when interest is included.

Roger Whitley, also of the advisory committee, noted that, at $60,000 for 500 seats, the bleachers cost $120 per seat. He added that the original $775,000 bond issue means a cost of $1 million dollars with interest.

Field committee chairman Gary Vanderweil said Cohasset residents of all ages have already begun to use the new athletic fields. The four new tennis courts are regularly in use.

"This is an outstanding investment by the town," Vanderweil said, urging voters to approve the articles to complete the project.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the field committee did not originally request money for the bleachers, expecting to solicit donations. Contributions were received for lights, the scoreboard, and the snack bar, he said. With 10 additional games played under the lights, he noted, a portion of the additional gate fees will be returned to Cohasset's general fund, and defray some of this expense.

Although he did not support the original bond issue for the project, advisory committee member Leland Jenkins urged support of the $25,000 request, congratulating Sawchuk and the Milliken Field committee for bringing the project to completion at only three percent above the original estimate.

Sawchuk explained that additional engineering costs plus the unforeseen construction of a retaining wall and replacement of a fire hydrant amounted to approximately $22,000 necessary to complete the 400-meter track, with $3,000 held for contingencies.

To finish the Milliken and Lillard field improvements, the committee also requested $18,000 to move goal posts, purchase portable bleachers, and install a fence.

The portable bleachers can be moved between the soccer and baseball fields, Sawchuk said, and the goal posts are now in the middle of the new soccer fields.

The advisory committee also did not support the field committee's article to name the field Cohasset Alumni Field, saying that it was "premature" to take this action and noting that there had been significant donations from individuals, who should be recognized for their contributions. But Selectman Sullivan said that "Alumni Field" recognizes many people involved in the project.

However, when school committee chairman Ralph Kidder noted that "Alumni" is male, and offered the alternative of "Alumni/ae Field," it was not "seconded." Instead, groans and shouts of "No" were offered from voters in attendance.

Elder Affairs Board named

Town meeting voters also approved amending the by-law "Appointed Standing Town Boards & Committees" to reflect changing the name of the Council on Aging to the Elder Affairs Board.

Council on Aging Chairman Joseph Buckley explained that the new name is more up to date and is in keeping with the state cabinet office, called the Executive Office of Elder Affairs.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

WHOLESALE VS. RETAIL LAND

QUESTION: I have the opportunity to purchase a large tract of land in a good location. My Realtor tells me that if I subdivide it, the total value of all the lots will be worth far more than the value of the entire tract, as-is. Is this true?

ANSWER: In the normal marketplace, there are two price levels — wholesale and retail. The purchase and sale of raw land is no different. A review of the sales price history of any large parcel of land will show abrupt jumps as the acreage is subdivided and sold off in smaller lots.

Obtaining land at a wholesale level is a good way to buy. It costs less and will sell for more at "retail".

Cohasset's Week

Stage is set for DPW

Town meeting set the stage Tuesday to create a public works department early next year.

Voters approved two articles that will, in the words of Selectman Jane Goedecke, "move up the timetable" to coincide with the end of the term of Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield.

In order to create the new department, with an appointed public works superintendent, voters amended Cohasset's by-laws by deleting "highway surveyor" from the elected officials, and deleting "superintendent of trees, parks, and cemeteries" from the appointed officials.

Beginning next spring, the two positions will be combined, with a new job description.

Goedecke explained that earlier this year, town meeting passed an article to implement the public works department at the end of the fiscal year in 1998. However, that would take place in the middle of the highway surveyor's term. Since the new garage will be ready, and with the end of highway surveyor's term, the town is in a position to make the changeover sooner.

Fast food is defined

Cohasset has a definition of "fast food" which the planning board chairman said will allow town officials to review future applications for this type of business.

The zoning amendment passed by a vote of 73 to 18, with 7 abstentions.

Under the new by-law, "fast food restaurants" are allowed with a special permit in non-residential districts only.

Planning board chairman Alfred Moore said Cohasset will have the opportunity of oversight for new businesses.

But Sohier Street resident Robert Davenport said the by-law describes a number of existing sandwich shops. He also noted that the appeals board had initiated the article, but no member of the board was present at town meeting.

Voters accept gift of Noel Ripley Scholarship Fund

Town meeting accepted the gift of the Noel Ripley Scholarship Fund which will be awarded annually to two Cohasset High School students who have been diagnosed with dyslexia.

Under the provisions of the fund created by the town historian, the principal will be held in perpetuity, with the interest awarded to students selected by the superintendent of schools.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said Ripley set up the scholarship fund with $20,000 which will provide two $600 awards annually. As a condition of the scholarship, the recipients must be enrolled in a four-year college or vocational education program.

She added that Ripley hopes others will add to the fund's principal.

Voters okay $95K for special legal counsel

To be used for landfill expansion issues

The board of health's request for $95,000 for special legal counsel to represent Cohasset regarding Cohasset Heights Ltd.'s application to expand its landfill passed muster with town meeting voters this week.

Health board chairman Thomas Cook said the state Department of Environmental Protection will make a decision on the CHL request later this year. If the expansion request is granted, the health board will hold its own hearings, for which special environmental counsel will be needed to review the DEP ruling, examine witnesses and take testimony, and, if necessary, prepare an appeal.

This representation is estimated to cost $60,000, Cook said, with the balance of the transfer to be used by the conservation commission for two lawsuits that are now pending for violations of the wetlands protection act by CHL.

Conservation commission chairman Tom Callahan said CHL was charged in 1994 with failing to control run off, filling or alteration of wetlands, and "unseen pollution" from uncontrolled leachate leaving the CHL site.

The advisory committee and selectmen supported the transfer request, with advisory committee member Richard Flynn saying, "This is not the time to stop the funding."

Selectman Peter Pratt said Cohasset has "no choice" but to defend the public interests of the town.

Cohasset Heights owner Paul Barry disputed claims that his company had illegally dumped rubbish between 1982 and 1988.

"People should know we're permitted to dump rubbish" at that time, he said.

Barry also asked what portion of the requested money was for actual legal representation.

Cook said that approximately $54,000 of the health department's representation was for technical review of the CHL application.

Getting tougher on teen puffers

tested last week and while many towns compliance rates improved since last May's sting, some communities – including Scituate fared worse in this round.

While just three out of 19 Scituate tobacco retailers were found in violation last spring, 10 out of 18 stores sold to minors this time, Cronin said. Hull had the worst compliance rate with under aged teens successfully purchasing tobacco products in 13 out of 20 stores.

Still, Cronin said she is encouraged by recent results which show that merchants are taking the laws more seriously.

Along with merchant education, tobacco permitting which went into effect in September, has been credited with Cohasset's 100 percent compliance rate.

Tobacco permits can be suspended or revoked for repeated violations – hitting merchants where it really hurts in the cash register.

Collaborative Director Dawn Sibor estimates that cigarette sales can add up to 40 percent of a convenience store's business, which gives retailers a strong economic incentive to comply.

'Permitting has made a big difference in merchants' attitudes," Cronin said.

Inside the schools, Health Educator Michael Gill said while smoking seems to be going out of style, there is still work to be done.

Gill estimates that about 8 percent of Cohasset students smoke – the largest number of them young women.

"It's a problem we have to continue to work on," said Gill, who is encouraged by the results of the sting.

Students, who once confided that cigarettes were easy to come by, are now admitting its tougher to buy and that could lower the numbers who smoke, he said.

"It also sends a message to kids that adults don't want you smoking," Gill added.

Chief praises local merchants

In his monthly status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan reported that Officer Lisa Matos and two 16-year-old volunteers performed a tobacco law compliance check Oct. 20 on 15 businesses and stores in town that sell tobacco products (see related story).

The volunteers were selected by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, which sponsored the event, Noonan said.

The girls, both Scituate High School students, attempted to purchase tobacco products at the businesses and stores.

"Not one would sell tobacco to the girls," Noonan said. "The merchants in town exhibited 100 percent compliance with the law.

"This is a significant improvement with compliance since the previous compliance check revealed that 70 percent of the businesses (in town) did sell tobacco to the minors."

System okayed

The police and fire departments won approval for a new $55,000 computer network at town meeting this week.

But the approval didn't come without questioning.

"Explain what it does and why it costs so much," James Mullen, 337 S. Main Street, asked.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the software, hardware and training are costly. He said the new system would allow the police department to store records electronically and would save time. Currently, an officer must fill out about 13 forms for a single Operating Under the Influence (OUI) arrest.

The system would run 24 hours a day and the software would include all the forms needed by the police and fire departments.

"It would revolutionize the way we do business," Noonan said.

We all extend happy birthday greetings to Emily Coburn. Last Sunday was a special one for her indeed! She was two years old! Emily is one of those little girls that brightens up the corner that she is in, and makes all around her feel happy.

Hope you had a great day Emily!

Everyone "around town" has been saying the same thing, "poor Pat" — you can imagine what it must have been like to be stranded in an elevator for 36 hours! Pat's bravery even made nation-wide television, Bob Shultz called from Denver to tell his folks that he had seen her interviewed! Tales of bravery do travel!

Speaking of Bob Shultz, he had some great news for all to share, he now works for Boston Market (located in Denver) and loves it. We know he will do a spectacular job, Bob has always put his best effort into everything he does.

A memo about the fields again! We were up there last week, admiring them, when we saw a big dog "doing his duty," then running all over the field. The owner was right behind him, carrying his leash! After all of the hard work that has been done, and the pleas to keep off — I guess we protest in vain!

The 55th version of the Cohasset Village Fair will be held Saturday, Dec. 2, this year, and all of the "elves" have started their projects in earnest. As you know, it is sponsored by several Cohasset churches and nonprofit agencies, including the Second Congregational Church, St. Stephen's Episcopal, Greek Orthodox, First Parish Unitarian, Appalachian Service Project and more. Workers in the participating churches and agencies that will benefit from the event have been working for weeks preparing for the fair so that everything will be well-stocked when the doors open.

We will continue to keep you informed as more news comes in, be sure to circle the date – Santa already has! He has even arranged to be delivered by firetruck, seated on a sleigh amid a bower of trees!

Hearty congratulations go to both the boys and girls soccer teams! As this is being written, they are still in contention for winning it all, and it is hoped that both teams will. They are all winners in our eyes, and it is nice to see that dedication, hard work, and good coaching has all paid off. You guys and gals should all be proud of yourselves!

It is hard to believe that Richard Henderson is leaving his post as Cohasset Town Counsel, he has been a "fixture" forever (well, since 1982). We have no doubt whatever that his

Thanksgiving pies and breads for sale

The Appalachia Service Project is selling Thanksgiving pies and bread. Apple and pumpkin pies are $7 each, and pecan pies are $9. ASP volunteers will also bake cranberry and pumpkin breads for $5 each. Order forms will be available at church coffee hours and will be sent home with Osgood and Deer Hill School students.

To order pies or breads by phone, call Ami Argus at 383-9325. The ordering deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 15, with pickup scheduled for Sunday, Nov. 19, at the Second Congregational Church from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Delivery may also be arranged.

All proceeds will benefit the Cohasset student trip to Appalachia planned for this summer, where students will work on a home repair project. High School student volunteers work all year, raking leaves, baking pies and holding car washes to earn money for transportation and supplies.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

An elevator nightmare

Conservation Commission secretary Pat Walsh recently came through what most of us would agree is an unimaginable experience.

Trapped in an elevator for 37 hours, she managed to keep her wits about her by harnessing her anger about the involuntary solitary confinement.

There's been a compartment for a telephone in the elevator for years. It was never installed and it should have been.

The good news is the phone is in, finally. It is hooked up directly to 9-1-1, so even if the individual can't speak – the dispatcher will be able to read "town hall elevator" as the address that comes up on the screen.

After her ordeal, Mrs. Walsh provided full court to the press which took the story and ran with it. Viewers as far away as Denver, Colorado and Amarillo, Texas know about Cohasset and its elevator problem.

Pembroke selectmen this week announced the elevator in their town hall is off limits until a phone is installed.

Cohasset has been put on the map before through feature films and commercials, which have focused on the town's New England character and beauty.

Now something really bizarre has put the town in the headlines.

Last week, the Mariner story was one of the most read in the newsroom on production day. And for the record, Mrs. Walsh informed us that there were a couple of inaccuracies in our article. The woman who told Mrs. Walsh she'd better jump into the elevator the next time, after the she witnessed her wrist getting stuck in the elevator door and helped her get free – was not the same woman who later saw her rinsing her wrist in the bubbler to keep any swelling down. We also said Mrs. Walsh works late at night following conservation commission meetings when in fact, the meetings run late and she leaves soon after they adjourn – once she closes the office.

It's no surprise to us that the story made news everywhere.

Let's face it, none of us can imagine what would have gone through our minds if we'd been in Mrs. Walsh's position. What do you think after five hours? Ten? Fifteen? Twenty? Thirty? We'd have panicked for sure.

We admire Mrs. Walsh's toughness. She came through and is back at work.

But what a shame this had to happen at all. We're glad the phone is in – but it's long, long overdue.

Murray urged to oppose landfill

To the Editor:

We need Mary Jeanette Murray's help to stop the proposed expansion of Cohasset Heights, but she is not helping us. All she needs to do is to send in a letter to Dept. of Environmental Protection Commissioner David Struhs, as have hundreds of Cohasset residents, stating that she is "opposed to any expansion of Cohasset Heights" and that she "requests DEP to reject the Site Assignment Application for the expansion."

When I asked her Oct. 25 to send such a letter, Rep. Murray refused, saying that she has spoken to Struhs about the expansion many times, and that he already knows what she thinks about it. However, in an Oct. 30 letter to Murray, Struhs told her that "I am not aware if you ever have an opinion on the expansion of this site for the disposal of construction and demolition (C&D) debris." Clearly, Murray has not told Struhs that she is opposed to the expansion, and he is confused about what her position is.

A letter from Rep. Murray will be the most important letter from a Cohasset resident on this subject. If she sends a letter, as have hundreds of her constituents, opposing the expansion, she will be joining with and helping the effort to stop the expansion. If she continues in her curious and inexplicable refusal to send this simple letter, then she will be only helping the interests of Cohasset Heights over those of her constituents.

Rep. Murray has been invited to a S.A.F.E. Public Forum at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 19, at the Unitarian Parish House, where she will be given the opportunity to publicly explain her position on the expansion and to answer questions from her constituents. Other speakers at this Forum include Sen. Hedlund, who has sent in a strong letter to DEP opposing the expansion; and Bob Craver of Citizens For a Clean Environment, who has been fighting BFI's proposed Douglas landfill. I urge everyone interested in this issue to attend this important event.

Editor's note: State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray provided a copy of a letter she sent this week to DEP Commissioner David Struhs in which she said she reaffirmed her opposition to the proposed landfill expansion.

Decision on Greenbush is due by Thanksgiving

Those on both sides of tracks want answer

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

With Thanksgiving around the corner, South Shore residents may have something extra to be thankful for this year – a transportation decision regarding the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad.

Spurred on by frustrated legislators at a transportation Committee hearing on the $3.7 billion Transportation Bond Bill last week, state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes said he'll decide whether or not to restore commuter rail service along the Greenbush line between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Decision making deadlines for Greenbush set throughout the summer have passed, and while people on both sides of the issue are pleased to hear a decision may finally be at hand – some are skeptical.

"It's like the boy who cried wolf. We'll just have to see it to believe it," said state Senator Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth), one of the legislators urging Kerasiotes to take action on some transit solution for the area.

The project, a decade in the planning, to restore the 18- mile line from Scituate to Braintree has met vocal opposition in the last two years by the anti-rail Coastal Coalition, a group concerned about the noise, pollution and safety problems restoration will bring to the area.

A decision has been on hold for several months as transportation planners study alternatives to commuter rail in the Greenbush Corridor.

But a recent resurgence in rail support following the release of results in a survey conducted earlier this fall by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce – which showed the majority of those polled favored rail restoration – may have balanced the issue for some state officials.

"Frankly I'm optimistic," said state Rep. Frank Hynes, (D-Marshfield) a rail proponent who feels that the Chamber of Commerce poll has re-energized the long-time support for restoration of the line.

"Those who had become demoralized by the intransigence of the administration are out on the highways holding banners," said Hynes, who hopes this more balanced response will show the Weld administration that the project has support, and that "you can't build a transportation system based on public opinion.

"The decision has to go with the economic and transit needs of the region. Those questions are being asked now," he said.

Another reason Hynes is optimistic that a decision to rebuild the line will be made is that the transportation bill itself calls for the expansion of commuter rail in other areas. These include New Bedford/Fall River and Worcester and like Greenbush, the projects in both areas have met with some opposition. Hynes said if the state chooses not to restore Greenbush, it would send a message to rail opponents that simply by mounting a campaign, they can block necessary transportation projects.

'It's like the boy who cried wolf. We'll just have to see it to believe it.'

– State Senator Robert Hedlund.

"It would be backing down on their part," he said.

But regardless of the decision, Hynes and Hedlund are in accord that it is high time it is made.

"Whether you agree or disagree, support it or not, enough has been said. The time to make a decision is now – it has been now for over a year and we're all glad a decision is in sight, that there's light at the end of the tunnel," Hynes said.

While Hedlund is not a supporter of rail restoration, he too stressed that people on both sides of the issue want a decision.

"It's imperative that the administration does reach a decision soon, so those of us affected by the decision can get prepared for mitigation for a 'build' decision or get started on alternatives for a 'no build' decision," said Hedlund, who maintained that he would work to ensure that the region gets its fair share of transportation funds.

Michael Kennedy won't seek Studds' seat

Michael Kennedy recently made the following statement: "After a period of reflection and discussion with my family concerning the opportunity created by Congressman Studds' decision to seek re-election, I've concluded that this is not the right time for me to seek public office.

"Public service is important to me and I have always admired those who are willing to enter the electoral arena. Nevertheless, I know that elective office is not the only place where I can make a contribution. Since I returned to Citizens Energy following my uncle's campaign, I've focused on the tremendous opportunities and challenges my work provides. For example, the cuts to home energy assistance currently proposed by the Republican Congress will drastically affect thousands of low-income Massachusetts families. I believe I can be more effective in the front lines of that battle and I have a unique opportunity to work at addressing these problems in my current position.

"This is also an important time for my children and I don't minimize the sacrifice I'd have to make as a father and a husband in order to run for public office and to properly serve the people of the district.

"While I am not a candidate, I am committed to working to make sure that the next Congressman from the 10th District is a Democrat who will fight against the wrong-headed policies of Newt Gingrich and his cohorts. Finally, I'd like to thank, and am deeply grateful to, the many people who called over the past few days with words of encouragement and support."

Michael Kennedy lives in Cohasset with his wife, Victoria Gifford Kennedy, and their three children, Michael Jr., 12, Kyle, 11, and Rory, 8. Kennedy, who joined Citizens in 1984, has been chairman of Citizens Energy since 1988 and of the non-profit Citizens Conservation Corporation since 1986.

Forman won't be a candidate

Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Forman has announced that he will not be a candidate for Congress in 1996.

"This is an exciting time to be a Republican in Washington," he said. There is a great opportunity to add balance in our congressional delegation and I think Republicans can win the seat.

"As House floor leader, I spent four years away from my children. It is the wrong time in their lives to spend even two years living a life divided between Washington and home.

"I am flattered and grateful for the encouragement and support I received over the weekend. There will be other opportunities to consider a run for higher office, when my children are older.

"I am excited about the challenges of the Sheriff's office and the changes which I am pursuing there. I expect to be a candidate for Sheriff next year."

Forman served in the Massachusetts House from 1981 to 1994. He was House Republican leader from 1991 to 1994 and was appointed Sheriff in January. He and his wife, Dawn, have three children ages 10, 8 and 5.

Performance was an eye opener

To the Editor:

During the Oct. 27 weekend, the Cohasset Drama Workshop presented "Through Our Eyes," a perception of life in the '90s.

This incredible on stage frame by frame production literally locked me into each scene as I tried to anticipate its outcome. It was the most powerful collection of personal feelings I have ever witnessed. I was captivated as the teenage actors and actresses pleaded for understanding when they confronted real life situations.

"Through Our Eyes," directed by Mr. Ron Emmons and written by Cohasset High School students, reviewed the many topics confronted by teenagers such as drugs, alcohol, sex, death, divorce and abuse, just to name a few. There was no need for stage props or special effects, your attention was immediately drawn to the individual character who struggled, coming to terms with their problem. In doing so the message was clear, the adult population, especially those responsible for them, need to listen and understand their feelings.

This explosive account should be viewed by all, therefore I am hoping that Ron Emmons, assistant director, Alli Ritts and the entire crew of "Through Our Eyes" keep the production alive, because it most certainly opened my eyes ... BRAVO!

Greenbush is a dumb idea

To the Editor:

I was angered by a report in Friday's Patriot Ledger indicating that Kerasiotes seems to be basing his decision on the number of letters and calls within the last few months. What about the last two years?

He also seems to feel that the South Shore Chamber of Commerce poll of 400 people in Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate, Weymouth, Hull, Marshfield and Norwell weighs more than the 5,800 who voted in the affected towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate. Maybe this country doesn't even need votes. Maybe we could just take polls to elect officials.

Kerasiotes should spend more time concentrating on the best solutions and less time trying to build his fiefdom. Greenbush is a dumb idea environmentally and financially. It would ruin and take many lives. Now that they have all these facts, I'm amazed that an intelligent governor and transportation secretary would think of implementing such a poor solution to our transportation problem. Feeder buses to boats would solve the problems much better!

U.S. Rep. Studds receives award

Congressman Gerry Studds was awarded the 1995 Vision Action Leadership Award by the Massachusetts Association of Council on Aging and Senior Center Directors.

Studds was named for his active support of seniors during his 23-years Congressional career, as well as for his role this year in mediating a dispute between the U.S. Postal Service and more than 30 local Councils on Aging in the state, in which the Postal Service is trying to collect up to $150,000 in back postage from councils on aging.

Other recipients of the Vision Action Leadership ward were Elsie Frank, president of the Massachusetts Association of Older Americans, Thomas Hooker, regional director of the U.S. Administration on Aging, and Sue Scheible, a veteran reporter who covers senior issues for the Patriot Ledger in Quincy.

The awards were presented by Marie Saunders, the Council on Aging Director in Barnstable, at the association's annual conference.

Democrats to meet with Ryan

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee will meet with Bill Ryan, a candidate for the Democratic party's nomination for State Senate, Monday, Nov. 13, in the Stop and Shop meeting room (Route 3A in Cohasset) at 8 p.m.

Historical society looks to the future

winter.

The curator of the museums, David Wadsworth, will give tours of the museums upon request. They are closed for the winter because they don't have heating system.

The society also has to plan events and fundraisers for next year, as the maintenance of the museums and collections is expensive, according to Pottenger.

Former president Mary Hartshorne, whose term ended Oct. 31, was pleased with the society's success in reaching out to the community over the past year.

The society hopes to further the increased publicity it received this summer by a "joint program with Hull and Hingham to propagandize through pamphleteering," Pottenger said. A brochure, which should be available by next summer, will describe points of historical interest in the three towns.

One of this year's triumphs was a June, House and Garden Tour, which was well-attended and the society's most successful fundraiser to date, Hartshorne said.

"Six (private) houses that had history as well as nice gardens" were open to the public, she said. "Just less than $5,000 was raised."

Proceeds from fundraisers, donations and grants enabled the society to paint both the Caleb Lothrop House, the unique Federal-style home built in 1821, and the Captain John Wilson House, built in 1810. The society was also able to do an evaluation of the 400-piece collection in the Wilson House.

'Cohasset is an old town with a history that needs to be preserved.'

— David Pottenger.

All of the society's pieces, from furniture to Indian artifacts, are catalogued and entered into a computer data base by Pottenger, who began keying in information on items in 1991. He said he still has a long way to go. The costume collection alone contains thousands of pieces.

Complementing the record set for fundraising was one, which was set at the museums, said Wadsworth. Museum attendance increased to 1,075 visitors, 200 more than in previous years. This was due in part to an increase in the number of hours the museums remained open.

Eighth- through 10th-graders staffed the Wilson House six days a week. Hartshorne said that without them the Wilson House could not have been kept open.

The society has more than just museums, members say. It has a 1890 narrative history of Cohasset, written by the Committee on Town History. In 1928, this committee became what we now know as the Historical Society. In 1909, the committee compiled a genealogy of the families in Cohasset. Both items are housed at the Lothrop House.

Wadsworth said that a certain amount of people who visit the town have ancestors who came from Cohasset. In other instances, students inquire about the history or architecture of certain landmarks or buildings. Others may seek information on early Cohasset theater, available through a theater archive, which contains programs, posters, press clippings and scrapbooks on plays and actors dating back to before 1900. The theater archive is located at the Lothrop House.

An extensive collection of paintings of Cohasset landmarks and people hangs throughout the three buildings, "as much a documentary record as an art collection," said Hartshorne.

"One of our roles is to be an information dispenser," Wadsworth said. "Our product is local history."

However, a high percentage of those who tour the museums or take advantage of the archives are not from Cohasset.

"People born in Cohasset, who have been a native all their lives, have a tendency to take things for granted," said Hartshorne. But interest is growing, she added. In terms of the town's population, the society has a substantial amount of members — 327, she said.

"Cohasset is an old town with a history that needs to be preserved," Pottenger said. "We should have a chance to expose new people, namely youngsters, to our town."

New members are encouraged. Dues are $20 per person, $30 for families, $5 for juniors and $50 for a sustaining membership. For further information, call the society at 383-1434.

Voters ante up $10K for next phase of school study

Enrollment is on the upswing

By CHARLENE VANDINI

The school building committee convinced town meeting to support its request for $10,000 to study options to alleviate the town's school space problems at the Osgood School. Article 35 passed on a unanimous voice vote Tuesday night.

Cohasset High School class of 1995 with 65 graduates, the class sizes are increasing. There are now 120 children in the first grade.

"We're going to spend millions of dollars if we don't do anything," Silvia said, explaining that at a minimum the Osgood School requires major maintenance and repairs.

'We are concerned about the ability of the school to support a modern curriculum.'

— Richard Silvia, school facilities committee chairman.

Building committee chairman Richard Silvia itemized the deficiencies in the 68-year-old elementary school, and the possible solutions that the committee will consider.

Not only is the school over-crowded, but it lacks many features that are considered basic to school buildings. Windows are falling out, he said, there is no cafeteria, no gymnasium, poor emergency access, outdated plumbing and wiring, and no sprinkler system in the wood-frame structure.

"We are concerned about the ability of the school to support a modern curriculum," Silvia said.

Major renovations in the early 1970s removed coat rooms and created more space, but that is unsatisfactory, he said.

Silvia reminded town meeting that voters refused to build a new elementary school in the early 1970s, citing declining enrollment at that time. But that trend has reversed itself. Following the

Throughout his address to town meeting, Silvia said the committee is in no way critical of the quality of education received by the Osgood students and complimented the teachers there, but "the school facility is deteriorating right out from under them."

The committee will investigate building a new elementary school; building an addition to the Deer Hill School while retaining the Osgood School with a reduced number of grades; or building a new elementary school, renovating the Deer Hill School to create a middle school.

State aid for renovations or enlargement of the building is not available, Silvia said. Representatives of the state department of education, who visited the school said state will not provide funds for projects involving wood-frame schools, and the four-acre Osgood School property is too small to allow an addition. Under state guidelines, for the number of students enrolled at Osgood, there should be 14 acres of land for parking, driveways, emergency access, and playgrounds separated from the areas used by vehicles.

The committee explained to state officials what it wanted to do with the school, Silvia said. "And they told us what we could do with our school."

He assured town meeting that the building committee is "not promoting anything" and will report all options with proposals for the January town meeting.

Advisory committee member Deborah Cook called the $10,000 "essential."

While he supports the $10,000 request, Doane Street resident Roy Fitzsimmons said he hopes the committee will also consider "space management" as an option to building a new school.

Caroline Carr and Anna Jane Murphy work together in the Deer Hill School's new computer lab.

Watercolors are on display

The New England scenes of noted watercolorist Carol Carney will be exhibited in South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of December.

Her soft watercolor pieces include Boston scenes such as Quincy Market, the swan boats and the duck walk. Also exhibited are interiors and still lifes.

Carney, a Scituate resident, has shown her paintings in area galleries. She is a graduate of Massachusetts College of Art and has taught for several years in the public schools as well as privately.

The Gallery, located at One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, is open the the general public and is free of charge. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon. For further information call 749-7565, ext. 16.

Teen Center is a safe place to hang out

Enthusiastic volunteers display their banner advertising the grand opening of the Teen Center last February. Since then, the Center has had a face lift and offers Cohasset youth a place to go and plenty to do. During this circulation drive, the Cohasset Mariner will donate $3 of every new subscription sold to the Teen Center.

Who says there's nothing to do in Cohasset?

The new Teen Center, now housed in the old Independence Building, has been up and running since last February and offers teenagers in town plenty to do. Kids can stop in to shoot pool, play a game of air hockey, listen to music, or catch a new movie release on video.

The privately-run center is the second teen hang-out to hit the town. The former Teen Depot, which was located across from the community center, couldn't draw a crowd and closed down in 1992.

But that experience didn't deter many local families who pushed for a new center more in tune with teens.

After ambitious fund-raising, strong community support and donations, which helped pay for the renovation and refurbishing of the building which was leased from the town – Cohasset Youth Resources, the private organization that governs the center, began focusing on ways to draw kids into the center said Craig Muir, CYR treasurer.

Hiring young supervisors – people in their early 20's, who are closer in age to teenagers and can serve as role models – was one of the first things, CYR set out to do. Too much chaperoning from parents or a friend's parents can turn teens off, Muir said.

But without a full-time director the Teen Center has lacked focused programming and Muir said that weekend attendance has varied since opening – from a handful of kids to more than 20 teens, depending on what else might be going on in town.

After a slow summer, the new Teen Center re-opened earlier this fall and Cohasset Youth Resources set to work right away looking for a young director to give the center more direction and cohesive programming.

Scituate resident John Getgey fit the bill for CYR. With years of experience in working with youths and as a consultant to the Westwood Recreation Department's Teen Program, Getgey will take the helm at Cohasset's Teen Center this weekend which will be kicked off with a free pizza night from 7 to 10 p.m. Saturday (Nov. 11)

Getgey will take over program development at the center and will be in charge of hiring and scheduling part-time supervisors.

Another objective Muir said is keeping young teens, especially seventh and eighth graders who can be susceptible to peer pressures at the high school, safe and substance free.

"If you can help just one person from going down the wrong path it's been successful," said Muir who stressed that a new director with dedication, vision and a love for kids will be the key to the center's on-going success.

CYR member Joan Kovach envisions new programs and an expansion of old ones including teen dances, group trips to sporting events, and winter ski trips. Some of these programs will be done in collaboration with the Cohasset Recreation Department, she said.

So far operating costs have been kept to a minimum – about $300 per month which includes the $8 per hour paid to part-time supervisors, Muir said. But with a new director on salary, more funding will be needed, he said, noting the sources of donations are out there.

"There are people who really want this thing to work," Muir added.

To give the center and its new director an added boost and help program expansion, the Cohasset Mariner will contribute $3 of every new subscription sold during this circulation drive to the Teen Center.

CHS graduate remembered with Memorial Scholarship Fund

In its seventh year sponsoring a fundraising campaign for historically black colleges and universities, an employee group within Polaroid Corporation recently donated more than $35,000 to Morehouse College in establishment of the Oronde Khary Allie Memorial Scholarship. Allie was a 1993 graduate of Cohasset High School.

The Polaroid Senior Black Managers, which serves as the champion for black concerns and issues within Polaroid, spearheaded a fundraising campaign by company employees that raised $18,079 for Morehouse College. The Polaroid Foundation matched the contribution for a total of $35,261.

"We targeted this year's campaign in honor of Oronde Allie, a talented young man who had become an important member of our community," said Liz Tavares, co-chairperson, Polaroid Senior Black Managers. Allie had interned at Polaroid for two summers in the Information Management division. Nearly one year ago, in his sophomore year at Morehouse College, Allie was robbed and murdered in an off-campus shooting in Atlanta.

ORONDE KHARY ALLIE
Cohasset High '92 graduate

The scholarship in Allie's name will be awarded to a Boston-area resident attending Morehouse College, based on the applicant's financial need.

Oliver Delk, vice president for development at Morehouse College, received the donation on behalf of the college at a check presentation celebration Oct. 17 in Cambridge. A representative from the Boston Chapter of the Morehouse College Alumni Association announced that the group will also make a contribution to the scholarship fund.

The Polaroid Senior Black Managers group also presented Morehouse College with a framed, pencil sketched portrait of Allie which will be hung in the student center of Morehouse College. The portrait was produced by Boston-based artist, Larry Azim.

Nineteen-ninety-five marks the seventh year that the Polaroid employee group has sponsored the historically black colleges and universities campaign. Past university recipients include Xavier, Clark Atlanta, North Carolina A&T, Tuskegee, Fisk and North Carolina Central.

Music Circus awards scholarship

The South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc., the Not-For-Profit group that owns and operates The South Shore Music Circus, has announced the recipient of its second annual scholarship award. The winner of the scholarship is Erin McAllister of Cohasset.

Erin is entering her junior year at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst and is a communications major.

Erin met and exceeded the criteria set forth for the scholarship winner, including: excellent work record, including attendance and punctuality; demonstrated leadership qualities; outstanding degree of effort applied to perform her job; and worked well with co-workers and easily followed direction from supervisors.

South Shore Music Circus general manager Vincent Longo said, "Erin received this award because of her outstanding job performance and the ease in which she handled every task."

The $1,500 scholarship award is remitted directly to the recipient's educational institution, in this case the award will go to UMass/Amherst in Erin's name.

This scholarship is in keeping with the philosophy of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc., who have been active in and attentive to the community for the past 46 years and whose proceeds are donated to other Not-For-Profit organizations that support Education and the Arts throughout the South Shore of Massachusetts and Cape Cod.

Art auction to benefit PSO

An Art Auction, presented by Ross Galleries, Inc. of New York, will be held Friday, Nov. 17, at the Chart House to benefit the Cohasset PSO. Tickets are $25 per person and may be purchased from any PSO executive board member or by calling 383-6911 or 383-6771.

Artwork may be previewed from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., just prior to the auction. All artwork is custom framed and matted. Opening bids are up to 50 percent less than traditional framed gallery prices. A variety of goods and services will also be auctioned.

Music for the evening will be provided by the Grateful Dads. Hors d'oeuvres will be offered, and a cash bar will be available.

Notre Dame open house

Notre Dame Academy, Hingham, will hold an Open House Wednesday, Nov. 15, from 3 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m. at its Main Street location. Notre Dame Academy is a Catholic, college-preparatory high school for young women. All interested girls and their parents are invited to attend.

An opportunity will be provided to meet with present students, faculty and administrators and to take guided tours of the school. Eighth-graders may also register for the Archdiocesan Entrance Exam, which will be administered at the Academy Saturday, Dec. 9.

For further information about the open house or exam registration, call the Admissions Office at 749-5930.

CD-ROM workshops

A series of workshops on CD-ROM technology and its application in the curriculum will be held in the Cohasset Junior/Senior High School library beginning Monday, Nov. 13. The workshops will be conducted by Susan McFadd.

All interested community members are invited to attend. To register for the Nov. 13 workshop, contact CJSHS at 383-6100.

Academy Night is slated

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary will hold an Academy Night Thursday, Nov. 16, at Quincy High School, 52 Coddington St., beginning at 7 p.m. Those who attend will be introduced to the advantages and requirements of attending the Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn. Topics discussed will include entrance requirements, academic curriculum and sports programs.

The Academy is a four-year course of study, leading to a bachelor of science degree, that further trains young men and women to be Coast Guard officers.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary is an organization of civilian volunteers dedicated to assisting the Coast Guard in their many missions, including the Academy Introduction Mission. AIM is a special program for high school juniors that seeks to give selected students a better understanding of life at the Academy by allowing them to spend a week with the incoming class in August.

Music parents are wanted

The Deer Hill Music Parents' Association has extended an invitation to all new fourth-grade band and chorus parents to join the organization, which had more than 75 members last year. For further information call Jane Henderson at 383-6535.

Jingle Bell Walk set for Nov. 24

The South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, which has become a Cohasset tradition, on Friday, Nov. 24, beginning at 1:30 p.m.with the arrival of Santa Claus and his elves by boat in Cohasset Harbor (Border Street. After he distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride on a fire truck. The walk will continue along the sidewalks of Elm and Main Street.

At 2 p.m. the SSCC welcomes residents to share cookies and beverages and join in a holiday sing-a-long with neighbors and friends. Choruses from local schools and churches will participate.

The Holiday Workshop will be open for young shoppers a the Nursery School to purchase small gifts, and Santa will be upstairs in the Center to pose for pictures with children and their parents. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers.

The bells of St. Stephen's Church will play from 2 to 4 p.m., and there will be hayrides around the Common from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Festivities will culminate on Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree.

The raindate is Nov. 25.

Author signing at Buttonwood

Hingham author Marc Brown will sign copies of his newest book, "Arthur's TV Trouble," on Saturday, Nov. 18, from 10 a.m. to noon at Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham. The METCO experience benefits all, families say

47 students in Cohasset program

By ALISON SHYER
Special to the Mariner

Jean and Marie Vilme waited six years for their daughter Jenny, 10, to be admitted to the Cohasset school system as a METCO student. All three agree that it was worth the wait. Jenny, now in the fifth grade at the Osgood School, said that she feels safe "doing things outside" now. Her four-year-old brother has been on the waiting list since he was born.

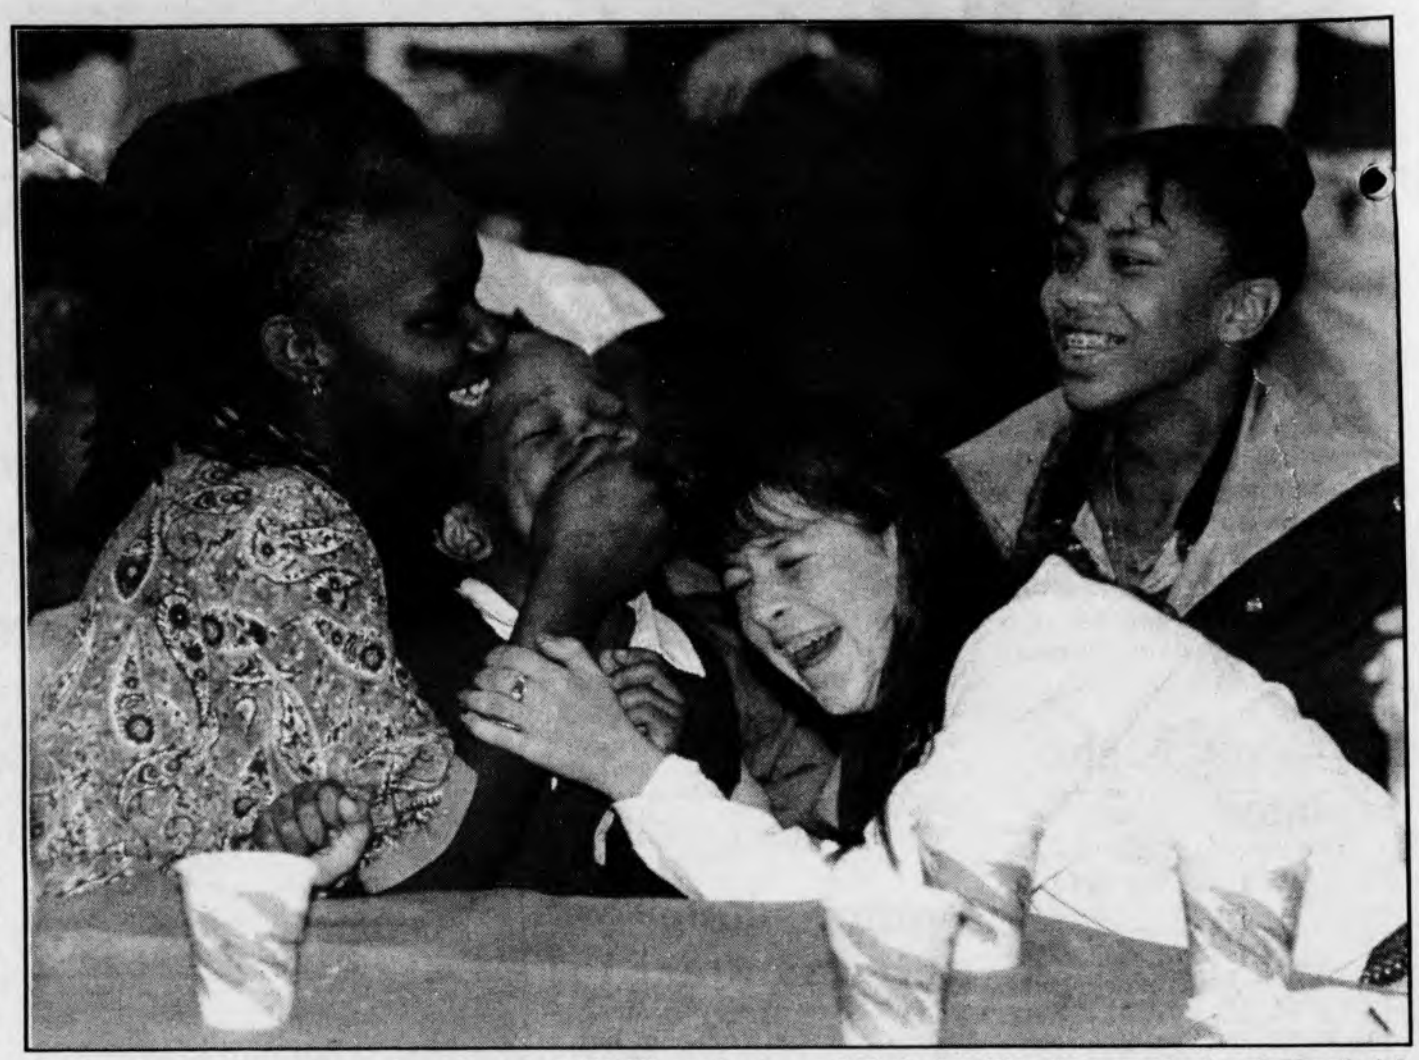
Jenny and her family, who are Haitian and live in Dorchester, were among the approximately 150 people who came to the high school on Sunday afternoon (Oct. 29) to celebrate METCO's 27th year in Cohasset.

METCO (Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunities, Incorporated) is a state-funded, nonprofit organization that places minority children – African-American, Asian and Hispanic – in suburban public schools and is the nation's oldest voluntary desegregation program. Its goal, according to its mission statement, is to "provide the opportunity for an integrated public school education for children of color from racially imbalanced schools in Boston and Springfield."

Founded in 1966 with 220 students in seven towns, METCO currently has 3,300 students in 32 towns and a four-year waiting list with 11,000 names. Children on the waiting list are placed in the first available spot. There is no guarantee that they will be able to have the town of their choice.

Each spring, the principals from each school in Cohasset determine how many openings there will be for the next school year. Yvonne Jones, Cohasset's METCO coordinator, alerts the main office in Roxbury. They then send the appropriate number of applications.

Once alerted of an opening, the parents and prospective student come to look at the school and the town and meet with Jones. It is her decision whether or not to accept a student. She said that she looks at "the whole kid" – including his application, a recent health report and a recent report card – and added that "I am turned down by families more often than they are turned down by me."



During the annual dinner to welcome METCO students and their families last week, Asad Hardwick has everyone in stitches, including his sister Jessica Hardwick, left; Amy Afshar, middle, and Marcina Boone, right.

Staff photo/Buzz Wadsworth

"Some parents don't feel comfortable because there aren't a lot of people who look like them in Cohasset, and that can be a real issue for them," said Jones. "Some just don't like the idea of the long bus ride."

Cohasset currently has 47 METCO students from the first to the 12th grade. Of those 47, seven are Hispanic, and the rest are black (some African-American, some from Jamaica, Haiti and Trinidad). Fourteen of them were accepted his year.

The students arc assigned to a host family in Cohasset, usually one with a child of the same age. Finding families, who are interested in becoming hosts, is the job of the METCO representatives from the Parent Student Organization (PSO), Connie Afshar and Cliff Chase.

The children used to spend a fair amount of time at the host's house, specifically on "stay days" or early-release days. They would spend the afternoon, until the buses came at the end of the day to take them home. But with the passage of the Education Reform Act, students must spend more time in school, so the visits are fewer.

Afshar, whose family hosts two students, including Jenny, said that METCO not only helps the METCO students, but Cohasset's youth as well.

"Without METCO, there would be very few African-American students and not too many Hispanics in Cohasset," she said. "And with the changing racial demographics in the country, it is a great benefit that METCO affords our kids this day to day contact with students of all cultures."

SUMMER 1996 OCCUPANCY

CHS COMMUNITY SERVICE/Ron Ford

On Saturday, Oct. 21, a group of students and teachers from Cohasset High School braved the stormy conditions to participate in the City Year Serv-a-thon. This is a day-long event in which groups go out to perform community service to raise money for City Year, Boston's nationally recognized community service program. Our original plan was to clean up the woods surrounding Walden Pond in Concord, but because of inclement weather our group had to be reassigned to another project.

We ended up joining with another group from Waltham to do some work for a program called the SHARE Loan Fund. This program helps establish affordable group housing for recovering substance abusers and their families. The home we were assigned to was a three-floor house in Dorchester called "The Village." There, six women and their children live together in a clean and sober environment as they try to get their lives back on track.

When we arrived at the house around 9:30 a.m., thee was plenty of work for us to do. One group spent the entire morning raking leaves and cleaning the property around the house. The rest of the group began painting the rooms inside the house. By the day's end, we had cleaned the entire property and finished painting over half the rooms in the house. More importantly, our students had made some new friends with the residents of the group home and felt good about the fact that they really accomplished a great deal during the day-long experience.

I would like to thank all the students who contributed to the project: Tobe Horn, Tammy Maitland, Andrea Mercurio, Paul-Michael Quintin, Kellie Straugn, Tim Cullinan, Bree McKenny, Danielle Kupsc, Jessica Niessink, Kyralea Cogill, Justin McNamara, Jackie Kahn, Meagan O'Sullivan, Danny Mulligan, Liz Myers and Loni Colwill.

Also, thanks to those who gave money to the project (we raised more than $200 for City Year). Others who I would like to mention are Jean Pierce from the school cafeteria for donating food and drinks for our group; Becky O'Rourke and John Hughes of Atlantic Bagel and Coffee Co. for donating bagels for our breakfast; Janet Figuerido for driving the bus and joining in on the work project; Maureen Duffy for helping us organize the project; and last, but certainly not least, Nancy Sullick for being our project coordinator and providing us with this great opportunity.

The entire group of Cohasset High students and teachers take a break after a hard day's work on a three-floor house where six women and their children will live together in a clean and sober environment as they try to get their lives back on track. The renovation project is part of City Year Serv-a-thon during which groups perform community service.

Jessica Niessink, Kellie Straugn, Danielle Kupsc, and Andrea Mercurio help paint a house in Dorchester that will provide affordable group housing for substance abusers and their families.

The METCO experience benefits all, families say

Afshar said that the METCO council has applied for a cultural grant and hopes to paint a mural somewhere in Cohasset as a tribute to multi-culturalism.

Terry Andrews, whose 13-year-old son Kevin has been in METCO and with the same host family since the first grade, said that she enrolled Kevin in the program because her youngest brother went through METCO and she "thought this was the right route to go." Andrews and Donna O'Donnell, Kevin's host mother, agreed that Kevin has forged a bond with the O'Donnells over the years.

"He feels comfortable there, like he's a part of the family," Andrews said "I even called once and he answered the phone."

O'Donnell, who is also a member of the METCO council, agreed that the program benefits the host families as much as the kids from the city. She remembered Kevin once telling her son Liam just how lucky he is to live in the suburbs. The Andrews live in Mattapan.

"This is what they're doing for our kids. It's not a black/white experience, it's more like the urban/suburban experience."

Literature-based curriculum slated for Cohasset

Method helps students learn to love reading

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Special to the Mariner

At last Thursday night's school committee meeting, members had a chance to compare the material they learned to read with and the books available to children today.

"We have much to think about when we see 'See Spot. See Spot Run. Run, Spot, Run!' and call it literature," said Ruth Fennessey, the curriculum coordinator for kindergarten through Grade 6.

Fennessey, who has been with the Cohasset School Department for two years, said that last year a language/arts committee was formed to figure out what needed to happen at (the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools) to move to a "literature-based" curriculum. Her presentation to the school committee was a report on the progress made and a mention of what still needs to be done.

The curriculum in the past centered around basal materials, which are reading materials designed to teach a phonetic skill, and are not considered literature.

"You could hardly call them a story," said Fennessey. 'See Sally. Oh, mother.' That isn't natural language."

The new movement revolves around literature anthologies. Because children identify with and enjoy what they are reading, they are more likely to look for those books outside the classroom.

Schools "always taught students how to read, but not how to love to read," said Fennessey.

A literature-based curriculum also respects choice and the importance of adequate time for children to read. Oftentimes, varied level readers will be given different books to read, but all the books would center around the same theme, such as nature.

Students would then share with the class what they learned from their book. This collaborative learning differs from the individual learning focused on under past curriculums.

Under the literature-based curriculum, Fennessey said, teachers have high expectations for all students.

School committee vice chairwoman Nancy Sandell said that previously there was a "heavy reliance" on workbooks. "There has to be another way."

There is another way under the new curriculum, Fennessey said. The curriculum is now moving away from rote and drill techniques, or workbooks, and moving towards more active learning. Instead of a child answering a group of questions on a story, he or she could write a paragraph about what he or she learned from reading it.

The curriculum approaches phonics in a different way, explained Fennessey. In past years, a student may have underlined all double "e"s on a workbook page; now the student is reading stories, such as "Beep! Beep! Sheep in a Jeep," and pointing out the double "e"s.

The subjects are connected in ways that they weren't before. Vocabulary words may be chosen from the literature and those words will also be the spelling words. The changes are spurred by the tremendous amount of research on the positive benefits of a literature-based learning program, Fennessey said. The Education Reform Act's curriculum frameworks for the language/arts match the literature-based model.

She added that some teachers had taken steps of their own to come into line with current research, before Cohasset schools adopted the curriculum change. In order to bring the curriculum up to par with current research, the language/arts committee, which was made up of about 10 teachers, examined the research and literature and began to develop a curriculum.

The new curriculum was implemented this fall using materials and resources from Houghton Mifflin. Curriculum plans have been written, said Fennessey, but most of the work was done in an "intensive" session over the summer. The teachers haven't had the opportunity to develop the curriculum since then.

Some of the staff at the schools, according to Fennessey, read research articles that prepared them for the change, and others attended graduate classes on the topic of "literature-based" reading. These teachers act as supportive partners who go into classrooms where the teachers have not had as much experience with the new method and work with them.

"Instead of sending the teachers out (to a workshop)," said Fennessey, "they see the same excellence right here in Cohasset."

According to Fennessey, the area that needs to be focused on now is assessment. There are self-assessment forms for students that ask where they are and where they would like to be, but teachers have been creating different assessment forms which have been standardized.

School committee members said they were impressed with the work that Fennessey and others had done to quickly implement the literature-based program.

In other business, the committee restated the three options available to meet the demand of an increasing elementary school population and solve the problems of an aging building.

They are:

- Retain the Osgood School and renovate it to meet standard requirements, which would result in the conversion of classrooms to alternate uses (a cafeteria, for example). Because of this conversion, the Osgood would not be able to house as many students, so additional classrooms would be built at Deer Hill.
- Build a new facility for pre-kindergarten to third grade. Grades 4, 5 and 6 would remain at Deer Hill. There could be some shared space between the two schools, such as the library media center. This sharing would increase space at the Deer Hill School, where an additional one or two classrooms could be added.
- Build a new facility for pre-kindergarten to fourth. Grades 5, 6 and 7 would be at Deer Hill, and Grades 8 through 12 would be housed at the high school.

The committee also discussed a possible "as is" option. At the base minimum, Osgood would need a new heating system, new windows and other repairs. Richard Silvia, chairman of the building facilities committee, said that the cost of an "as is" project would not be a non-trivial number.

Lightkeepers to hold open house

The Cohasset Lightkeepers will open Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers House on Government Island for a Christmas Open House, Sunday, Dec. 10, from 2 to 6 p.m. Everyone is welcome to enjoy hot cider, coffee, hot cocoa and homemade holiday treats. Holiday music and caroling will fill the hall. Contributions to the Council on Aging Medical Access Program will be accepted at the door.

Bancroft Hall is the first floor of the old lightkeeper's residence, which was renovated through the efforts of community volunteers and donors. It serves as a large and splendid function hall, where many meetings, parties, and dinners have been held during the past year. The hall is available on a rental basis for members of the Cohasset community.

Indians end Cohasset run

Skippers fall to top-seed Hanover, 5-0

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

To the average spectator, Hanover High's boys soccer team played tremendously in Monday night's lopsided 5-0 win over Cohasset in the Division 3 South Sectional quarterfinals.

But Jim Sylvia is not your average spectator. He's the head coach of the three-time South Shore League champion and No. 1 tourney seed (15-0-1). Sylvia knows his team well enough to know when they've played a good game and a great game.

To Sylvia, Monday night ranked in the good category.

"I think we played the spread," said Sylvia. "We controlled the play for the most part, but we did let up and you can't do that in the tournament. You need to play a full 80 minutes."

Cohasset head coach Keith Clark said his team was much more aggressive in its play during the second half than in the first, where the Indians built a solid 3-0 lead.

Strong in dribbling and passing, Cohasset had its problems this year with finding the back of the nets with its shots. The Skippers could work the the ball into scoring range, but weren't able to carry through and put the ball between the posts. And against a Hanover, it's absolutely to put more

Ross puts Lady booters into semis

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There were several times this fall where games could have gone either way for the Holbrook High girls soccer team. A bounce here. A more accurate shot there. That often was the case between winning and losing for the Bulldogs.

That familiar scenario rose its head again in Monday afternoon's Division 3 South Sectional quarterfinal contest at Cohasset. The Bulldogs had their opportunities but the ball was bouncing in the Skippers' favor as Cohasset held on for a 1-0 victory.

Cohasset coach Maureen O'Day-Clark said there were instances where the game could have gone either way and credited the Holbrook squad for its aggressive play. "It was tough," she said. "We got lucky and got a break."

That lucky break came at the 24:21 mark of the first half when Cohasset's Amber Hopeman fed Katie Ross with a long pass she sprinted to catch up with. Bulldog netminder Kelly Fitzpatrick moved out of the net to cut down Ross' angle but she managed to put a shot over Fitzpatrick and under the crossbar for the 1-0 lead.

Prior to the game, Holbrook coach Gordon Dillar said the key to beating Cohasset was to play a solid game and minimize the mistakes.

"If we go out and play our own game we should do well," he said. "I don't know much about them. You can't do much more than play your own game. If we can take the shots when they're there instead of looking for that perfect shot, we should do well.

"As soon as the opportunity appears you take it. The girls have adapted well to that this year."

The Bulldogs and Skippers shared one common opponent during the season in Scituate High. Holbrook lost two close contests while Cohasset tied the Sailors on both occasions. And in the Bulldogs second game, the 3-0 score was more deceiving than it sounded.

Holbrook had gotten off to a strong start, passing well and controlling the flow of the game for the opening 10 minutes. Once Cohasset settled down, the momentum of play shifted in the Joe wishes Jim O'Sullivan well and comments on the wacky world of tourney coverage.

First and foremost, here's to a quick recovery to Cohasset football and basketball reporter Jim O'Sullivan who is recovering from surgery. Jim has been a godsend here in the sports department with his thorough coverage of both squads. Coaches Bob Knurek, Ron Ford and the players from both teams have nothing but good words to say about Jim. And with all the activities he's involved in at Cohasset High, Jim's excellent work is all the more impressive. Get better soon Jim! Basketball season is just around the corner.

With Tuesday's tournament washouts, I'm almost afraid to look at today's paper and see where and when the games will be made up. Several of my towns are still battling it out in the postseason. The Cohasset, Rockland, Holbrook and Hanover girls have all advanced to the semifinals while the Hanover boys are still very much alive.

My Monday was a logistical nightmare with three games scheduled between 2:15 and 6 p.m. Because of an editorial meeting, I didn't get to the Cohasset/Holbrook girls game until halftime. After talking to Holbrook coach Gordon Dillar and the Skippers' Maureen O'Day-Clark, it was off to Hanover for the Hanover/Marian girls game. This time I caught the last 10 minutes of the first half and the rest of the contest.

The Hanover/Cohasset boys were next. The Indians built a 3-0 lead by halftime, but I had to take off after that to make nearly a dozen calls to various other coaches.

One things for sure, being at the game beats getting the results over the phone anytime.

Riley's defense not enough to stop Townies

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset football coach Bob Knurek got exactly what he expected in the Skippers' 20-12 loss to Charlestown.

No, the first year head coach didn't figure Cohasset (2-6) would come out on the short end of the final score, but he had a feeling it would be a close contest against the 5-2-1 Townies.

"We expected an even game," Knurek said. "They have a good team and we play well against them."

Cohasset has played well in several games this season, though its record and the final scores may not indicate that. Knurek is pleased with the progress the Skippers have made with every game played.

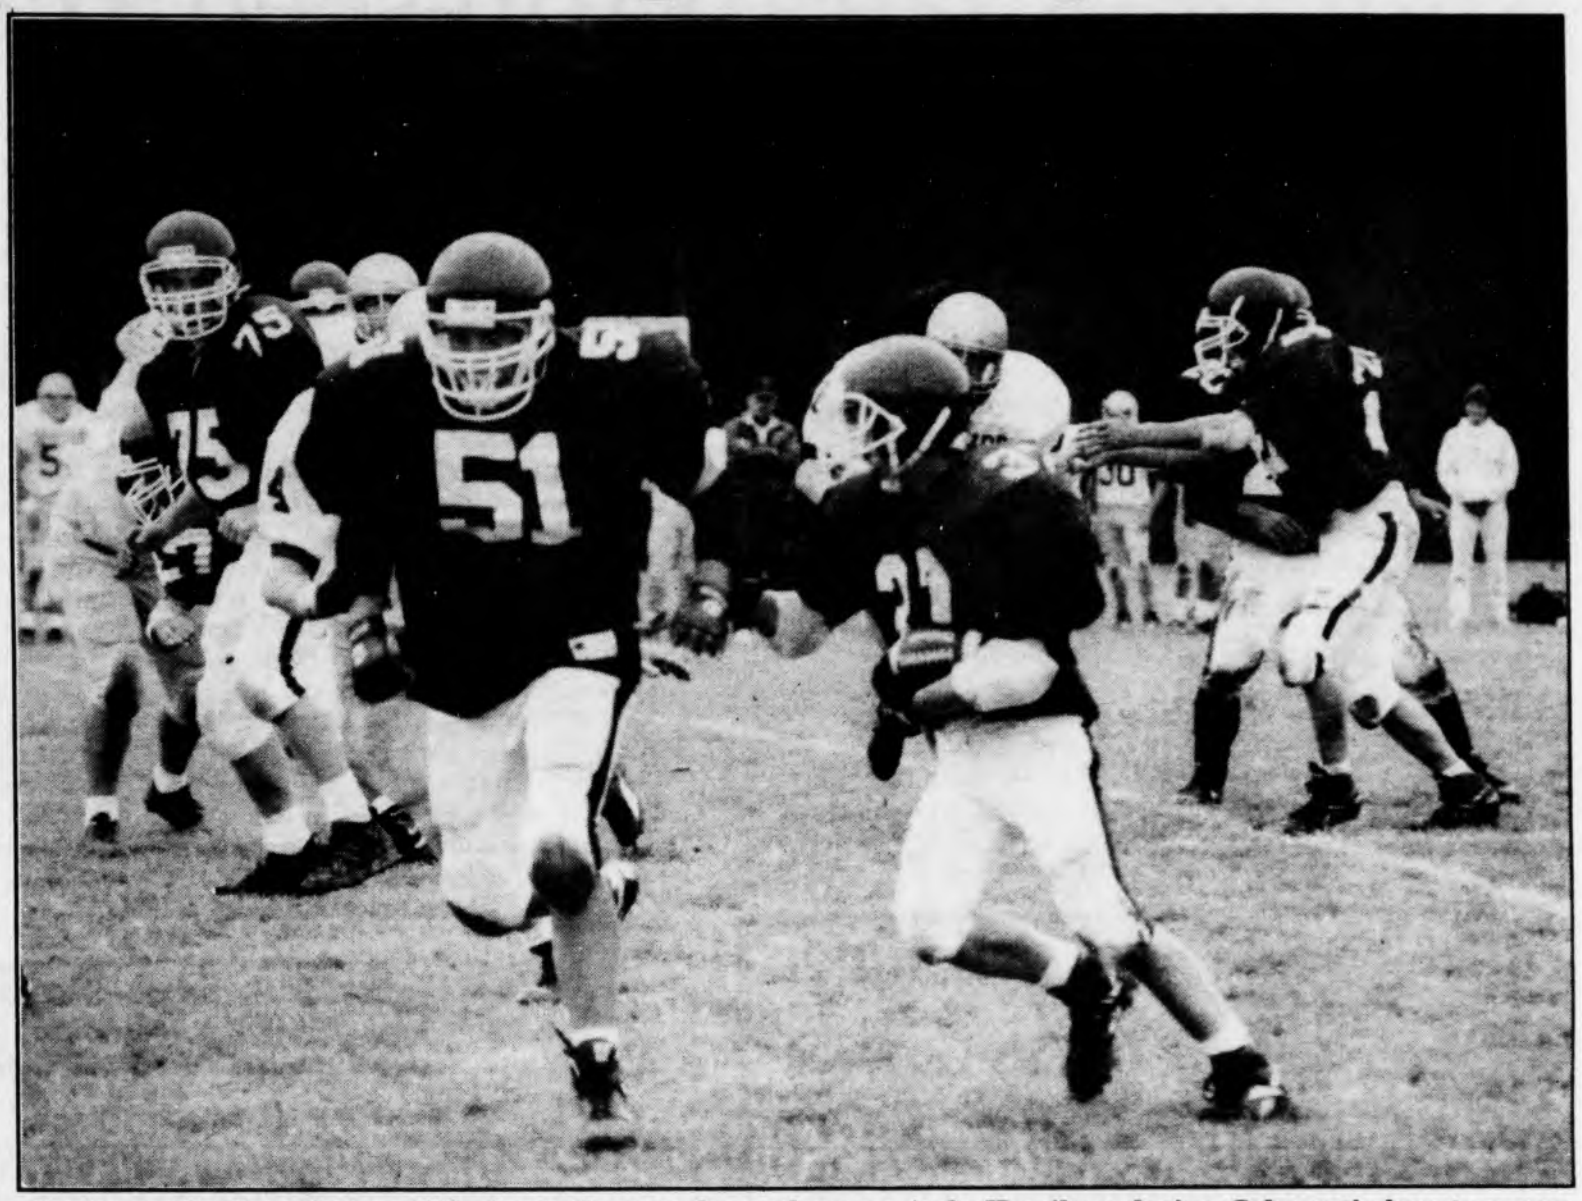
"I'm really pleased with how the kids have played," he said. "They work hard and keep getting better and better."

Against Charlestown, it looked as though the Skippers were finally going to pull out that elusive third win of the fall.

Cohasset took a 6-0 lead into the half, the only score coming on a 15-yard touchdown reception from Pat Hurley to Andy Hamilton. Charlestown scored in the third period but the Skippers answered with a six-yard TD run by Ben Keefe. Charlestown was able to stop Keefe from getting into the end zones on both his conversion tries and the score remained 12-6, heading into the fourth quarter.

Defensively, it was Brian Riley who led the Skippers in holding back Charlestown's offense. Riley had a huge game, turning in eight tackles, four of which were solo.

Riley, though, couldn't do it all by himself and Charlestown scored twice in the fourth. The squad shut down the Skippers' offense to preserve its eight-point victory.



Senior tackle Greg Stevens (51) clears the way for sophomore Andy Hamilton during Cohasset's loss to a powerful Hanover High squad. The Skippers played a tough game against Charlestown last week, but wound up with a 20-12 loss.

Special to the Mariner/Carol Riley

With the Charlestown game behind them, the Skippers are looking forward to Saturday afternoon's (1:30 p.m.) game against Dover-Sherborn. Under favorable conditions, Knurek says D-S is a passing club which puts the ball in the air about "70 percent of the time." But a wet, soggy field could change the whole tone of the game.

"Given their offense," Knurek said, "the weather could be a factor this week."

And how has Knurek enjoyed his first year as head coach? "You can't ask for any better from the kids," he said. "We've had good turnouts even though we haven't had a winning record."

He also gave credit to the "outstanding" work assistant coach Bob Silva has done in advising Knurek as to the style of play of several teams.

"He really lets me know what to expect from league teams," he said.

Skippers' favor.

The Bulldogs were the more aggressive of the two squads in the early minutes of the second half, but the Skippers' Tammy Maitland, Emily Henderson and Hannah Beggan marked Holbrook's players well.

Cohasset caught two huge breaks when Holbrook's premier player, Yerkes, golden broke past the defense only to have her shot go over the net. Later in the half she walked in on netminder Catie Campbell but wasn't able to get all of her leg behind the shot, allowing Campbell to make the easily save.

The Skippers put on their biggest offensive surge of the contest in the final 10 minutes, but just missed splitting posts. Ross nearly netted her second goal of the game with five minutes left only to have the ball miss the inside of the right post by no more than three feet.

A rush down the right side by Yerkes was stopped by Beggan as time ran out, putting Cohasset into Wednesday's semifinal game against Dover-Sherborn, beginning at Oliver Ames High in Easton at 4 p.m.

O'Day-Clark said the win wasn't one of Cohasset's best and the team will have to move up a notch if it expects to do well in the remainder of the tourney.

"We definitely didn't play our game," she said. "The tempo will definitely have to be lifted. Holbrook was a good reality check. It'll come down to who wants it more."

Ski lessons offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill ski lesson registrations Thursday, Nov. 16, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 3 and 4 p.m., and again in the evening from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, ages seven and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 4. The bus will leave each week from the Town Hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five-week program is $100 and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five-week rental package is $45 per person. A rental fee can be included in the check for the program fee. This is the 20th year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and over the years hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn to ski, or to improve their technique.

Remember: Registration date is Thursday, Nov. 16.

than a couple of goals on the board.

"As usual we were a good ball-possession team," Clark said. "But unfortunately we didn't finish a lot of our chances around the goal."

For Cohasset, it was a season full of work just to quality for the tourney. After starting the season with a 3-4-1 record, the Skippers rebounded to a fine 6-2 record in the second half.

"If we came out at the start like we did in the second, I don't think the score would have been so lopsided," Clark said

"Players decided they want to step up and make a change," Clark said. "The first time around there are more surprises. We progressed as a team and it showed in our record," Clark said.

But a three-goal deficit was too much for the Skippers to overcome in one half against a team of Hanover's calibre. For all intensive purposes, this one was over after 40.

Hanover kept the ball in Cohasset's end for the first 13 minutes of the half and pelted goalkeeper Chris McKenna with a barrage of shots. If not for McKenna's play in net, the score could have been higher. He robbed Charlie Bean with a diving save on a low, hard shot. McKenna also turned away shots by Peter Moores, Jon Peacock and Mike Eisenhut before the Indians landed their first tally.

Ely Kahn broke up a Hanover scoring opportunity by sliding and knocking the ball away from Peacock.

Hanover scored goal number one on as good a play you'll see in any soccer game.

Peacock, charging down the left side of the field, drilled a centering pass in front of McKenna. Timing the pass perfectly, Eisenhut dove forward and headed the ball into the net to give the Indians a 1-0 lead at 23:39.

Fans were still whispering about Eisenhut's goal when 1:19 later Moores found the back of the net to make it 2-0. Eisenhut and Bean were credited with assists. Then it was Peacock's turn to add to the lead when his shot from 35-yards out hit the bottom of the crossbar and bounced behind McKenna for the tally and a 3-0 Hanover advantage.

Cohasset had its own chances as well. Kevin McKenna, who collected a hat trick in the Skippers' first-round win over Tri-County, drilled a shot from 20 yards out but the shot was just over the cross bar. The Skippers were denied again when John Lacks' shot was high after taking a perfect pass from Leigh Atherton.

Knowing the team needed more of an offensive punch, Clark went with two defenders and put an extra pair of forwards in. Hanover was able to use the move to its advantage. Justin Haight scored both the Indians' tallies of the half to round out Hanover's scoring for the evening.

"Obviously they were the favorites," Clark said of the top-seeded Indian squad. "We were under siege with the ball in our end, but we did play hard the whole game."

The Skippers were trying to stay in the game as long as possible. In the teams' second meeting during the regular season, there was no score at the half. But in the second half the Indians drilled home four goals to Cohasset's one.

Cohasset advanced to the quarterfinals with its lopsided 5-1 win over Tri-County on Sunday. The Skippers went right at the Mayflower League team with Kevin McKenna drilling his first of three goals past the netminder in the opening minute of the game.

Clark had talked to other coaches and scouted Tri-County. Based on what he heard, he was confident the Skippers should have prevailed.

"We didn't expect it to be a real big contest," Clark said. "But we've had a habit in the past to play down to another team's level. We didn't want to be overconfident.

"Any time you're in a tournament game, the longer the other team stays close, the more pressure there is."

McKenna scored two more times while Ken Leahy netted a goal and added a pair of assists. Ely Kahn played a strong game at the sweeper position and Eric Henry was the pivotal player at midfield controlling the play.

With a 3-0 lead at the half, Clark was able to get all three of his netminders into the game. Chris McKenna, Justin Buckley and Kevin DeVito all saw action between the posts ure out how to decide a game tied after regulation?

As it stands now in high school state tourney play, if two teams are tied after 80 minutes of regulation, they play two ten minutes periods of overtime. (No limit to the number of goals.) If no one has an advantage after the two ten's, then the teams play two five-minute sudden death periods (first goal wins.)

If the game is not settled after the two ten's and the two five's, the two teams go to a shootout. In the shootout, each team selects three players who alternate taking breakaways on the opposing goalies with the ball set at the 35-yard line. The team with the scoring edge after three rounds, wins the shootout and the game.

However, if there is no winner after three rounds, the teams keep alternating players until someone finally wins the shootout.

You got all that? If you do, you're a lot brighter than I am.

Anyway, a few years ago, high school teams just kept playing overtime periods until someone finally scored. But as the games kept going on and on (the sun sets early in the fall, in case you forgot) someone thought there had to be a better way.

So the powers-that-be instituted penalty kicks after the four overtime periods were played (remember the two ten's and the two five's.)

Penalty kicks are taken from point blank range on the goalie (ten yards away) and heavily favor the shooter. Just about the only time a player didn't score is if he or she totally blew it and sailed the ball wide or high.

But after a few dull penalty kick finishes, it was decided to go to the shootout instead. And this has been the format for a few years now.

But many soccer fans, coaches and a sportswriter or two still don't like the way things are settled.

One high school soccer coach on the South Shore put it it this way in regards to shootouts.

"No one likes them, unless they win, of course" the coach said. "But the main thing is you have to decide the game somehow and if you don't have a winner after 110 minutes of play, you have to do something. A shootout is about the best thing out there, short of letting them play until there's a winner. But if you let them keep playing and the defense is really on, they'll be playing all night. Then if you make it to the next round, your tank is totally empty and you get bumped out."

Who knows what can be done to truly settle things?

Some say keep playing, no matter what, and re-schedule the next round if need be.

Others say eliminate players from each side during the overtime period. By the fourth OT, there will be about a two players on each side.

Personally, I think they should play with an extra ball during overtime. Imagine all the goals that would be scored with two balls flying around at the same time.

Another fun suggestion I've heard is to get rid of off-sides during OT. Sure, it would be an ugly sight with lots of goal-hanging, but someone would score pretty quickly.

However, the final word on shootouts comes from Marshfield High senior and soccer star Tyla Brennan.

As a sophomore, Brennan and the Lady Rams were bounced from the state tourney by Newton North in a shootout. Brennan missed her one shot during the shootout and carried the pain for a long time.

But as a junior Brennan and the Lady Rams got revenge as they beat Newton North in a shootout and went on to win the Division I state crown. In the shootout Brennan hit the clinching goal for Marshfield.

"There's so much pressure in a shootout," she said. "If I missed that shot as a junior, I would have been in therapy. But, I think it's the best way there is. I don't know if there is a better way. Stay with the shootout."

Sure thing Tyla. You know best.

Local residents have back to roots experience

Group visits 12th century Italian village

By LAURA RICKETSON DOHERTY
Special to the Mariner

When Jim Lagrotteria promised a special trip to his youngest daughter, Barbara, if she did well in college, he had no idea what would result.

"It all just snowballed," he recalls. And when, upon Barbara's successful completion of her studies, she, her dad and another sister embarked on their trip, they were accompanied by 42 other people.

For Lagrotteria and several others, it was to be a kind of "back to their roots experience."

A first generation Italian born in Cohasset, this was his fifth trip to his parents' hometown, Amaroni, in southern Italy.

"If you think of Italy as a boot, this 12th century village is located at the ball on the Ionian Sea," he explains.

The group was a mix of first-generation Italians and friends. Many of its members were from Cohasset and ranged in age from 23 to 83. Not at all dismayed by this 60 year age difference or by the numbers involved, Lagrotteria carefully planned each of the 12-day itinerary. Because accommodations were arranged at 4 or 5 star small, intimate Italian-run hotels, it was necessary to limit the size of the group.

"I had to turn away 23 others," Lagrotteria recalls.

After landing in Rome, Lagrotteria and his group traveled by air-conditioned bus to Florence. All expenses had been prepaid so that there was no need to worry about currency conversion.

"The only thing that wasn't preplanned was shopping money," he says.

The days were carefully scheduled with mornings spent sightseeing and afternoons for leisure. When they were on the road, they never traveled more than six hours a day with enough stops for everyone's comfort.

Because they traveled in September at the end of the tourist season, hotel managers were extremely receptive.

"They were very gracious," he explains. "In Coponello, they brought a piano out on the pool deck for us. And, the owner took us out on his boat so that we could see Italy from the ocean."

The weather was perfect for the whole trip — 85 degrees every day and no mosquitoes.

"They're all here," he laughed.

The highpoint of their trip was their visit to Amaroni. In addition to being an incredibly moving experience for everyone, it also resulted in several delightful surprises.

Before leaving the United States, Lagrotteria had forwarded a list of names of those travelers who would be arriving with him to the mayor in the hope of locating relatives. Not only was this attempt successful but also it resulted in Lagrotteria's discovery that the new mayor of Amaroni was his cousin.

Nothing prepared them for the reception they received as their bus drove into the town. More than 2,600 people were standing waiting for them — flags waving and bands playing.

As they called out the names of their relatives, everyone was crying. Each guest was introduced from the church steps by Father Richard, formerly of Glastonbury Abbey, now assigned to Rome, who joined them for this occasion.

It was a very emotional experience as relatives found one another. Some of the group were children of immigrants who had never returned. Their relatives had thought they were gone forever.

That day, Albert Meallo of Cohasset discovered relatives he didn't know existed. As so often happens, there was confusion with his name until it was determined that originally it was Yameallo. Lagrotteria describes the frustration and disappointment of many Italian families who have spent years trying to locate relatives who immigrated.

"It's as though they disappeared off the face of the earth. They want to know what happened to them," he explains.

Most of the immigration, he continues, was for political rather than economic reasons.

"They didn't like what Mussolini was doing and wanted to avoid Fascism," he adds.

Like so many others, his father came first and then returned for his mother. Why they chose to settle in Cohasset is a mystery to him.

Paul Pratt Library Corner

From left, at a recent reception Susan Kilmartin, Suzan Redgate and Joan Brancale chat about the recent show "Cape Cod Sketches" at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Kilmartin and Brancale are artists from Hingham, and Redgate, the president of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library, arranged the show of work primarily painted this summer at Cape Cod and other South Shore locations.

Computers arrive at library

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have announced the arrival of a new computer workstation on the first floor, which includes a computer, CD-ROM changer and a printer, as well as a 15-inch flat-screen, non-glare color monitor.

CD-ROMS can hold as much as 300,000 printed pages or a large 20-volume encyclopedia and can store and play back sound, pictures and videos. Although accompanied by a printer, the computer is available for CD-Rom services only, and word processing will not be available for public use.

The workstation will be loaded at all times with seven CD-ROM reference products for use by library patrons, and additional products will be loaded by staff members upon request.

The following CD-ROMS are available:

McGraw-Hill Multimedia Encyclopedia of Science & Technology; The Way Things Work; The Ultimate Human Body; Microsoft Encarta; Grolier Multimedia Encyclopedia; Smithsonian's America; Global Explorer; Garden Encyclopedia; U.S. Atlas and World Atlas and Ancient Lands (Egypt, Greece and Rome).

Thanks is given to Dick Hayes at the library for his help with the installation of the new computer equipment.

The Friends of the Cohasset Library have also designed new bookmarks, and they are available to all patrons.

Museum passes are available

Friends of the Cohasset Library have made available passes to the Museum of Fine Arts, the Boston Children's Museum, the Museum of Science and the New England Aquarium. Lucille McLoughlin has donated passes to Plimoth Plantation. To reserve passes, contact the library.

Amaroni's children singing in welcome to the visitors, many of whom were from Cohasset, and who ranged in age from 23 to 83.

Group visits Italian village

planned for their visit, the children of the town – half in the red, white and green colors of the Italian flag and half in red, white and blue – assembled to sing "We Are the World," in the English they had so carefully learned.

Visitors were assigned to families who invited them to dinner.

"They fed us and fed us," Lagrotteria recalls.

A stage was set up in the town square for the performances of local dances which included the ritual donkey dance dating back to the ninth century.

There were fireworks. They even opened a castle which had been closed for 36 years. Each guest was presented with a ceramic commemorative plate, a history of the town, a book of poems, a certificate of honorary citizenship and a picture of Saint Barbara, patron saint of their village.

Although there have been some changes over the years since Lagrotteria's first visit, Amaroni remains a farming community with a spirit of openness and cooperation. At harvest time, everyone helps each other and shares in the use of the one oil press in the town.

There are no nursing homes. One child is assigned to take care of aging relations and the rest of the family support this. Males are given greater opportunity, with females encouraged to marry or help on the farm rather than go on to further education.

After a tour of Sicily and the Greek ruins, and a stay in Rome, they returned home. Lagrotteria is already thinking about his next trip. Someday, he says, he would like to take his whole family which includes 11 children and four grandchildren.

It's Happening

'Coffee hour' for tots

St. Anthony's Parish will host a Moms, Pops and Tots "Coffee Hour" on Fridays, from 10:30 to noon, in the Desmond Room.

Moms and Dads, along with their young children, ages newborn to kindergarten, are invited to take a break from the daily routine to meet and socialize with other parishioners and friends. Toys and light refreshments will be available. For further information call Ginny at 383-0282.

Grateful Dads perform at fundraiser

The Grateful Dads will be featured at a live art auction Friday, Nov. 17, at 7:30 p.m. at the Chart House. The auction is sponsored by Ross Galleries of New York. In addition to art, Bruins tickets, overnight get-away packages, sports items and golf and tennis packages will also be featured. Proceeds will benefit Cohasset schools.

For tickets or other information, call Tomi (383-6771) or Ellen (383-6911).

Concert will benefit Father Bill's

First Parish will hold its 17th annual Christmas Concert Saturday, Dec. 9, at 4:30 p.m. to benefit Father Bill's Place in Quincy, which is a transitional and emergency shelter for homeless men and women. The concert will feature the Unicorn Singers, under the direction of Margo Euler.

Father Bill will speak to the congregation Sunday, Nov. 12, at the church's 10:30 a.m. service in the meeting house.

Patrons are welcome, and a $40 contribution includes two tickets sent to the donor by return mail. Tickets are $5 each and will go on sale at the church office Dec. 1. The church office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. to answer questions and to accept patron sign-ups. For further information call 383-1100.

Activities for kids at SSCC

Consignment shop has expanded

The new, enlarged Cohasset Consignment Shop, managed by the Cohasset Social Service League, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza, is offering an eclectic array of clothing, including sweaters, a mink coat, a black tuxedo, designer dresses and handmade wool ski sweaters from Tibet, as well as toys, antique gold-rim glasses, a wooden rocking horse, a signed, original framed pen and ink drawing of Nantucket Harbor, holiday wicker baskets and glass and silver bowls.

The shop is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Proceeds benefit the town's many counseling services, Meals on Wheels, Keep Well, services for seniors and resource information and referral assistance. The League serves residents of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Norwell and Scituate.

Andy Merrill, manager of the shop, welcomes volunteers and invites interested individuals to call 383-0687. For assistance from the League, call 383-0771.

Dancing, Etc. at SSAC

Dancing, Etc. (Martin Street Collage) is a small dance company that centers around evolving ideas, with an interest in silence and meditation and letting things happen, led by director and founder, Kay Brown, a well-known Cambridge painter.

A live performance with multi-media dance improvisations will be presented by Dancing, Etc. Friday, Nov. 10, at 7:30 p.m. at the South Shore Arts Center. The group includes Mass. Cultural Council artist grant winner, choreographer/dancer Arawana Hayashi, 1993 cultural ambassador and New England Conservatory faculty member, percussionist Jon Hazilla, and award-winning videographer Bruce Petchek.

The audience is encouraged to join the flow and draw during the performance, or create paintings of the mind. With no musical score or planned choreography, responses are original, spontaneous and exciting. The group, which began more than a decade ago, travels throughout New England. For information or to arrange a performance, write to Dancing, Etc. at 16 Avon St., Cambridge, MA 02138.

Harpsichord concert at St. Stephen's

St. Stephen's Church will present Mark Kroll in a harpsichord recital Sunday, Nov. 12, at 3 p.m. as part of its recital series.

Kroll has been acclaimed as one of the finest harpsichordists of his generation, performing throughout North and South American and Europe. He has made numerous recordings of music by Bach, Handel, Couperin, Royer, Balbastre, de Falla, Schubert and Scarlatti. He has served as harpsichordist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1979.

Kroll recently returned from a tour in Germany which included recitals in the "Bach cities" of Leipzig and Ohrdruf. His publications include chapters on 18th-century French music and 17th-century keyboard music for Schirmers as well as for the general reader.

Kroll has served as Visiting Professor in Germany, Italy, Croatia and Yugoslavia and is professor and Chairman of the Department of Historical Performance at Boston University, where he directs the Early Music Series.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset and is handicapped accessible. For further information, call 383-1083.

Women helping women

The South Shore Community Center will host Women's Counsel, a network of women helping women, Thursday, Nov. 16, at noon at the Lightkeepers House, Government Island, Cohasset. Guest speaker at the luncheon will be well-known humorist Loretta LaRoche, who for almost 20 years has conveyed to audiences the humor and poignancy of everyday challenges, while presenting useful strategies to deal with them.

"Just as naturally as exchanging recipes, we can exchange our experience, ideas and support," said Louise Alibrandi, co-director of the Counsel, which is a resource and a web of support for women of all ages and from all roles in life. The Counsel offers continual life strategies and offers women a network where they can exchange advice and referrals on a wide range of issues such as health, parenting, career searches and changes, dealing with divorce, assisting aging parents and spiritual and creative growth.

The SSCC is a non-profit organization which houses a nursery school, gymnastic program, business center, computer learning lab and the Council on Aging in addition to the Women's Counsel. For further information, call Nina Belsan at 383-0088 or 545-5462.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

I have received many calls asking that the two veteran's memorial planters be showcased in The Grand Tour.

At left, the large circular stone planter at the intersection of Beach and Atlantic Avenue, "The Perry Higginson Johnson Square," is planted with variegated ornamental grasses, creamy white begonias and a lovely trailing purl, daisy-like flower.

At right, the planter at the intersection of Jerusalem Road and North Main Street "The Herman E. Daley Square" is planted with salmon-colored impatiens, white trailing Browallia and masses of Vinca Ivy. These beautiful plantings give many Cohasset residents much enjoyment and inspiration. Try as I might, I was unable to discover the parties responsible for these beautiful additions to our town. I would much appreciate hearing from the floral artists who have given us all such beauty throughout the years.

The Grand Tour, only in the
Cohasset Mariner.

Community Center to host Business Roundtables '90

Meeting slated for 7 p.m., Nov. 9

The South Shore Community Center will be the site for Business Roundtables '90, an educational resource being offered by the Business Center at the South Shore Community Center on Nov. 9 at 7 p.m. Business Roundtables supports small businesses, entrepreneurs and business professionals living and/or working on the South Shore. The goal is to blend new businesses with mature established companies with good track records for counsel and advice.

The monthly meetings will match "mentor" with "protégé" companies, which are asked to submit a business or marketing plan whenever possible for review by the Roundtable selection committee. Mentor companies are asked to bring their expertise. A trained facilitator will lead the creative brainstorming sessions and guide participants through the agenda. This method is patterned after the "Success Teams" developed by well known author, Barbara Sher.

"The purpose of the roundtables, said Nina Belsan, executive director of the Center, "is to help new businesses succeed and mature businesses to prosper."

'The purpose of the roundtables is to help new businesses succeed and mature businesses to prosper.'

— Nina Belsan, executive director of the Center.

The fee is $5 for members and $8 for non-members. For further information call Nina Belsan at 383-0088 or 545-5462.

Murray to address AAUW

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) of the 3rd Plymouth District will meet with local AAUW women Tuesday, Nov. 14, at Plymouth River School, High Street, Hingham. The meeting will be held in the school's LMC.

Refreshments at 7:45 p.m. will be followed by Rep. Murray's presentation. After a brief discussion of issues of particular importance to women on the South Shore, Rep. Murray will participate in a roundtable discussion. Murray is a a 10-term state representative to Cohasset, Hull and Hingham and a member of the local affairs legislative sub-committee.

AAUW's has a continuing interest in public policy issues and in recognizing women on the South Shore who are leaders in the community, in service and in politics.

For reservations call 749-5493. For membership information call 749-5926.

Board of Realtors has new name

The Quincy & South Shore Board of realtors has changed its name to the South Shore Association of Realtors, a move board members say reflects the organization's growth and expanded geographic area.

According to president James Stamos, the new name is "a reflection of where our membership comes from and of the changes occurring within our board and the real estate industry in general."

The South Shore board's membership increased by 70 percent following last year's statewide adoption of "board of choice," which allowed realtors to choose which of the state's 21 realtor boards they wished to join. Approximately 1,000 sales associates also participate in the board's Multiple Listing Service, which now provides realtors with computerized access to home listings in more than 200 Massachusetts cities and towns.

Hallmark 100 joins Realty Guild

Hallmark 100 Properties, with offices in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate was recently elected into the Realty Guild, Inc. an association of independent realtor offices in Massachusetts. The Realty Guild is a network of experienced independent realtor offices in eastern Massachusetts.

These offices have created their own network to provide enhanced professional services to the buying and selling public and their corporate clients. The Guild is comprised of 47 offices, 575 associates and a 1994 current member combined sales volume of more than $1 billion. The Realty Guild will soon become the largest real estate organization in the Commonwealth.

Police Briefs

9-1-1 calls up in October

In his monthly status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan said that October was an "unusually busy month" for the police department.

There were a total of 25 arrests: nine for outstanding warrants, six for protective custody, two for assault and battery, two for possession of a Class D substance; two for larceny, and one each for receiving stolen property, operating under the influence of alcohol, minor in possession of alcohol, and motor vehicle violations, Noonan said.

"There were two breaking and enterings reported during the month, one was a residence and one a business," he said.

Police training underway

In-service training is now underway for Cohasset police officers, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

"Each officer attends one week of intensive training at the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Center in Plymouth," he said. "Some of the subjects to be covered this year are domestic violence, legal update, verbal Judo, juvenile issues, first responder and CPR."

Noonan said he attended a fall training conference in Leominster, Mass. sponsored by the Mass. Chiefs Association.

"There were many different workshops offered during the conference," Noonan said. "Some of the more interesting were on the following topics: injured on duty, Massachusetts accreditation of police departments, civilian dispatchers, and impact bargaining."

Teen drinking condoned

Activist charges parents in denial

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset's drug and alcohol committee faces an uphill battle in a town where heavy drinking is tolerated and denial about teenage drug use is commonplace, an anti-drug activist told selectmen Monday night.

"This town has a very serious problem drinking and drugging. The biggest obstacle is denial," Craig Muir, chairman of the drug and alcohol committee said during a 20-minute discussion.

He stated that some Cohasset students drink to the point of stupification, citing recent incidents in which a student was taken into protective custody because he could not walk and another was rushed to the hospital with alcohol poisoning.

The head-in-the-sand attitude of many parents makes the problem worse, he claimed.

"It takes two to tango. There is a tremendous amount of denial.

"This town has some real problems, we need to talk about it. We really need to do something about it," he said.

"The problem is worse than it's ever been," he continued. "The big thing is to carry a gallon of vodka. They're drinking to pass out."

A Cohasset High School graduate with young children, Muir deplored

Eight-year-olds Caroline Henderson, Amanda Faulker, Mia Lieb-Lappen and Laura Friedman are just four of many ballerinas from Cohasset to appear with Boston Ballet in "The Nutcracker" on stage Nov. 24 through Dec. 31 at The Wang Center.

Cohasset ballerinas gear up for magic of The Nutcracker

While many residents are preparing for Thanksgiving, 14 Cohasset girls are already thinking about Christmas, as they prepare for their roles in Boston Ballet's "The Nutcracker." The girls have been practicing since mid-October, averaging two to three rehearsals in Boston each week, in addition to their usual ballet classes. Somehow they manage to squeeze in costume fittings and photo sessions.

This is a special year for "The Nutcracker." Throughout the year, Boston Ballet has been busy replacing all the old scenery with lavish new sets, designing new costumes and adding extraordinary special effects. The story line has been expanded to include the traditional role of Uncle Drosselmyer's nephew and the attendants, all set to the traditional Tchaikovsky music.

The excitement began in September, when auditions were held in Boston. The girls have an idea of what part they may be considered for, because the costumes already exist and the ballet publishes a list of each role and the required height and dance level required to be considered for each role. For two days the ballet school is filled with dancers auditioning and answering callbacks. Then the wait begins until the acceptance letters are mailed out within the following two weeks.

For Amanda Faulkner, Laura Friedman, Caroline Henderson, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Brittany Novak, Delia Regan and Gillian Simons, this will be their first time performing on the Wang stage. Filled with enthusiasm and awe, they will soon be backstage pros, learning about the hard work, training and countless hours of rehearsal and professional protocol. After rehearsals wind down near the end on November, they will have refresher run-throughs and wait for their turn on the stage.

The girls who have performed before, and the roles they've had a chance to play in past years, are:

Changing area code may dial up headaches

NYNEX running out of numbers

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Local businesses are bracing for another round of telephone number changes, brought on by the recent announcement by NYNEX that it is running out of telephone numbers within the 617 and 508 areas.

While 617 was adequate for eastern Massachusetts for decades, for the second time in less than 10 years, NYNEX said at least two new area codes will be needed in the region within the next four years.

NYNEX spokesman Ken Horne said last week the additional area codes will make millions of new numbers available as demand increases due to advances in telecommunications technology. No decisions have been made as to what the new area code numbers will be, or where the Appeal is settled

By DAVID JOHNSON

Town boards now agree about the conditions to be imposed on the Shaw's Supermarket planned for Cushing Plaza.

After a brief discussion Monday night, selectmen approved an agreement reached by the zoning board of appeals and Shaw's, which settles an appeal the supermarket brought against an earlier ZBA decision.

The document also conforms to the planning board decision reached this summer.

Fire status report noted

In his monthly report to selectmen, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said that the water department has notified the fire department that the new water main and hydrants are in service on Forest Avenue.

"These water system improvements allow for greatly improved firefighting capabilities in the Forest Avenue, Linden Drive, Jerusalem Road area, as far as water supply and pressure is concerned," Lincoln said.

He also explained that the town's three public school buildings were inspected prior to their opening for the new school year and fire drills were held within three days as required by law.

Lincoln said the Epinephrine Auto-Injector, placed on the ambulance Aug. 28, for emergency treatment of severe allergic reactions, was used on Sept. 9 to stabilize a victim of a bee sting.

"This important addition to the emergency medical services of Cohasset has proved its value," Lincoln said.

In September, the fire department responded to 129 incidents including two structure fires; one motor vehicle accident; 41 medical calls; seven brush, grass or woods fires; and conducted eight investigations and 31 inspections.

Inspect home valuations

The fiscal 1996 Real Estate Assessed Valuations have been completed and have been submitted for certification by the Massachusetts Department of Revenue.

The new values are available for public inspection at the Assessor's Office, Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., during regular business hours. Due to staffing limitations, telephone inquiries about valuations will not be accepted.

Additional copies of the value listings are available for inspection at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 106 South Main St. Any problems regarding valuation will be handled through the abatement process. Call the Assessor's Office staff for more information.

Police Sgt. appointed

Cohasset police patrolman David Cogill was named sergeant during the selectman's meeting this week.

His promotion was unanimously approved by selectmen on the recommendation of police chief Brian Noonan.

Three weeks ago, selectmen unanimously approved the appointment of William Quigley to fill an open patrolman's spot. Chief Noonan said this week he hopes to have Quigley on board soon. Apparently state funding for the police academy has run out but Noonan feels that Quigley, who has served as a seasonal police officer in Cohasset and a special police officer in Boston, may qualify for a waiver.

Winter parking ban enacted

Through April 1, on-street parking is prohibited from 2 a.m. until 6 a.m., selectmen said.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the parking ban is enacted so that snow plows can plow the streets.

He said police will issue pink courtesy tickets to "first-time offenders" until Dec. 1; after that $15 tickets will be issued.

Town Hall closed for holiday

Town Hall will be closed Thursday, Nov. 23, for Thanksgiving and will reopen for business as usual on Friday, Nov. 24, from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Clean catch basin covers

All Cohasset residents are encouraged to clean off any catch basin covers near their homes to prevent flooding and subsequent damage to their properties.

The Highway Department cleans these covers as often as possible, but during this time of year with leaves falling quickly and the current rainfall, the Highway Department cannot continually clean off the basin covers, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Papa Gino's to move

The Papa Gino's restaurant will soon be moving to a new home at Cohasset Plaza, near Stop & Shop, vacating its current location at Cushing Plaza, which is being rebuilt to accommodate a Shaw's Supermarket.

Selectmen this week approved the transfer of Papa Gino's beer and wine license.

Papa Gino's employee Patrice Mahoney made the request, explaining that the new location will have somewhat fewer than the 100 seats in the current restaurant.

She said there would be no sit-down bar, but that beer and wine will continue to be served.

Stating that her family are enthusiastic take-out customers, selectman Jane Goedecke wanted to know about traffic and parking at the new site.

Mahoney replied that the delivery vehicle will be parked in the rear of the store. She said that parking will be adequate since 40 percent of the restaurant's business is made up of take out, a figure which rises to more than 50 percent on Friday nights.

Cohasset's Week

Package stores open Sundays

Between Nov. 19 and Dec. 31, Cohasset package stores will now be open on Sundays, in accordance with state law, which gives communities that choice.

Selectmen agreed to allow the stores to open from noon until 6 p.m., on Sundays Nov. 19 and 26, and on Dec. 3, 10 and 17. Stores may remain open from noon until 9 p.m. on Christmas Eve, Dec. 24, and on New Year's Eve, Dec. 31.

Andrew Hailer, manager of Curtis Liquors, requested the openings, stating that liquor stores in neighboring communities will also be open.

Selectman Jane Goedecke endorsed the 9 p.m. closing on Christmas and New Year's Eves, stating that allowing the stores to remain open until 11 p.m., as allowed by state law, was too late.

"It's not very safe to have people going in and buying liquor at 11 o'clock on Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve," she said, to the agreement of the other selectmen.

A member of the drug and alcohol committee told selectmen earlier in the evening that alcoholism is common in Cohasset.

Boat yard comments due

Public comment on a proposal to reduce the amount of space for boat repair and add housing and retail space at the site of the Mill River Marine Railway must be received by the state's Coastal Zone Management office by Nov. 20.

Selectmen this week agreed to write a letter stating that area allotted to boat repair should not be reduced.

"Nothing that's done to this property should take away from the boat repair," said selectman Jane Goedecke, who attended a recent meeting on the subject.

She said that selectmen should not address the specific plans for three apartments or retail space at the site, stating that the property must make a profit in order to remain in business.

"This guy (owner William Hanney) has got to make a profit or he's going to walk away from it," Goedecke said.

"This is one of the last water dependent commercial uses left in the harbor," said selectman Michael Sullivan, who added that the boat yard should remain in business.

The other selectmen agreed and town administrator Gregory Doyon will draft the letter this week.

Fishermen have been vocal in their opposition to the plan to alter the size of the boat repair facility.

Library bids are rejected

Accepting the advice of Gregory Doyon, town administrator, selectmen Monday night rejected all three bids to perform masonry work at the Pratt Library.

Doyon reported that the bids were about twice as high as expected and that the subject would be reviewed before new bids were

Elevator closed on weekends

The town hall elevator will now be shut down Friday at 1 p.m. and may not be used until Monday morning.

Town administrator Gregory Doyon said he has also met with town hall staff to discuss safety and security in the building.

His actions come following the ordeal of conservation commission secretary Pat Walsh, who was trapped inside the elevator for 36 hours three weeks ago.

Stating that too many people possess keys to the town hall, selectman Jane Goedecke said that Scituate officials must obtain their town hall key from the police station, signing in and out. She said that although the Scituate police station is adjacent to the town hall, making the procedure easy, Cohasset should nonetheless look into a similar rule.

Legal bills are approved

Monday night selectmen agreed to pay the blue chip Boston law firm, Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar $812.56 for work on the legal aspects of improving the sewer system.

Tewksbury is reappointed

During their meeting this week, selectmen reappointed Hamilton Tewksbury to the government island study committee.

Hayride request on table

A request by the Cohasset Community Center to make a section of North Main St. one way during a hayride planned after Thanksgiving will be discussed at the Nov. 20 selectman's meeting.

Selectmen wanted to be sure what hours the street should be one-way and to carefully consider traffic patterns in light of the recent Rhode Island tragedy, in which several children were killed in a hayride traffic accident.

Navigation action expected

After months of plodding through the Washington legislative process, the navigation act is finally about to receive consideration by the full senate, according to selectman Peter Pratt.

The measure, which will allow Cohasset to dredge the harbor, is attached to the Coast Guard authorization bill. Pratt praised Bay State Sen. John Kerry and Rep. Gerry Studds for pushing the measure along.

Activist charges Cohasset parents in denial

the apathy of most parents.

He said a mailing urging parents to sign a pledge not to tolerate or permit their children to attend unsupervised parents, resulted in a four or five percent response, which he called "embarrassing."

In addition, Muir said the lack of support and direction has nearly derailed the committee in the past year.

The 11-member group currently has six vacancies.

Muir said he understands the problems of drug and alcohol addiction because of his own experience.

'This town has some real problems, we need to talk about it. We really need to do something about it.

— Craig Muir

"I've seen both sides of it," he explained.

Despite the set backs, Muir reported cooperation from the new high school principal, Curtis Collins. The schools use the PALS substance abuse program.

He suggested a list in the Mariner citing, without names, each time a student was in trouble for drug or alcohol. Muir said the number of incidents would wake people up.

He also said they want to work with the PTO and to establish a drug and alcohol-free weekend in town.

Drug committee member Ellie Waal invited interested residents could call her, 383-6882, or to contact selectmen.

"I don't think there is a more important committee in town," she stated.

Selectmen were sympathetic to the problem.

Selectman Michael Sullivan disagreed with Muir that most parents are in denial, stating that the majority of parents would be very concerned to learn that their children were in trouble.

Board checks out agreement

The settlement forbids fast food restaurants at the plaza and will allow vehicles leaving the plaza to turn left, north, onto Route 3A provided a police officer is present at peak hours or a traffic light is installed. Earlier the ZBA had forbidden a left hand turn.

In addition, a number of technical questions, included noise abatement and drainage, have been settled.

Selectmen were asked to sign the agreement because the supermarket chain named the Town of Cohasset, in addition to the ZBA, in its appeal to Norfolk County Superior Court.

ZBA members Barbara Power and Mark DeGiacomo told selectmen that the ZBA agreed to Shaw's requests except one: fast food restaurants will not be allowed at Cushing Plaza.

DeGiacomo pointed out that the negotiations for the agreement took place before the recent town meeting vote to outlaw fast food establishments.

"They (Shaw's) conceded the point and essentially gave in," he said.

ZBA chairman, attorney Myrna Putziger drafted the agreement.

Shaw's is now seeking ZBA permission for a larger sign, otherwise the settlement will allow the project to proceed.

Selectmen appeared to like the agreement.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said she hoped that the restriction on truck deliveries at the Cushing Plaza is the same as the restriction imposed on the Stop & Shop in Cohasset Plaza.

Shaw's will not be able to accept truck deliveries between 10 p.m. and 6:30 a.m. and from 4:30 and 6:30 p.m.

Power and DeGiacomo left the room to research the issue, but returned to report that they could not locate the truck restriction in the Stop & Shop agreement.

We interrupt our expansion, so we don't interrupt your shopping.

The new South Shore Plaza will be a terrific shopping experience, with a new second level, 100 new specialty stores, a 700 seat food court, and a three-level parking facility. Meanwhile, the old South Shore Plaza is still a great place to shop, and we know you have lots of Holiday shopping to do. So we're suspending construction in our lots for the Holiday season. You'll see that work's underway, but nothing will get in your way. In fact, most of our 6,920 parking spaces will be available! Thanks for your continued support, and best wishes for a wonderful Holiday season.

Workers step up preparations for Village Fair

55th annual event is Dec.2

With Cohasset's 55th Village fair a few weeks away, volunteers in the various sponsoring organizations which benefit from the event are stepping up their activities and enlisting more helpers to make sure that booths and tables will be well-stocked, and other features are ready for the opening at 10 a.m. Saturday, Dec. 2.

Early bird donors and early bird shoppers alike are being encouraged by the organizers to make their commitments in advance of the day itself.

For those wanting to clear garages, attics, closets or library shelves while giving the Village Fair a lift, instructions have gone out from organizers in at least two of the churches involved.

Organizers of the ever-popular book sale at St. Stephen's Church are currently accepting donations of books, tapes and CD's to be left on the stage in Walton Rodgers Hall Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. Craft and cooking magazines and Smithsonian magazine are also welcome. For further information call 383-6840.

Organizers of the Jumble Sale of the First Parish has an even broader wish list, seeking all manner of articles from fall cleanouts. Good clean winter clothing, toys, furniture, records, small appliances and sports gear are needed. These may be delivered Friday, Dec. 1, the day before the fair, to Trueblood Hall in the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St.

Early-bird shoppers who wish to avoid the disappointment of empty racks at the sale of greens in the Town Hall can be sure of a purchase by putting in their orders for wreaths and boxwood trees with volunteers of the Greek Orthodox Church at 749-2226 or 925-7033.

Elsewhere preparations for the fair have gone on apace as workers at the Second Congregational Church put finishing touches on a wide variety of articles for their boutique, while cooks and bakers at congregations there and at the other churches are alerted to the need for baked goods of all kinds, jams, jellies and preserves that will provide the store of holiday delicacies offered at the fair.

Food pantry gears up for Thanksgiving

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Due to limited freezer space, the pantry needs cash donations to buy the turkeys on the day the baskets will be distributed.

The Cohasset Food Pantry has planned Thanksgiving dinner for 100 people.

Next Tuesday, volunteers will distribute baskets to 30 families, with the "fixings" for the annual celebration.

Food pantry coordinator Margie Steele said the pantry is seeking donations so it can purchase turkeys to go with each basket that will also include vegetables, stuffing, cranberry sauce, and frozen pies.

She explained that the limited freezer space at the food pantry, located at the Second Congregational Church, makes it difficult to store this number of turkeys. In this case, the pantry needs cash donations to buy the turkeys on the day the baskets will be distributed.

Steele also noted that while the pantry is located at the church, it is a community pantry and is not affiliated with any one church. All food pantry clients are from Cohasset.

The pantry is stocked through the continuing generosity of many local organizations and individuals. She particularly mentioned scout troops and the Cohasset post office workers who collected food in the spring, which kept the pantry stocked throughout the summer months.

The number of food pantry clients has remained constant, she said, with only slight seasonal changes. However, the need increases during the holidays, she said as families try to put together a special dinner.

"Sometimes we don't even know a group is collecting for us, and then they show up with donations," Steele said.

At this time, the pantry welcomes donations of all kinds of canned soup, but especially varieties that appeal to children, such as chicken noodle, tomato, and vegetable. It also needs peanut butter and jelly, fruit juices, rice, and canned fruits and vegetables.

The pantry also tries to have available shampoo, bar soap, toothpaste, and paper goods, she noted.

Donations can be brought to the Second Parish between 9 a.m. and 12 noon, Mondays through Fridays.

Town meeting briefs noted

On a unanimous vote, last week town meeting approved warrant article 47, to transfer $10,000 to pay for filling the town's new diesel and gasoline storage tanks.

Voters also supported article 54 that amends the town's general by-laws to allow Cohasset to apply for federal funding to dredge Cohasset Harbor.

Water matters handled

Last week, town meeting voters approved four "housekeeping" articles for the water commission, including a reduction in the cost of backflow prevention inspections for non-residential water users.

Water commissioner Robert Kasameyer explained the state-mandated semi-annual inspections are now billed at $50 each. But the cost can be reduced to $40 for each inspection (article 37).

On a unanimous vote, town meeting approved a $19,777 transfer (article 36) from water company revenues to pay additional operating expenses of the water management company.

In addition, a $55,000 transfer from the capital improvement account was also approved (article 39). Advisory committee member Roger Whitley said this money is in the water commission's budget, for a principal payment that it does not need to make this year. Only the interest payment is due.

Voters also approved warrant article 38, to transfer $30,000 from water department revenue to set aside in the event it is necessary to pay unemployment insurance claims for three former employees who chose not to be hired by the private water management company.

This is one flight that will definitely arrive on time.

Santa arrives at his sleigh Saturday, November 18.

Be here for the excitement as Santa Claus arrives with Mrs. Claus, Rudolph, his Elves, and Frosty the Snowman. There'll be music, storytelling, and free gifts for the kids. And, of course, photos with Santa will be available throughout the Holiday season. The fun starts at 11 am near Jordan Marsh, and Santa arrives promptly at noon. And leave some time for some shopping, too; our Holiday collection's first-class all the way.

Local students contribute to Travis Roy fund

We must begin by expressing our admiration for the students at Cohasset High School! After hearing that there was a telethon for Travis Roy (the boy that was so severely injured at the Boston University hockey game), they "passed the hat" in the cafeteria and raised $100 to send to the fund. Add that to the $100 that the Student Council contributed and $200 went to the Travis Roy Fund!

Just shows that our student body is kinder than the kindness, and we are ever so proud of you all.

Here's some news from the South. Mike Riley, a 1994 graduate of Cohasset High School and a sophomore at Duke University, met up with Cohasset's Dave Zadel, a 1994 graduate of Archbishop Williams High School, in the locker room following the Duke-Wake Forest football game recently.

Zadel, a sophomore also, 6'5" 225 lb. end, is on the starting defensive line for Wake Forest. It's certain they had lots to talk about, they must have had a great time!

We didn't ask who won the game!

Had a nice chat with Jim Reidy the other day, he called to announce that the class of 1990 is going to be holding its fifth reunion (does that seem possible?) Nov. 24 at the Legion, beginning at 8 p.m. If you haven't been called, or would like some more information, please call Jim or Joel at 383-1014. Hopefully they will fill us in afterwards.

Erin K. Steimle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund A. Steimle, has begun her first year at Middlebury College in Vermont. She joins 585 other first year students, drawn from 3,828 applicants, to form the Class of '99 at the Vermont liberal arts college.

As reported last week, the 55th Village Fair is less than a month away, and the volunteers are stepping up their activities and enlisting

Johanna R. Horn is one of 76 students from Massachusetts who have been designated James Bowdoin Scholars at Bowdoin College. She was among 377 undergraduates accorded recognition for distinguishing themselves in scholarship by College President Robert H. Edwards during traditional James Bowdoin Day exercises Oct. 27. Held annually, the exercises consist of the announcement of awards, the presentation of books, a response by an undergraduate and an address. They also honor James Bowdoin III, who was the earliest patron of the college and who was instrumental in its founding in 1794.

Had a long conversation with Tom Wigmore recently, he called to remind everyone of the Sons of American Legion annual breakfast, to be held Thanksgiving morning. It begins at 7:30 a.m. and runs until 9:30 a.m., it costs $4 and promises all you can eat. What a great way to "fortify" yourself for the freezing weather at Hull, where the football game gets underway at 10:30 a.m. (Go Skippers!). Proceeds will go to their scholarship fund.

Tom also told me some impressive news regarding the Sons of the American Legion, they won a national award for outstanding Veteran services in V.A. hospitals and in the community, and a national award for contributing to the Child Welfare Fund of the American Legion. The awards were presented at the National Convention of the American Legion at Indianapolis, Ind., in September.

Finally, thanks go the girls and boys soccer teams for providing everyone with an exciting and great season. Making the playoffs is an honor indeed, they worked hard to get there, and hard when they got there! Be sure to tell the members of the team when you see them.

Be sure to let us in on your news, it is "a treasure better than gold."

Obituaries

George F. Walling

Worked for country club

George F. Walling, 74, of Cohasset, died Oct. 23 at home.

He was a retired mechanic for the Cohasset Country Club for 40 years, retiring in 1982. He was also a decorated Army Air Corps pilot, serving with the Army Air Corps during World War II in India, Burma and China. He received the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal, Asiatic Pacific Theater campaign ribbon, China Memorial ribbon and the Good Conduct Medal.

Mr. Walling was an accomplished pilot who made his first solo flight on Dec. 12, 1939. He owned his own plane and flew for many years from the Marshfield and Plymouth airports. Experimental aircraft were one of his hobbies.

Mr. Walling leaves two brothers, Walter Walling of Rockland and Ronald Walling of Boynton Beach, Fla.; four sisters, Natalie Collins, Bertha Walling and Pauline Walling, all of Weymouth, and Ruth Foley of Pembroke and several nieces and nephews.

A funeral service was held Oct. 26 at Downing Cottage Funeral Home, Hingham. Burial was in Hingham Cemetery.

Sophia M. DeNapoli

Twenty-eight year resident

Sophia M. (VonSchleinitz) DeNapoli, 84, of Cohasset, died Oct. 28 at Massachusetts Respiratory Hospital, Braintree, after a long illness.

Born in Chicago, she was a Cohasset resident for 28 years.

Mrs. DeNapoli was the former wife of the late Samuel Rose and leaves her husband, Anthony C. DeNapoli; a son, William Rose of Cohasset; four stepsons, Robert DeNapoli of Glencoe, Ill., Donald DeNapoli of Cary, Ill., and Richard DeNapoli and Roger DeNapoli of Plymouth; a sister, Elizabeth Adlon of Elkhart, Ind., and six grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Nov. 2 at St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be in Woodside Cemetery. Visiting is prior to the Mass from 9:30 to 10:45 a.m.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

A(p)parent problem

Craig Muir told selectmen this week that Cohasset has a problem.

Police Chief Brian Noonan told us the same thing.

Some parents either don't care or don't want to know what their teenagers are up to.

On Halloween night – albeit a traditional holiday for teen mischief – Chief Noonan said local youths egged police cruisers and police officers, were involved in fights and vandalism – and used the foulest language imaginable when confronted.

In one instance, the officer who drove an eighth-grade girl home reported that her language was "unbelievable," the Chief said.

Mr. Muir said the town has a "very serious problem with drinking and drugging." And the biggest obstacle is denial and parent apathy.

A recent mailing, which urged parents to sign a pledge not to permit their children to attend unsupervised parties, resulted in a poor response.

Cohasset can be proud of its vigilance over the years through the drug and alcohol committee, teen center, and now PALS, a drug awareness and education program. And Cohasset High has one of the toughest policies for student athletes caught drinking or using drugs – a full season suspension as compared to two weeks for most South Shore high schools.

It also has a concerned police force that drove upwards of 20 kids home Halloween night.

But schools and the town are not ultimately responsible for underage drinking and drug use.

Mr. Muir and Chief Noonan both blame the parents for their children's behavior.

We agree.

It's time for Cohasset parents to exercise some control over their teenagers before it's too late.

Without strong, enthusiastic commitment from parents – most programs will be doomed to failure for the kids who need them most.

Mr. Muir said that some Cohasset students drink to the point of being stupefied. The new thing is to carry a bottle of vodka and drink to pass out.

The 11-member drug and alcohol committee has six vacancies. Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office.

"I don't think there's a more important committee in town," member Ellie Waal told selectmen this week.

The group certainly has its work cut out for it.

And at the top of the list ought to be some programs for parents with some tough talk from officials in the legal and health-care professions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Hedlund comments on CHL expansion

Dear Commissioner Struhs,

Although we have spoken several times concerning the Cohasset Heights limited application for landfill expansion in Cohasset, this letter serves as my written comment on the subject. Specifically, these comments are directed to the site assignment application, file number 106896.

I urge you to reject this application due to the lack of need for such a facility, neighborhood and quality of life encroachments, and most importantly, strong concerns over environmental issues including water supply contamination.

According to your recent reports and updates of the Solid Waste Master Plan, there is no current need for this landfill expansion. In fact, based on comments from your office, environmental engineers and concerned citizens, it appears that approving this landfill and therefore expanding statewide capacity, may jeopardize your aggressive recycling goals by lowering the cost of waste disposal.

The community at large does not appear to support this expansion for several reasons. I have been contacted by many residents in the area who have complaints over the odors and potentially harmful gases emitted by the current landfill. Expansion of the landfill may increase these conditions and further degrade the quality of life in the area. The additional heavy truck traffic in the area will also have an adverse affect on the community. Due to the location of the property, a long distance from any major highway, the increased traffic of heavy trucks will have an adverse effect on the neighborhoods located just off and around the moderately sized Route 3A. Noise, pollution and safety are just three of the major concerns expressed to me by local residents.

Most importantly, it appears that this landfill currently threatens public water supplies, and its expansion will only enhance that threat. The proposed expansion is within the town of Cohasset Water Resource District and is therefore a potential threat to the Sohier Street wellfield located approximately 3,000 yards away. The wetlands area near Lily Pond also appears to be in jeopardy of run off contamination.

These issues were not adequately addressed in the reports and applications submitted by the proponent. Although the MEPA unit has approved the last of a long line of studies prepared by the proponent, I do not believe that the content of these documents is sufficient to ensure the preservation of our recycling goals, our quality of life and threats to the local water supply.

In conclusion, these are strong reasons why an expansion of this landfill facility is not in the best interest of the residents of Cohasset, the citizens of the Commonwealth and our environment. All the environmental indicators seem to suggest that we should not gamble with our environment, and reject this unnecessary expansion of our statewide landfill capacity.

Robert L. Hedlund
State Senator

David Struhs is a commissioner with the Dept. of Environmental Protection (DEP).

Murray reconfirms stance

Dear Commissioner Struhs:

I am writing to reconfirm my opposition to the Cohasset Heights Landfill expansion as expressed in My Feb. 23, 1993 letter and my Oct. 30, 1995 letter to you.

Thank you for accepting all of my phone calls regarding this serious situation.

Mary Jeanette Murray
State Representative.

Story on roots was delightful

To the Editor:

That was a delightful story told in the Mariner of Nov. 9 of the group led by Jim Lagrotteria that revisited their homeland in Southern Italy. Not only was it significant to Jim and his daughters but to all the others who traveled with them. There is something very stirring about "finding one's roots" and no better way to start, genealogists tell us, than to interview living relatives.

If any of you wish to do some additional research you might stop by the Family History library at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at 379 Gardner St., South Hingham. The library is open to the public on Wednesday evenings, Thursday and Saturday mornings, with a librarian there to assist you, free of charge.

The show is divided into four casts because the demands are so rigorous. During performances, the girls often have two shows daily, in the afternoon and evening. They must arrive backstage an hour before the performance with their hair already styled and secured with plenty of hairspray. The girls check in and go to their respective dressing rooms hidden far beneath the Wang. They'll learn the ins and outs of the building, including the secret tunnel that runs from the dressing rooms under the Wang to the main lobby.

After arriving for stage call, the young performers then visit the makeup room, where professional makeup artists turn them into dolls, cherubs, soldiers and other characters. From there it is on to the dressing room, where they are dressed by professional costume attendants. Once the final touches are made, there is no sitting and no eating, because the costumes are delicate and must be cared for properly.

Back in their dressing room, they wait to hear the announcement that their time is near. Hundreds of performers line up at different stage entrances, waiting for their cues.

After the matinee, the ballerinas revisit the makeup room to have their "face removed." It is a time-honored tradition that professional entertainers never leave the theater in makeup. Then on to the costume room to have their outfits removed and checked for any necessary stitching or repair. They then have a break of several hours.

Some go out for dinner or to a movie. Others rest backstage, pulling schoolwork, games, walkmans and coolers filled with sandwiches and snacks out of their ballet bags. To the surprise of no one, some even nap. Before they know it, it is time for the second stage call to begin again with the visits to the makeup room, costume fitting and the backstage lineup. After their dance, the routine is again reversed one final time before the dancers wait at the side stage door for the long ride home.

The new dancers look forward to their time on stage with anticipation, and those who have danced in previous "Nutcracker"s are just as excited. They love rehearsing and dancing with professional dancers, and the older girls are often allowed to take warm-up classes with the stars they admire all year long. And then there are the autographs, backstage pictures and the new friends from other towns, as well as the joy of performing on a world-class stage with an exceptional orchestra.

What an experience!

Tickets for "The Nutcracker" are available by calling Ticketmaster at 931-ARTS or in person at the Wang Center box office. Ticket prices range from $10 to $58. Cast A runs from Nov. 24 to Dec. 2; Cast B from Dec. 3-10; Cast C from Dec. 12-22 and Cast D, Dec. 23-31.

The following is a cast list of Cohasset's 14 young ballerinas. Check with them first, however, before attending a performance, since individual cases may differ in cast overlapping. The box office has information on matinee and evening performances.

The schedule is as follows: Cast A – Megan Chastain (Cherub), Adrina DeVitre (Clara), Emily Libby (Reindeer) and Gillian Simons (Soldier); Cast B – Brittany Novak (Cherub), Kate Schroeder (Soldier) and Corey Sullivan (Tea); Cast C – Amanda Faulkner, Laura Friedman, Caroline Henderson and Mia Lieb-Lappen (Dolls) and Kimberly Ulmer (Cherub); Cast D – Elizabeth Myers (General) and Delia Regan (Soldier).

Kimberly Ulmer, Megan Chastain, and Britany Novak, all 10 years old, will perform in The Nutcracker at The Wang Center.

New area code could dial up more headaches dividing lines will be drawn, but the telephone company is beginning the process to implement the new numbers in 1998 for the 617 area, and in 1999 for the 508 area.

As an alternative to drawing new lines for the new area codes, Horne said NYNEX is considering an "overlay" area code system whereby all telephone numbers would remain the same, but all new telephone numbers—business as well as residential—would be assigned a telephone number with one of the new area codes.

Keith Knowles, chairman of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, said new telephone area codes create additional expenses for businesses, which must reprint stationery, bill-heads, checks, business cards, and repaint telephone numbers on business vehicles.

In addition to these direct costs, Knowles mentioned the "indirect cost" of the loss of business if a customer does not have the new area code.

Considering the two options—new area code zones or the overlay area code, Knowles said, "They both stink. They complicate people's lives."

However, he said the overlay would be the least costly to businesses. Knowles also challenged the telephone company to find another solution within the existing area codes. With ongoing technological advances, he said, there may be a way to have one telephone number serve a number of functions depending on the type of equipment to which it is connected.

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce

"We are victims of our technology," said South Shore Chamber of Commerce spokesman Terry Fancher.

While recognizing the impact the new area codes will have on local businesses, he is also optimistic that NYNEX has provided enough time to solicit public comment.

The Chamber of Commerce has not taken a position on the new area codes, but Fancher offered a modification to the overlay area code, which might minimize the effect on both business and residential customers.

He suggested that NYNEX consider assigning the new area code numbers to facsimile machines, computer modem lines, internet telephone numbers, and cellular phones. Regular telephones—for businesses and residences—could retain their existing area code and telephone numbers.

Horne explained that many business customers have had multiple phone lines for many years and demand for additional business lines continues to grow with more technology.

However, it is becoming more common for residential customers to have multiple lines: for home computers, home facsimile machines, and teenagers' telephones. Individuals are able to work from their homes, connected to their office computers through the telephone lines. It is no longer unusual for a residential customer to have three or four telephone lines, he said.

As further evidence of the growth on the South Shore, Horne said there are no plans to add another area code in western Massachusetts which now uses the 413 area code.

The technology, coupled with population growth on the South Shore, has absorbed telephone numbers faster than in the past, noted Fancher.

"We don't expect that growth to stop," he said, adding, "No one is going to give up their faxes and pagers."

He recalled the strong opposition from the South Shore ten years ago, when NYNEX proposed the 508 area code. At that time, telephone customers feared that this would increase telephone costs with new long-distance charges for calls to the next town, if the next town was in a different area code.

As originally proposed, the 508 area code line was drawn at Rockland, Fancher said, but was ultimately moved between Plymouth and Kingston following public hearings and consultation with the business community.

Horne said that if that had been done 10 years ago, it would not have changed the need for the new area codes now.

Prior to implementing the new area codes, the state Department of Public Utilities will hold hearings and solicit public comment on NYNEX's application for the new numbers.

"I'm glad there's time to talk about this," Fancher said.

Battered women have no power

To the Editor:

We would like to applaud the Mariner newspapers for addressing the issue of domestic violence in their Oct. 12 editorial and for listing the number of Greater Boston Legal Services.

However, we must take serious exception to the tone, however unintentional, of blaming the victim. The article focused on Cheryl Wilson, who was murdered by her policeman husband before he then committed suicide. She was severely criticized for allowing her estranged husband to stay with her on occasion despite having an active restraining order.

To quote from the editorial, "While victims might call the police and take out restraining orders when their abuser has become violent, too often they soften up and take it upon themselves to circumvent the laws designed to keep them safe. . . . All the support and all the restraining orders in the world could not help if she could not find the strength within herself to take control of the situation. At some point, adult victims have to look at their lives and work to change them. They have to rely upon, not abuse, the support systems that are available."

The tone of the article appeared to have no appreciation for the cycle of violence, the mindset of battered women – whose self-esteem and confidence in their own judgment have often been plummeted as well as their bodies. She often will continually hope against hope that maybe this one time things will be different.

The article also seemed to generalize to all battered women that it is their responsibility to keep themselves safe, as if in fact they are in control. Yet, the reality has always been that the battered cycle is about a batterer's need to be in power and control.

Yes, a restraining order is a serious legal step, and women must be responsible in either enforcing – or removing – a restraining order as situations develop. However, no woman's death should be minimized as though she "brought it on herself" due to lax compliance with restraining order mandates.

SAFE plans landfill forum

To the Editor:

We encourage our citizens to attend the SAFE Forum this Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Unitarian Parish House. Bob Craver from Citizens for a Clean Environment will highlight their successful fight against the BFI's proposed Douglas landfill. Since there is evidence of a large BFI investment in the Cohasset Heights expansion, this topic should be of great interest to our community.

Other guests will include Amy Perry from MASSPIRG, Cynthia Luppi from Clean Water Action and Sen. Hedlund. Rep. Murray, who was invited to explain her position on the expansion, has declined our invitation.

Boats are not transportation answer

To the Editor:

A recent Boston Globe article on a proposed commuter boat between Scituate and Boston suggested that riders should be prepared to accept service interruptions in bad weather.

"The airport closes in storms," said Michael McGurl, of Gladding-Hearn Shipbuilding. "The third rail freezes, and they close the subways."

Thanks, Mike. And thanks to Nancy Buckley, of the so-called Coastal Coalition, one of those who want to foist this inferior transit method on South Shore commuters. My only question is, who do they really think they're fooling?

I recall a week during the winter of 1993-94 when the South Shore received 24 inches of snow on a Tuesday, and another 16 inches that Friday. I rode the last boat out of Boston at 5 p.m. on the day of the second storm, never having missed work.

My colleagues who rode commuter trains from the western, southern and northern suburbs of Boston were in the office, too. Why in the world should South Shore residents have to accept a hit-and-miss method of commuting?

This proposed Scituate boat is going to be a big flop. I think of my commute, now an hour and 15 minutes from my garage door in North Scituate to my office door downtown, via the Hingham boat. The Scituate option will add time to my commute, and it will be even worse for Cohasset dwellers!

The proposed service will be unreliable and not as safe. Access and parking will be major problems. As for comfort, may I suggest they name this new boat "Dramamine Dream?" At $5 a ride it will be 47 percent more expensive than the current $34 for a 10-ride ticket from Hingham.

Nancy, Mike and the rest of you NIMBYs out there, how dumb do you think we are?

Almost all of Boston's southern suburbs will have train service once the Old Colony restoration is complete. Only the coastal towns won't, thanks to a group composed of selfish track abutters and elitists who fear that the wrong socio-economic class might want to take the train to Scituate's beaches in the summer.

There are many remarkable and ironic aspects to the Greenbush restoration issue, such as Hingham's claim that a train would violate its historic integrity when, in fact, a train ran through the town for 105 years. Or the idea that a few locomotives are going to pollute the air more than a few hundred cars.

The crowning touch, though, may well be that our Republican office holders, Sen. Robert Hedlund and Gov. Weld, seem ready to give in to a band of selfish obstructionists who have won exactly one of about a dozen referendums on this issue over the years. The vast majority of South Shore residents support Greenbush restoration.

Buses, commuter lanes and boats on the open ocean are not consolation prices, they are insults to our intelligence. I hope those who push them realize that they'll ultimately be held accountable for their folly.

Political questions muddy town counsel search

Pratt says his civil rights were violated

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

The search for a new town counsel has barely begun and it has already set off fireworks among selectmen, this time between chairman Merle Brown and Peter Pratt.

Brown opened Monday night's meeting reading a statement that appeared to be written on notes before him.

Brown said he received a message on his telephone answering machine Thursday, Nov. 2 from Pratt.

He said Pratt had accused some of the other selectmen with already offering the town counsel job and stating that the town counsel subcommittee, which includes Brown and Jane Goedecke, is "off the rails."

Brown strongly denied the charge, saying "no one is offered the town counsel job. If you (Pratt) would care to listen."

His voice rising in anger, Brown charged the message was "full of slander" and "contained four-letter words."

He said, "I listened to this trash," adding that his granddaughter was due to arrive any minute for a ride to the airport. Brown said he was relieved the girl did not pick up the answering machine and hear the message.

"Don't you ever call my house again," Brown told Pratt, who sat silently beside him. "Don't call me again. I'll hang up on you."

Brown said Pratt may reach him through the selectman's office.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Pratt said his remarks on Brown's answering machine were inappropriate.

"Basically I lost my cool and that's inexcusable and for that I apologize," he said.

But Pratt said he intends to seek "all legal mechanisms" to restore his constitutional civil rights.

"My highest priority right now is to see that Mr. Brown stops abridging my civil rights as a selectman; stops restricting my access to the agenda of meetings of the board; and stops disenfranchising the citizens of Cohasset of their constitutional rights."

Pratt says he is not being briefed on a range of matters including the town counsel search process, which he wants done openly.

The other selectmen sat uncomfortably through the brief episode Monday, but no one denied talking about the town counsel's position with prospective candidates.

The small audience appeared startled at Brown's strong tone. He is regarded as blunt, but easy going in Cohasset political circles.

Later in the evening, health board member Robert Davenport, asked how the search for a town counsel is going and requested that other board members be able to offer suggestions during the process.

From their comments, it appeared that selectmen are just beginning their search.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said she has discussed the search with officials at the Mass. Municipal Association, a research and lobbying organization for local governments.

She passed out copies of the association's publication, The Beacon, which contained advertisements for town counsels in various communities.

Gjesteby said selectmen need to discuss whether they want a law firm or an individual to represent the town.

Goedecke said they will need to consider what legal assistance comparable communities are getting and how much they are spending.

She said that while lawyers will be competing to represent Cohasset, the town will have to compete with other entities for top legal service.

The other selectmen appeared to agree when Goedecke said the town must have a good idea of what expertise it seeks and how much it wants to spend before issuing a request for proposals or interviewing candidates.

Selectman Michael Sullivan wondered how Lexington, which he called a well run community, is represented.

Goedecke replied that a partner in a leading Boston law firm has long handled Lexington's legal service free. With a smile, she said that Cohasset would gratefully consider any similar offers.

Scituate has long used the large Boston law firm Kopleman and Paige for representation, Hingham and Hanover use firms, while other towns, such as Marshfield, use individual lawyers, as Cohasset has always done.

Richard Henderson said several weeks ago that he will resign the post once a replacement is found.

Henderson, 53, has served as Cohasset counsel since 1982, when J. Blake Thaxter, who had held the post for years, stepped down.

The position of town counsel has been a source of continuing controversy among selectmen recently.

In June, Pratt and Gjesteby voted against rehiring Henderson, with Brown, Goedecke and Sullivan voting for the appointment.

Pratt said the town is not getting adequate advice on certain issues, such as the open meeting law.

Gjesteby said she was not displeased with Henderson, but wanted to investigate alternatives to hold down legal cost.

On various occasions when Pratt has criticized Henderson, Goedecke has suggested that Pratt may have his own candidate for the job, which he has denied.

The issue of special town counsel, hired to handle a specific project has also been the subject of dispute.

Gjesteby said Monday night that Henderson had objected to the hiring of some special counsels, stating that he could have handled the work himself.

There has been concern over the cost of some long-standing legal disputes, such as the battle over the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Last spring members of the anti-landfill group, SAFE, charged that special town counsel Michael Leon, of the prestigious Boston firm, Warner & Stackpole, was withholding documents that should rightly be made public.

After Gjesteby released one of the documents in ques-

'Art to Wear' is at Art Center

Using fibers and fabrics to inspire them, 27 New England artists and designers will present their "Art to Wear" at a unique fashion show and benefit at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset. Every other year, the Art Center ends the year with a focus on textures and new discoveries with fibers. If you have been wanting that one-of-a-kind piece of clothing that you will never see on anyone else, then this is definitely a show you won't want to miss.

Some of the clothing to be modeled includes painted tunics and dresses, silk chiffon scarves, shibori dyed garments, embossed velvet scarves and hand bags, felted coats, chenille knit garments and hand-woven accessories. There will be swing coats, vests (waist, hip and full length), jackets, kimonos and accessories. The designers all have their favorite fabrics and fibers to work with and the range will amaze you! Metallic gold and silver threads, chenille, mohair, linen, quilted silk, paper, monofilament, leather and woven wool.

The evening begins at 7 p.m. Nov. 17 with wine and hors d'oeuvres, followed by the fashion show and then a chance to browse through the designers offerings that are for sale. Tickets are $30 per person and are available by calling the center at (617) 383-ARTS. The original designer clothing sells beginning at $50. You won't have any trouble finding beautiful items in the $50 to $200 range and if you really want to splurge, there will be those several one-of-a-kind items for more than $1,000. It's all fun to see ... and a great place to get fashion ideas! The Contextures IV Exhibition runs through Dec. 21. Gallery hours are Tues. to Sat., 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sun., noon to 4 p.m.

Coffee House presents New Age

Traditional and New Age singers Jem and Ariane, who are also multi-instrumentalists, will appear at the Coffee House off the Square Saturday, Nov. 18, with poet/actor Marcel Kopp, beginning at 8 p.m. with an open mike.

Jem Moore and Ariane Lydon draw on Celtic, Chilean and classical influences, among others. Moore plays the dulcimer, flute and tin whistle, and Lydon the harp, guitar, bodhran and classical piano. They recently released their sixth album, "O, Susanna!"

Kopp will complement their performance with poetry, drama, stories and song fragments, which he will read, interpret, translate and sing.

The Coffee House is located at 107 Main St. Admission is $5, and a variety of coffee, tea and desserts will be available. Proceeds will benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee for Central American Relief.

tion, selectmen Goedecke and Sullivan erupted, charging that a potential settlement with the landfill was being jeopardized.

When the secretary of state's office determined that the document Gjesteby released was indeed public, Pratt subsequently charged Henderson with giving the town poor advice on the matter.

Henderson replied that certain negotiations can be properly conducted in private and denied improperly withholding material.

When he announced his resignation, Henderson said the ongoing disputes among selectmen had nothing to do with his decision to step down.

"No one believes me," he said. "But I care little about politics."

Social Service League to deliver Turkey dinners

The Social Service League, which serves residents in Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Norwell under the direction of board member Barbara Donahue of Jerusalem Road, will deliver Thanksgiving turkey dinners to those residents who are unable to be with families on Thanksgiving Day. This is a tradition that Donahue and her family have carried on for several years, and they include many extras such as homemade pumpkin bread, according to president Annette Sawchuk.

Proceeds from the enlarged Cohasset Consignment Shop, located in Cushing Plaza on Route 3A, provide the major funding for the League's pneumonia shots, counseling and support groups, New Friends program, nursing services and Keep Well clinics, which include blood pressure screening, weight and blood sugar testing and nutritional education.

To volunteer or for further information, call 383-0771. For details about the consignment shop, call Andy Merrill at 383-0687.

Early Deadlines

Due to the Thanksgiving holiday, deadline for all editorial copy submitted to the Cohasset Mariner for next week's issue is noon, Monday (Nov. 20).

Keefe can't offset gridironers' slow start

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The inexperience factor has played into the Cohasset High football team's losses more than any lack of talent on the Skippers' squad. It would probably be less frustrating accepting the losses if the team taking the field every week was a talentless cast of misfits. But that is hardly the case in Skipper country.

Cohasset has been slow out of the blocks, particularly in its last four games and it has definitely hurt the team's momentum. Take away those six slow minutes and the Skippers, more often than not, look and play as good as their competition.

Sunday's loss 20-8 loss against Dover-Sherborn was just one more case of the Skippers getting off to a lethargic first few minutes and having another team capitalize on them.

"It was an absolute flat start," said head coach Bob Knurek. "That's the same story now for the last four games."

D-S wasted little time in putting points on the board. The Skippers' defense was stung by two touchdowns in D-S's first two possessions. However, Cohasset's defense came alive at that point and allowed a mere six points the rest of the way.

Linebacker Brian Riley and safety Kevin Smith were the two standouts, defensively, for Cohasset. Riley, one of the team's captains, had a quarterback sack and added seven tackles. Smith had six tackles in the game.

The Skippers had a golden chance to get themselves back into the game, but D-S's defense was able to hold off a first-and-goal from the 9 to leave Cohasset with no points to show for its effort.

Ben Keefe scored the Skippers' lone touchdown and rushed in on the conversion play. Keefe had few problems figuring out D-S's defense, based on his 162 yards of rushing on just 19 carries.

Knurek is hoping Cohasset's greatest strength – its ability to read plays – will be enough to counteract the strategy Hull's new offensive coordinator, Steve Vieira, will throw at the Skippers at the annual Thanksgiving Day game at Hull.

"We recognize that we're underdogs this year," Knurek said. "We have a lot bright kids that can read quickly. It should be a challenge trying to pick up the keys of the offensive coordinator."

Knurek plans to run his team through its usual practices at a "business as usual" pace and try to improve on what the club has been working on, play-wise, all season.

Girls can't find the touch

Scoring drought ends soccer semifinal bid

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

When Cohasset High girls soccer coach Maureen O'Day-Clark puts together her preseason scrimmage schedule before next fall's season, you can bet Dover-Sherborn will be one of the first teams she pencils in as a tentative opponent.

After dropping a tough 1-0 game last week to be eliminated from the Division 3 South Sectional semifinals, O'Day-Clark knew her 8-6-5 club could garner a wealth of quality soccer play by going against D-S.

"Both teams are pretty equal in ability," she said.

You'd have a tough time finding a pair of squads more evenly matched. And that's just how the game was played out.

The majority of play came at midfield where Cohasset's Amber Hopeman and Kelly O'Donnell controlled the Skippers' tempo in putting together their offensive attack. O'Day-Clark saw that the D-S goalkeeper had a tendency of straying "out too far" from the net and was hoping to use it to the team's advantage.

Cohasset had several ripe opportunities to score, but couldn't quite break the goal line with the flurry of shots it got off. When D-S finally beat Skipper keeper Catie Campbell (20 saves) from 18 yards out off of an indirect shot, it became very clear to O'Day-Clark that Cohasset's shots on goal had to be legitimate goal-scoring chances.

"We had to make every shot count," she said.

The Skippers got off nearly as many shots as D-S with the best chances coming from Kathy Fitzsimmons and Tammy Maitland. Still, Cohasset couldn't light the lamp to tie the game.

O'Day-Clark couldn't fault her offense for not putting enough pressure on the D-S keeper. "We had some good opportunities to put the ball in the net," she said.

Still, O'Day-Clark was pleased with the way her squad played against the third-place finisher in the Tri-Valley League and how well the team did in the tourney. The Skippers did earn their first soccer banner since 1991 for making it into the semifinal round.

"We were really lucky to get as far as we got," she said.

Crew team set for Saturday's title defense

Joe talks about the crew team, local finishers in Saturday's cross country meet at Franklin Park and the future of some high school soccer teams.

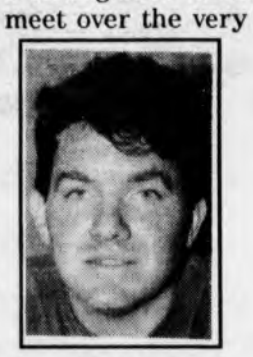
Cohasset High's crew team will be hitting the open seas this Saturday to defend its title in the Sixth Annual New England Youth Rowing Championship which begins at the Charlestown Navy Yard at 10 a.m.

Under the direction of coach Jack Buckley the Skippers have competed in four races already this season and expect to go up against teams from Hingham, Hull, Connecticut, Boston and Maine during the championship.

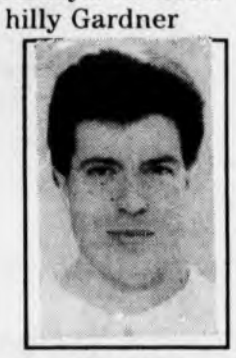
* * * * *

Melissa Henderson had quite a day in Saturday's Division 4 State Class Cross Country Meet over Franklin Park's 3.1 mile course. Henderson, Abington High's top female harrier and second-place finisher in the South Shore League, avoided going out at the break-neck speed usually associated with championship races and ran a strategic race.

Henderson, who qualified for her third All-State meet with the performance, worked her way up to seventh place by the two-mile mark and crossed the line in fifth. With her race smarts, Henderson should run a strong race in Saturday's All-State meet over the very hilly Gardner Golf Course.



McKee



Reardon

On the boys' side, Ryan Kinnon was the top Green Wave harrier with his 111th-place finish in 19:20. Gabe Karwaski was just over a minute back at 20:21, good for 173rd. Chris Trocchi ran an identical time, but was edged by Karwaski by one place. Jason Chamberlain took 212th in 21:23.

Rockland High's boys team ran in the same race with Carl Taylor cracking the top 100 with a 82nd place, 18:57 showing. Andy Tetzloff was 147th in 19:50. Tom Sullivan was 35 seconds back in 181st and Ryan Johnson pushed to 230th place with his 22:02. Rockland edged Abington in the team category by one place, 31st to 32nd.

The head coaches of both Abington High girls soccer squad and Rockland's boys team are looking ahead to next fall's season.

Green Wave coach Jeff Kent, who led Abington to a 14-4-1 record and 12th consecutive South Sectional tourney appearance, will be losing eight seniors to graduation but still has a strong lineup slated for '96.

Abington will have to do without All-Stars Nicole Monamey and Katie Allen, but does have the South Shore League's leading scorer back in Mardie DiCarlo. Tricia Keough, Traci Frazier, Meg Hazen, Maureen Hurley, Deb DiPietro and Chrissy Mace have all played their final game in a Green Wave uniform.

"It's a very nice group of seniors and they'll certainly be missed," Kent said.

So who will be on the field for Abington? Goalkeeper Sara Schlicting, who performed so well in the Green Wave's drive to secure second place in the SSL will be back between the posts. Kim Mace, Jill Gambino, Paul Gray, Katie Poulin, Kaitland Kelliher and sisters Janet and Kristen Carvalho will go a long way in forming the "nice nucleus" Kent spoke of.

Kent also should have a talented crop of JV players from which to chose. The JV team lost just one game this season, and that was by a goal. Kent sees strength at every position, but expects it may take the younger players a bit longer to adjust to varsity play. Look for the Green Wave in their 13th tourney in a row.

"I don't foresee any great weaknesses," Kent said, "but they have to be ready to go at it next August. We should be in good shape."

Rob Leary, Rockland's boys coach, enjoyed his first year at the helm and is confident the team is just a few players away from qualifying for postseason play.

"I loved it," Leary said of his first year. "We had a great bunch of kids and it was a really enjoyable season. If we can get a few more guys out, we could possibly make the tournament next year."

After getting off to a less than inspiring 1-5 start, the Bulldogs rallied together a 6-3-2 record over the final 11 games, missing the tourney by one game.

"Everything was brand new," Leary said. "We didn't have any scrimmages because of the low numbers (of players). Plus we had some strong teams at the start of the season."

The Bulldogs will be losing 12 seniors, including three of four players selected to the Atlantic Coast League All-Star team. Chris Fritz, Brad Begin and Mike Gagnon are graduating, but junior Mike Porrino, the team's All-Star goalie, has one year remaining.

Another factor that may play into Leary's plan is whether or not Rockland makes the move back to the South Shore League. Leary explained that Rockland is a Division 3 size school playing against Division 1 and 2 schools in the ACL. The Bulldogs did post big victories over Hingham, Whitman-Hanson and Sandwich.

"If we're in the league we're in this year, it'll be very tough," he said.

Meditation/Chi Kung seminar

Sunday, Dec. 3, Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi/Internal Arts will offer a one day seminar in Taoist meditation and chi kung practices. Attendees will learn the Taoist Chi (life force) energy meditation, which is the foundation practice for Tao meditation and chi kung. This approach has been practiced for centuries to calm the spirit and to relax the mind and relieve stress. Included in the seminar will be a chi kung practice noted for strengthening the immune system and for improving posture, balance and coordination. No previous experience is required and beginners are welcome. Jade Forest is located on Route 3A in Cohasset. For rates and further information please call John Loupos at 383-6822.

Varsity gymnastics meeting

There will be a brief varsity gymnastics meeting Monday, Nov. 20, immediately after school in the high school cafeteria.

If you are interested in trying out for the team, please make every effort to attend.

Tryouts will be Monday, Nov. 27, from 2:30 to 5 p.m.

Any further information, call Ruthann at 545-3058.

Draft dates set

It is important that your son/daughter attends a 45-minute evaluation session so that balanced teams can be drafted. Please note the date, time and place from the schedule below:

Saturday, Dec. 2:

Grade 1 boys and girls, 9 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 2 boys and girls, 10:30 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 3 boys and girls, 12:30 p.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 4 boys, 9 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 5 boys, 10 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 6 boys, 11:30 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7 boys, 12:30 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 8 boys, 2 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 4-6 girls, 3 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7-8 girls, 4 p.m. CHS gym up.

Coaches will draft immediately following these evaluations and call you shortly thereafter regarding team status.

Including playoffs, finals and consolations, a total of at least eight games will be played by all participants. League rules provide for an equal division of playing time, emphasize the team concept of play and encourage sportsmanship, rather than just winning. Team rosters, schedules and rules will be provided at the first game.

Thank you for your continued support. We hope to again make refreshments available throughout the season if enough volunteers come forward to manage the concession stands.

Questions or comments, just call Jack Worley at 383-6791.

Ski lessons offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill ski lesson registrations Thursday, Nov. 16, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 3 and 4 p.m., and again in the evening from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, ages seven and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 4. The bus will leave each week from the Town Hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five-week program is $100 and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five-week rental package is $45 per person. A rental fee can be included in the check for the program fee. This is the 20th year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and over the years hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn to ski, or to improve their technique.

Remember: Registration date is Thursday, Nov. 16.

METCO sponsors trip

The Cohasset METCO committee will sponsor a matinee trip to Black Nativity on Dec. 10. The National Center of Afro-American Artists presents its 26th annual production of the Langston Hughes' gospel song play at Tremont Temple's Converse Hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston.

Bus transportation will be provided free of charge. The bus leaves town hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. performance and returns to Cohasset before 7 p.m.

Reserved tickets for first balcony, center seats at $20 per person and must be reserved as soon as possible by calling PSO METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Cliff Chase (383-1574).

Art auction to benefit PSO

An Art Auction, presented by Ross Galleries, Inc. of New York, will be held Friday, Nov. 17, at the Chart House to benefit the Cohasset PSO. Tickets are $25 per person and may be purchased from any PSO executive board member or by calling 383-6911 or 383-6771.

Artwork may be previewed from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., just prior to the auction. All artwork is custom framed and matted. Opening bids are up to 50 percent less than traditional framed gallery prices. A variety of goods and services will also be auctioned.

Music for the evening will be provided by the Grateful Dads. Hors d'oeuvres will be offered, and a cash bar will be available.

Volunteers needed at CHS

Cohasset Junior/Senior High School is seeking help for the library where volunteers are needed to catalogue and type. Anyone who would like to donate some time is asked to call Susan McFadd at 383-6100.

Coffee with the principal

Cohasset Junior/Senior High School principal Curtis Collins will host a coffee hour discussion for parents of junior high school students Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 9;30 a.m. in the conference room.

Entertainment '96 ooks

The Cohasset Teen Center will be selling Entertainment '96 Books as a fundraiser for programs at the center. The card and coupons provide the buyer with opportunities to enjoy two-for-one dinners at many outstanding South Shore and Boston restaurants, Kimball's, The Whiton House, Inn for All Seasons and Michael's Waterfront. There are also discounts for fast-food restaurants, movie theaters, dry cleaning and airline tickets. Call Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 to place an order.

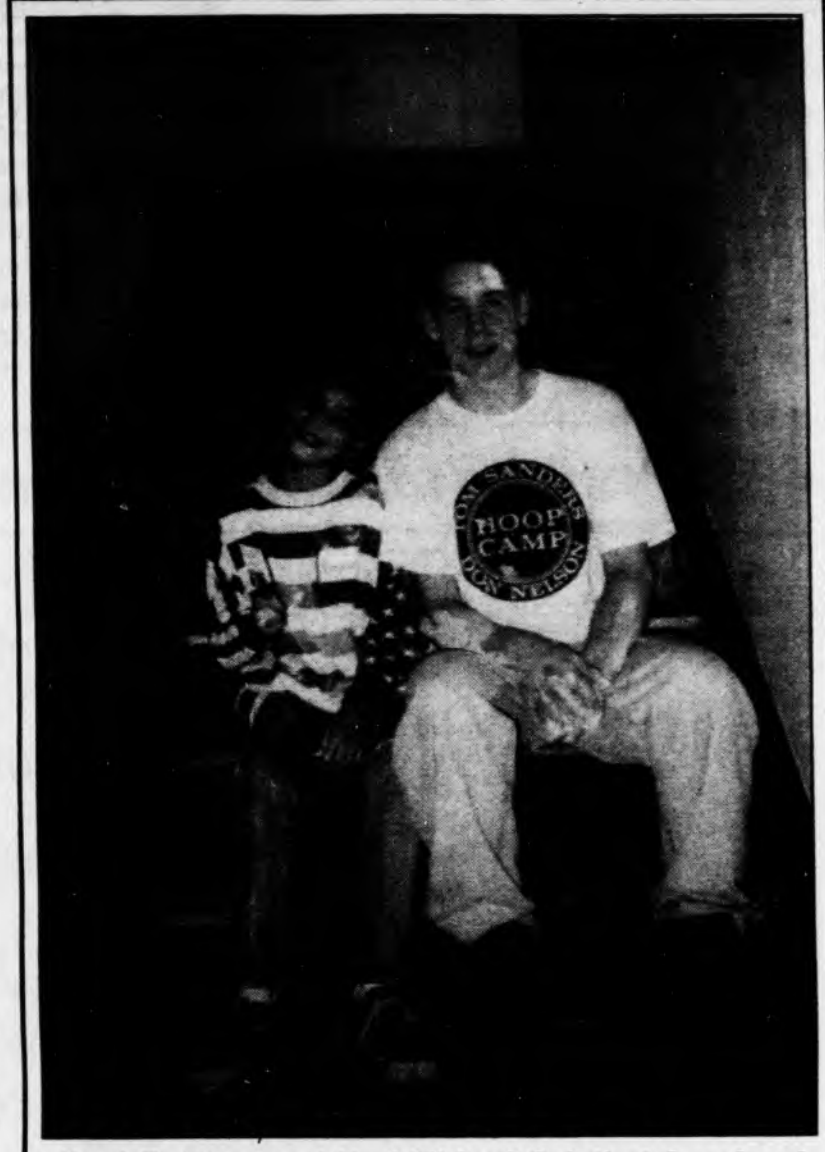
Fleming scholarships

Inquiries about the Mary E. Fleming and John J. Fleming Scholarships, awarded annually to students from Cohasset who are enrolled at Boston College High School, should be directed to Richard D. Gill, director of admissions at BC High School, at (617) 436-3900.

One-way traffic at Osgood

To better ensure the safety of students and their families, the selectmen have approved the Cohasset Police Department's request to authorize Ripley Road as a one-way street during key times Monday through Friday.

As of Monday, Nov. 6, Ripley Road will be one-way northbound during Osgood school arrival and dismissal times (8:45 to 9:15 a.m. and 2:45 to 3:15 p.m.)



Danielle Kupsc and Paul Michael Quintin take a break during the recent City Year Serv-a-thon, a day-long event in which Cohasset High School students pitched in by helping fix up a Dorchester house to be used to provide affordable group housing for recovering substance abusers and their families.

Open house at lightkeepers' house

The Cohasset Lightkeepers will open Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' House on Government Island for a Christmas Open House from 2 to 6 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 10. Everyone is welcome to enjoy hot cider, coffee, hot cocoa and homemade holiday treats. Holiday music and caroling will fill Bancroft Hall. Contributions to the Council on Aging Medical Access program are welcome at the door.

The Council on Aging has been working to develop a comprehensive program of transportation for clients who have scheduled medical appointments. Currently, by combining a variety of available services, this goal has been nearly met, but there are still needs. Contributions made to the Medical Access program will help to fill these gaps and provide for full-time transportation availability for Cohasset residents. Checks payable to COA (MAP) will be graciously received at the door.

Bancroft Hall is the first floor of the old lightkeepers' residence on Government Island, which has been renovated through the efforts of community volunteers and donors.

Seventeenth annual Christmas concert

This season's annual Christmas Concert at First Parish on Saturday, Dec. 9, at 4:30 p.m. will again feature the talented Unicorn Singers creatively directed by Margo Euler. Respighi's "Laud to the Nativity" will be performed with chorus, soloists and chamber orchestrato. It is said to be one of choral literature's most gorgeous Christmas cantatas. This poignant telling of the angel's visit to the shepherds and their joyous journey to Bethlehem, includes sublime moments for men's chorus a cappella; rhythmic jubilation for full chorus, woodwinds, and piano four-hands and intimate moments of duet for solo soprano with English horn, as Mary and the angel sing their part of the familiar complements the arrangement.

As always, festive carol arrangements for all to sing together will be included with an exciting adaptation of Vaughan Williams' beautiful "Fantasia on Christmas Carols." The concert will benefit Father Bill's Place in Quincy, a transitional and emergency shelter for homeless men and women.

Patrons are welcome. A $40 contribution includes two tickets by return mail. Five dollar tickets will go on sale at the church office December 1. The church office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. to answer questions and sign up patrons for the concert. Call 383-1100 for further information.

Paul Pratt Library Corner

Children's tea Nov.30

Children in grades 1-6 are invited to attend a Charles Dickens ("A Christmas Carol") tea Thursday, Nov. 30, from 4 to 5:15 p.m. Characters from the Cohasset Dramatic Club will present to entertain the children with songs and readings.

Tea for children will include appropriate "tea-time" beverages and tea snacks provided by the Friends of the library.

Seating is limited. Call the library at 383-1348 to reserve a space.

Sue Terry, children's librarian, reminds patrons that the Holiday Bookshelf is full. Children and parents are welcome to visit the library to share special children's books about Thanksgiving, Christmas and Hanukkah.

Paul Pratt Library wishes to thank Stephanie St. John for her portrayal of a witch at Halloween time.

Stephanie St. John of Stockbridge Street made a delightful witch during story hour last month at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Stay tuned to the Cohasset Mariner every week for the latest updates on library happenings.

Gulf River meeting

The annual meeting of the Gulf Association featuring a presentation of the history of the Gulf River will be held Wednesday, Nov. 29, at the Lightkeepers' residence on Government Island, Cohasset at 7:30 p.m.

In an illustrated presentation, David Wadsworth, curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, will describe fascinating facts about the long and lively history of the Gulf River.

A brief business session will precede Mr. Wadsworth's presentation, with election of association officers and directors and reports on accomplishments and plans for the coming year.

All members and friends of the Gulf are encouraged to attend the meeting. Attendance is free and open to all.

Conway hosts Harvest Fair

Jack Conway & Company will host its second annual Harvest Fair from 9:30 a.m., to 4 p.m., Saturday (Nov. 18) at its office, 861 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Rte. 3A) in Cohasset. The fair includes a bake sale and yard sale and silent auction with items donated by local businesses. Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset and Scituate food pantries.

Thanksgiving pies are ready!

The Appalachia Service Project thanks all who ordered apple, pumpkin, or pecan pies and cranberry and pumpkin breads from volunteers. Pick-up day is Sunday, Nov. 19, at Second Congregational Church from 11 a.m to 1 p.m. or to arrange for delivery, call Ami Argus at 383-9325.

All proceeds will benefit the Cohasset student trip to Appalachia this summer for a home repair project. High school student volunteers work all year raking leaves, baking pies and washing cars to earn money for transportation and supplies.

Dramatic Club hosts hayride

The cast of Cohasset Dramatic Club's "A Christmas Carol" will be singing on a hayride sponsored by the group at the Cohasset Village Fair Dec. 2. From noon to 2 p.m., the wagon will leave Cohasset town hall for a 15-minute ride. The cost is $1, with all proceeds benefitting CDC, which offers a scholarship to an area youth who goes on to college to pursue a career in the theater.

The cast will be singing carols that are featured in "A Christmas Carol," which will be performed Nov. 25 through Dec. 17 at Cohasset town hall. Days and times are Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for general admission or $8 for groups of 10 or more and may be purchased at Wilbur's Ice Cream and Front Street Books in Scituate and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset. Reservations may be made by calling 545-7514.

Garden Club to meet

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 28, at St. Stephen's Church, beginning with coffee at 9 a.m., followed by the meeting at 9:30 a.m.

The topic will be "Decorating with Holiday Greens." Julie Weiss will present a demonstration with information and techniques for cutting, collecting and using evergreens for holiday designs.

Garden Club house tour set

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its bi-annual House Tour Thursday, Dec. 7, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. From small to grand, the six homes on the tour offer a wide variety of decorating tastes, from a simple but elegant colonial furnished with antiques and needlework to a home featuring 1990s amenities, including a home theater and a lighting system that creates the mood with preprogrammed switches.

From pullman-size kitchens to large family spaces, the tour offers decorating ideas that will suit many different tastes. Tickets are $15 each and may be purchased by calling Peg Smart at 383-6438.

Cohasset Business

Hubert Vanderlugt of Hub Shipping unveils the sign for Ship Cove Park during a special dedication ceremony in September. The park is located in the village between Tedeschi's market and French Memories Bakery. The project was managed by Vanderlugt, with assistance from Edward Mulvey of the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank and the Village Renaissance Committee, a group of volunteers dedicated to beautifying the village. The murals were designed and painted by Cohasset High School students.

Curtis employees take part in AIDS dance-a-thon

Members of Curtis Liquors, Cohasset, will be among 5,000 expected dancers who will participate in the seventh annual AIDS Dance-a-thon this Sunday at Hynes Convention Center. The event is sponsored in part by KISS 108 FM, Newbury Comics, the TAB, Fort Apache, Dr. Martens, Vans and Eastpack.

Last year the pledge event drew more than 4,500 dancers and 400 teams and raised a record $500,000. The dance-a-thon is the second largest fundraiser for AIDS care and prevention.

Anyone interested in sponsoring a Curtis dancer is asked to stop by the store at 792 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, Route 3A.

Pilgrimage to Building #19

On Sunday, Nov. 19, Pilgrim John Shaw, currently residing in Plymouth Colony, will journey to Hingham. He will arrive at about 11:30 a.m. at Building #19, where he will peddle wares at prices fit for the Yankee tradition of frugality.

Jerry Ellis, owner of Building #19, will present Shaw with an oil painting created by award-winning artist Thomas Locker in Plymouth. The painting was used to illustrate the book, "The First Thanksgiving" by Jean Craighead George. This year marks the 375th anniversary of the Pilgrims' landing at Plymouth Rock.

Building #19 recently acquired several of Locker's paintings, which were included in the book. In the past, his paintings have sold for as much as $20,000. Paintings included in the book have already sold for as much as $2,500.

In the spirit of giving thanks to the local community and in celebration of the 375th anniversary of the Pilgrim landing, Building #19 is donating one of the paintings to Plimouth Plantation. John Shaw, who is being played by Richard Pickering, will safeguard the painting for transport to the Plymouth Colony. The remainder of the paintings will be on sale at Building #19.

Halloween behavior decried

Police Chief Brian Noonan said he was "disgusted with the kids in town" who wreaked havoc on Halloween.

He said police officers and cruisers were "egged" and upwards of 20 youngsters were driven home that night.

"I put the parents to blame for the kids hanging out in the Square," Noonan said.

"The kids went from place to place causing vandalism."

He said several fights broke out and the teenagers' use of "foul, foul language" was "discouraging."

"Parents should know where their kids are," he said.

"What really bothered me was a confrontation with Officer Tom DaSilva. He drove an eighth grader home and her language was unbelievable."

Noonan noted that DaSilva has always worked well with the kids in town.

He said there were also several incidents of graffiti around town.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. XVIII No. 4 | COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY | November 23, 1995 | 1-800-649-6661 | 75 cents

Going for the Gold in '96

Cohasset's Matt Collins (far right) celebrates winning the gold medal with crew members Chris Kerber, Jon Moss and Tom Beetham at the 1993 World Rowing Championships in the Czech Republic. Collins is taking a year off from medical school to train for the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

Local rower aims for an Olympic berth

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Matt Collins doesn't quite know how to describe it, but everything clicked for himself and fellow crew members as they raced to a gold-medal victory in the 1993 World Rowing Championships in the Czech Republic.

"There was some kind of spirit in that boat in 1993," said the 28-year-old Cohasset native, who first started rowing while attending UMASS-Amherst in 1987. "Nobody can be out of sync. Otherwise the boat won't go fast."

Collins credits the team's success to the hours of working out with crew mates, Chris Kerber, Jon Moss, and Tom Beetham. Collins, who made the national team from 1992-1994, says rowing involves complete synchronization among the team. While rowing it's absolutely essential to maximize the boat's forward motion while minimizing the backwards motion of the vessel. Any slip up can be the difference between winning and losing.

1993 was a very good year for Collins and he is hoping for the same type of season in 1996. His performances earned him the United States Olympic Committee's (USOC) Male Athlete of the Year in rowing.

With that experience, and several other competitions against some of the best rowers in the world, Collins knows what kind of training he must do to qualify for the U.S. team at April's Olympic Trials in Gainesville, Georgia.

Collins will compete in the 2,000 meter Lightweight Coxless Four Division. In this division, no single rower can weigh more than 160 pounds

Citizens' group hopes to bury landfill request

State deadline for comments is Dec. 1

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

With a decision on the expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill expected around Dec. 1, both sides are stepping up activity in the battle.

Landfill owner Paul Barry has recently submitted some 200 pages of additional information to state authorities, which he wants added to the original application for expansion.

On the other hand, the citizen's group which has fought the landfill for a decade, Stop Any Further Expansion, SAFE, has stepped its already vocal campaign against the project, encouraging residents to call the state office of Environmental Protection, DEP, which will make the decision.

Charging that the expansion will threaten the water supply, the

James Lane barrier is ordered for public safety

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

To prevent an accident, selectmen Monday night ordered boulders be installed at the end of James Lane to block speeding trucks from entering the narrow, one-way street at the wrong end.

Two selectmen angrily said that the barriers were the only recourse left since one family, Edward and Rosemary Fitzpatrick of 68 Pleasant St., has refused to cooperate with neighbors for at least two years.

At one point in the meeting, Edward Fitzpatrick said he would not tell his son, Matthew, to drive more slowly, stating, "That's what you have a police department for."

He also claimed that the erection of the barrier would be a violation of his rights.

Matthew Fitzpatrick lives in an apartment at the property of his parents.

"It's mindboggling," stated selectman Michael Sullivan. "For you to sit here . . . and you have the ability to fix it (the speeding.) It's your tenants. You can get rid of them."

"I don't want to get rid of them and that's my position," snapped

Robert Leonard resigns

After nearly 20 years on the job, plumbing inspector Robert A. Leonard, Sr., has resigned, effective Dec. 1.

Leonard, who is nearly 80, has been Cohasset plumbing inspector since 1978.

Licensed plumbers wishing to apply should contact the selectmen's office or the building inspector.

Walsh sets departure date

Conservation commission secretary Patricia Walsh has resigned effective June 30.

In a brief letter to the conservation commission and selectmen, Walsh said she hopes safety issues will be addressed, in particular the town elevator.

Walsh was recently trapped for 37 hours in the elevator.

A town hall fixture, Walsh is considered extremely knowledgeable about conservation issues.

Pratt returns to committee

With minimal discussion, selectmen Monday night reappointed Glenn Pratt to the cemetery committee.

Pratt resigned from the committee nearly two years ago in a dispute with selectmen over whether to proceed with a new cemetery site.

He has since charged the committee with inactivity and sought to be reappointed.

Town keeps one tax rate

As they gear up for the 1997 fiscal year, which begins July 1, selectmen this week agreed to assess all Cohasset real estate at the same rate.

Although Massachusetts law gives municipalities the choice of assessing commercial or industrial property at a higher rate than residential, the practice is not recommended for communities with little business property.

In Cohasset, 92 percent of the property is classified as residential.

A separate tax rate is only recommended if more than 25 percent of a community's property is industrial or commercial.

The tax rate is now $14.30.

Budgets are approved

In keeping with their desire to start the budget process well in advance of the spring town meeting, selectmen this week approved budgets for animal control and police departments.

Police chief Brian Noonan presented a budget which increases 3.25 percent over the 1996 budget.

The total is $987,000, up from just under $956,800.

The personal services budget rose to $872,000 from $836,500, a 4.25 percent increase.

The general expenses line item is $63,400, up slightly from just under $63,000 for the current fiscal year.

Capital outlays are down slightly, $51,600 vs. $57,300.

The total animal control budget request is $13,000.

All budgets must be reviewed by the advisory committee and approved by town meeting.

Legal bill approved

A bill for $2,966.50 was approved by selectmen this week for town counsel Richard Henderson.

Harbor dredging gets nod

The US Senate passed the Cohasset Navigation Act last week, which will allow harbor dredging to proceed.

However, selectman Peter Pratt said during Monday night's meeting that low levels of mercury and lead have been found in various spots around the harbor.

The town will have to spend between $40,000 and $60,000 for further testing, he predicted.

If the pollution levels are found to be elevated, any dredged material will have to be dumped in an appropriate facility on land, it cannot be dumped in the ocean.

That will likely add some $600,000 to the cost of the project.

Selectmen will seek more information before authorizing money for testing.

Pratt also reported that Sen. John Kerry has suggested a thank you letter to Sen. John Chaffee, the Rhode Island Republican and chairman of the Senate's environmental committee.

According to Pratt, Chaffee was instrumental in seeing the measure approved.

He also credited Cohasset resident and former member of the Republican National Committee, Polly Logan, with using her Washington influence to get the bill passed. Logan is a substantial GOP contributor and active fundraiser.

Gov. Weld will be on the Greenbush rail hot seat

Citizens advisory group to reconvene

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Governor William Weld will be the main speaker at annual South Shore Chamber of Commerce breakfast, Nov. 30.

Chamber Director Terry Fancher said more than 780 local business people will attend the breakfast which will be held at the Lantana in Randolph.

While the Governor is expected to speak on his plans for government re-organization at the sold-out breakfast, Fancher said the Chamber will press Weld to comment on whether the state plans to restore commuter rail service on the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad. Fancher said the Chamber is taking the deadline – state Secretary of Transportation James Kerasiotes set for deciding on Greenbush – seriously. Kerasiotes has promised to announce the decision between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Fancher said the Chamber – which supports Greenbush rail restoration – will use the breakfast as an opportunity to lobby the governor to get a new commitment to this controversial project.

Two months ago, the Chamber hired an outside marketing firm to conduct a telephone survey on Greenbush which showed that 61 percent of those polled favor commuter rail restoration along the existing right-of-way. Fancher said the survey stands on its own, but noted that the Chamber has been building a data base of Greenbush commuter rail supporters and has sent out a plea to "push for Greenbush" to proponents, asking them to write and call the governor or Kerasiotes to show their support for the project.

Fancher also announced this week that the state-appointed Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC), a group made up of representatives from all Greenbush corridor communities, will meet again on Wednesday, Dec. 6 at the Braintree Town Hall. Fancher, who is acting chairman of the CAC wrote to state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe several weeks ago asking that the committee be reconvened and given a chance to provide input on any regional transportation systems currently being studied. The CAC has not met since last February when it voted to support Greenbush rail restoration with a short tunnel under Hingham Square.

Clean catch basin covers

All Cohasset residents are encouraged to clean off any catch basin covers near their homes to prevent flooding and subsequent damage to their properties.

The Highway Department cleans these covers as often as possible, but during this time of year with leaves falling quickly and the current rainfall, the Highway Department cannot continually clean off the basin covers, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

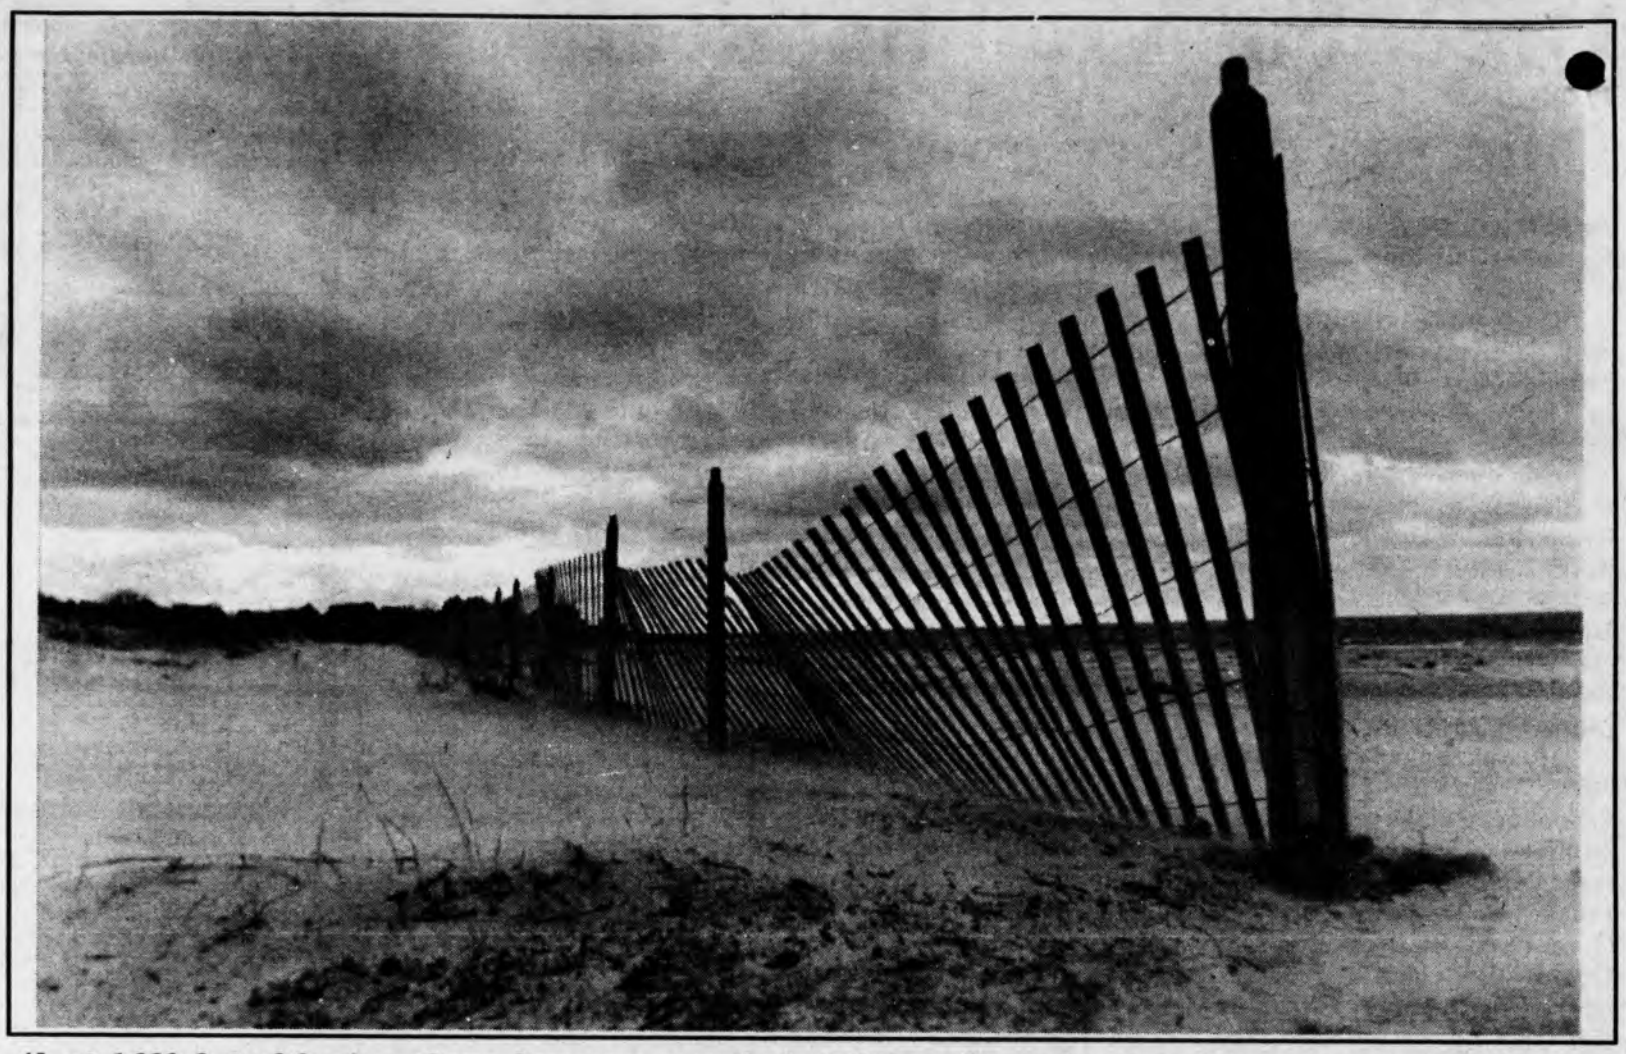
Management plan helps keep beach sandy

Cash donations are needed

By LAURA RICKETSON DOHERTY
Special to the Mariner



About 1,000 feet of fencing, shown here, was recently installed on Sandy Beach to help protect the popular spot from Nor'easters.

"Good fences make good neighbors," noted Robert Frost in one of his much loved poems – but they also can make happy beachgoers. And, if the money and time spent by the Sandy Beach Association on its most recent project is any indication of success, a day at the beach next summer will continue to be as pleasurable as it has been since the association was founded in the early 1900s.

Over the years, Sandy Beach has been many things to many people. To some, there are memories of family get-togethers, castles in the sand, a child's first attempts at swimming. Others remember coffee at sunrise ... dinner at sunset, a walk along its shores, whatever the season.

Some would call it a paradise, an oasis to escape to after a hectic workday. Everything seems so easy and natural that people are apt to take what they have for granted – not so the trustees of the association.

It was after being overwhelmed by the devastation of the "No Name Storm" three years ago, that they recognized the necessity of establishing a beach management plan. The first year, a small expanse of fence was constructed. But, "nature seems to want the sand at Little Harbor," explains Patricia Murphy. The fence was eventually lost.

Subsequent attempts the next year were highly successful. The sand, rather than blowing across the causeway was caught in the fencing. As a result, there was more to spread along the beach for this past summer season.

In September, a post-hole digger set heavy duty poles to which 1,000 feet of fencing was attached. It was not necessary to fence the entire beach, according to Murphy, because one end is protected naturally. So far the fencing has withstood the onslaught of several storms.

It's the Nor'easters that really get us," she says.

One interesting piece of information that many residents may not be aware of is that after these storms, trustees are not able to bring in sand due to the prohibitive costs nor are they able to remove seaweed from the beach.

"We must bury it or put it out to sea," Murphy explained.

In order to keep the beach clean all summer, very specialized heavy equipment must be used. Not only is the use of such equipment expensive but also, in emergency situations, it's not always available. There was one time just before Labor Day weekend when the beach had been devastated by a storm. Trustees tried without success to bring in the necessary equipment. Luckily, Murphy recalls, the weather was stormy and not too many people were thinking of the beach.

Much of what happens at Sandy Beach is made possible through the efforts of volunteers. Citizens like David Chittim who, though now deceased, is remembered for his dedication in making the beach handicap accessible; Doug Celeski who donated much of his time to help with the fencing; and members of the Cohasset High's alternative school, who built a new lifeguard stand.

The board also has been successful in enlisting the help of many teenagers. Through programs such as the senior project at the high school – Doug Schultz, Bobby Morgan and Devin Buick among others executed the colorful murals on two sides of the bath house.

Despite the dedication of these volunteers, every year, it is necessary to raise the money for funding the beach. Contrary to what many think, not a penny spent on beach stickers goes toward this.

The town maintains the parking lot but the beach is the responsibility of the association. There are salaries to be paid for lifeguards, and the cost of maintenance. The fencing project alone amounted to $1,600.

Resident donations are a vital source of income. A recent offer of T-shirts to anyone donating more than $50 has helped. Anyone wishing to help out in these efforts may send a check made out to the Sandy Beach Association at the Cohasset post office.

Gulf River group to meet

The annual meeting of the Gulf Association featuring a presentation of the history of the Gulf River will be held Wednesday, Nov. 29, at the Lightkeepers' residence on Government Island, Cohasset at 7:30 p.m.

In an illustrated presentation, David Wadsworth, curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, will describe fascinating facts about the long and lively history of the Gulf River.

A brief business session will precede Mr. Wadsworth's presentation, with election of association officers and directors and reports on accomplishments and plans for the coming year.

All members and friends of the Gulf are encouraged to attend the meeting. Attendance is free and open to all.

Highway department will be ready for winter when it hits

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

When the first winter snow finally falls on Cohasset, the Cohasset highway department is ready.

Highway surveyor Harold Litchfield said he has stockpiled 300 tons of sand mixed with salt, plus another 100 tons of salt.

The town's four sanders have been mounted on the department's trucks. Also in preparation for snow, workers have sandblasted and painted the five town snowplows. This regular maintenance, he explained, removes rust from the equipment.

For snow removal, Cohasset also relies on nine private contractors who help to plow the 37 miles of accepted town roads, as well as the 11 miles of private ways.

The town's four sanders have been mounted on the department's trucks. Also in preparation for snow, workers have sandblasted and painted the five town snowplows.

The state Department of Public Works has responsibility for the almost four miles of Route 3A that runs through Cohasset, Litchfield said.

For the past 14 years, Cohasset has set the snow removal budget at $45,000. When heavy snow fall exhausts that amount, the department is allowed to use deficit spending until selectmen and the advisory committee approve transfers into the snow removal account.

During the winter of 1993-94, when almost 100 inches of snow fell, Cohasset's snow removal expense reached $100,000, Litchfield said. However, last year's relatively mild winter allowed him to return $5,000.

For the record, Cohasset has already seen the first flakes of winter snow. Mariner weatherman Bob Skilling reports that three-tenths of an inch of snow has been recorded at the weather station in nearby Hingham. He also notes that November is not too early for snow deep enough to plow. Thanksgiving Day, 1989 was noteworthy for the 8 inches of snow that fell during the early morning hours.

Citizens' group hopes to bury landfill request

group is putting considerable political pressure on Gov. William Weld and other state officials. Perhaps the most visible example of this effort is the enthusiastic support SAFE is receiving from State Sen. Robert Hedlund of Weymouth, a Republican with good ties to the Weld administration.

Hedlund spoke at a forum held at the Unitarian Church parish house Sunday night, during which SAFE reiterated its case against the landfill and highlighted the support of sympathetic environmental groups. About 25 people attended the meeting, which will be broadcast on cable TV.

SAFE activist John McNabb took aim at the submission of 200 additional pages of material, stating that the information includes more than simply "minor modifications" allowed by statute and should therefore be rejected.

For instance, he said the new documents include the entire area of the landfill, 27.5 acres, in the area set for expansion of activity, as opposed to 14.2 acres in the initial application.

"I don't see how doubling the size of the site plan is a minor modification," he stated. "This is sort of an outrage."

McNabb added that the information is so complicated, Cohasset officials will not have adequate time to review it prior to the Dec. 1 deadline.

In his remarks, Hedlund praised McNabb, stating that persistent organizing on an issue can pay off in the long run.

He said that unelected bureaucrats, such as DEP officials, "wield tremendous power" on many issues.

The lawmaker praised Cohasset officials and residents for their work to protect the town's water supply, saying, "You don't ever want to see Cohasset get in the situation Weymouth (which has serious water problems) is in."

He said mail at his office is literally running more than 100 -to–one against the CHL expansion.

Hedlund said legislators receive more requests to help find people jobs or invitations to attend events than they do letters on political issues. Therefore, an individualized letter on an issue can have considerable impact.

"Five handwritten, custom letters on an issue is a significant amount," he said, adding that a form letter is more effective than a phone call.

In addition, Hedlund said he will refile a bill drafted by McNabb which will take control of landfill locations from state officials and return it to local authorities. The senator said the Weld administration strongly opposes the measure on the grounds that no community will ever approve a landfill. Hedlund said he disagreed, that some municipalities would welcome a landfill as a source of revenue.

Hedlund opposes a bill now moving through the legislature which will reduce the authority of local health boards.

Selectman Peter Pratt read a statement from Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray was unable to attend the forum. He said the Cohasset Republican was on the Cape that evening.

Pratt read that Murray is "opposed to the expansion under any circumstances" for either accepting trash or construction demolition material.

Two representatives of statewide groups were also on hand to support SAFE.

Amy Perry, an organizer with the Mass. Public Interest Research Group, MassPIRG, pointed out that the dramatic increase in the amount of trash that is being recycled has reduced the need for additional landfills.

Massachusetts residents produce seven million tons of trash each year, an average of one ton per person, according to Perry.

Thirty percent of that is now recycled or reused, as opposed to about five percent several years ago.

Officials hope to see 46 percent of the state's trash recycled by the end of the century.

Perry felt that increased landfill expansion would dilute the recycling efforts and hurt the state's chances of reaching its 46 percent goal.

Claiming that landfills are now undercapacity, Perry said that landfill mining, the removal of some items previously buried, will create additional space, making the CHL expansion unnecessary.

The final speaker, Cynthia Luppi of Clean Water Action delivered a cheerful, upbeat report on how other communities have defeated landfill expansion proposals.

Luppi suggested that meeting with state officials in person is even more effective than individualized letters. Such meetings should be followed up with letters to bureaucrats, political leaders and to local newspapers.

"That's a one two punch that's hard to ignore," she said.

Luppi also stressed that despite the often considerable scientific evidence against specific plans, the political atmosphere in a community is the paramount factor in whether or not a project gets approved.

She cited events in Winchendon, Ashburnham, East Bridgewater, Palmer and Douglas as examples of how groups similar to SAFE have stopped landfills, often at great odds.

Linda Keller, another SAFE activist, urged Cohasset residents to call, write or fax the governor's office before Dec. 1 and request that the landfill expansion be denied. The program will be rebroadcast on cable TV channel 3 on Nov. 29 at 7 p.m.

Barry told the Mariner after the meeting that he would have no comment on any of the statements.

Local anger over flooding doesn't subside

New committee to examine problem

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Last week's heavy rain and surging tides swept stinking sewage into a number of Cohasset basements last week, ruining appliances and furniture and forcing irate residents to disinfect with bleach once the waters had subsided.

Several residents blamed the town for not cleaning out the storm drains and catch basins around James Brook.

Carolyn Sanborn of Summer St. charged that the grates are so full of mysterious items that, "Jimmy Hoffa could be down there for all we know."

Jack Noble, also of Summer St., lost a furnace, a freezer, chain saw and other equipment to the flooding, which he said was unnecessary.

He said he asked the town to thoroughly clean out the grates two years ago, but that a complete job has yet to be done.

Noble said that he another resident, Richard Yocum, cleaned out the drains during the storm.

He accused highway supervisor Harold Litchfield of not doing enough to alleviate the situation.

Litchfield said his team responded to the first call from the police department at 9:30 p.m. last Tuesday evening for a flood on Ingrham Lane.

Noble said when the crew arrived on Summer St., "Your men did more talking than work."

Selectman chairman Merle Brown said "Harold's done a good job, the best job possible under the circumstances."

Brown said the budget restraints caused by Proposition 2 1/2, passed in 1980, have hampered clean up efforts. He said a thorough cleaning of James Brook would cost $1 million, which town meeting voters would be unlikely to approve.

Noble and other residents also questioned the policy of opening the grates at the mouth of the brook.

The conservation commission gave the sewer commission permission to open the grates at various times in order to study the effect of salt water on the meadow.

Noble said the grates should be properly repaired and closed, stating that even at low tides, the area is prone to flooding. He charged that he has asked why the grates must be opened, but has never received an answer.

Selectmen agreed to meet with the sewer commissioners again next week to discuss the situation.

Sanborn said she is frustrated by the "lack of concern," exhibited by town employees for flood water that stayed in her basement for ten hours.

She said she had to disinfect her floors after it subsided, but wondered if the town would reimburse her for buying new insulation, which she said became soaked with polluted water.

Selectman Jane Goedecke suggested that Sanborn's house is known for its tendency to become flooded.

Sanborn conceded she lives on what is likely the lowest point in Cohasset.

Selectman Michael Sullivan urged the creation of a committee, including town administrator Gregory Doyon, the building inspector, a sewer department employee and Litchfield, to look into comprehensive solutions and deliver a report within a couple of weeks.

When someone asked about the existing drainage committee, Brown quipped, "drainage study has gone down the drain."

Garden Club receives award

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset is the proud recipient of the Cornelia W. Watson Bowl, an award given to a group whose work has had a lasting benefit on the community it serves in the area of historical preservation. The club was recognized for its planning of the seaside garden at the Cohasset Lighthousekeeper's cottage, which it also planted and continues to maintain.

The award was announced at the September meeting of the National Council of State Garden Clubs, New England Region, and was presented at the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts president's conference last month.

Happy Thanksgiving

Our building for the future won't keep you from enjoying the present.

By next year's Holiday season, you'll have an all-new South Shore Plaza with a new second level, 100 new specialty stores, a 700 seat food court, and a three-level parking facility. For right now, we've suspended construction so your Holiday shopping wouldn't be any more hectic than it already is. And we've made plenty of room near Jordan Marsh for Santa, and all the children who want to visit him. Thanks for your continued support, and best wishes for a wonderful Holiday season.

Lots of you are wondering where Kathryn (Kate) Muir is these days, since we haven't seen her around CHS this year. Well, Kate graduated one year early (she had to take 60 hours of phys ed to do this folks) and is attending U/Mass Boston.

Kate is the daughter of Andrew and Eileen Muir of Jerusalem Road, who are very proud of her indeed!

Had the nicest conversation with Lisa DiVasta the other day, she and her husband, Vinny, are brand new parents! Please give a huge Cohasset welcome to Luke Daniel DiVasta who was born Nov. 4 and weighed 6 lbs. 14 ozs.

Luke's grandparents are Gary and Eileen Edwards of Hanover and Benedetto and Louise DiVasta of Watertown.

Lisa, Vinny and Luke make their home on Hull Street, be sure to say hello when you see them out "strolling around."

Hunneman & Co./Coldwell Banker is having the most unique contest that we have seen in quite some time, you must check it out! In their window they have 14 baby photos and 14 photographs of the real estate brokers who work there — your job is to match the broker to the baby! They have the prizes to be awarded listed. The next time you are downtown, check it out.

We certainly hope that Bob Pipenbrink is on the mend, he is the park and tree worker who was injured when a 10-foot limb fell on him. Bobby had a collapsed lung and four broken ribs as a result of the accident, could barely breathe.

One thing is for sure, he and his wife Jennifer and their little ones will say a prayer of thanks this Thanksgiving!

Dressing up table trees to be sold at the Cohasset Village Fair, Saturday (Dec. 2), Maria Perroncello and Olga Sawchuk attach an array of tiny ornaments. These will be offered at a boutique in the Second Congregational Church.

Have you noticed "Hap" and Leah Pompeo and their family walking around on cloud nine recently? Would you like to know the reason? She is Sage Leah Wesenberg, the first grandchild! Sage's Mom and Dad, Tara and Rich, live in Reno, Nev., so thus far pictures of beautiful Sage is the closest they have all come to seeing her. You can bet that every one of them is planning a trip to Nevada in the near future.

Sage was born Nov. 6 at 9 p.m., weighed 8 pounds 5 ounces and was 21 inches long.

Rich's lucky parents, Marsha and Bill Wesenberg, have seen Sage, and of course are madly in love with her.

This lucky writer had a chance to see photos of Sage, and she is truly adorable! Best of luck to you all, we know your Thanksgiving will be a wonderful one!

The Second Congregational Church's Sanctuary Choir, along with singers from the congregation, are planning for the holidays with "The Sounds of Christmas," a free concert that they are going to put on Sunday, Dec. 17, at 4 p.m. Donations will be accepted, they will benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry and the Appalachia Service Project. Mark the date so that you don't forget! Bob Leavitt and his crew always do an awesome job!

As previously mentioned, Dec. 2 is the date of the Cohasset Village Fair, and its publicity chairman, Ozzie Ingram, has more news for us this week. This time it's geared to the little ones — Santa Claus in his sleigh on the Cohasset Common, and a holiday hayride circling the historic green, will be the top draws for the youngsters bringing their parents! Jolly St. Nicholas, following a tradi tion of many years, will arrive at the Common about 10:45 a.m. riding a fire engine with sirens blaring. Pictures will be taken while the children deliver their lists, good for the scrapbooks! (Proceeds from Santa's appearance will go to help fund Cohasset's part in the Appalachia Service Project which sends as many as 80 local teens and adults to Kentucky yearly.

After the chat with Santa, the kiddos can enjoy a Holiday Hayride around the Common, sponsored by the Cohasset Dramatic Club. It really is a day not to be missed, make plans!

Santa is going to be mighty busy in Cohasset this year, you mustn't forget the Jingle Bell Walk sponsored by the South Shore Community Center. It will be held this Friday (Nov. 24), beginning at 1:30 p.m. with Santa's arrival in Cohasset Harbor via boat! He will hand out Jingle Bells, then get in a fire truck with his elves and proceed down Elm Street (with all of us following). When you arrive at the Center, its gym will provide cookies and beverages. There will be a hayride on the common from 2:15 'til 3:45 p.m., after which the Cohasset Common Tree Lighting will take place. It really is a great day — stroll downtown, shop among the stores, browse at the Art Center where art and craft works will be sold, have pix with Santa at the Center, visit the Center's nursery school's three holiday workshops, enjoy Christmas music and carols in the Center's gym (bring your can goods to the Cohasset Food Pantry).

At 3:45 p.m. there will be the drawing for the raffle in the Center's gym. In the event of inclement weather the walk will be held Nov. 25, with the same itinerary.

That's the news for this week, there should be plenty to share after this week's festivities, be sure to give me a call.

Have a wonderful Thanksgiving!!

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

MOVING AND MONEY

QUESTION: Now that we have sold our home and bought a new one, we have to make the big move. How can I keep the cost of this household move from snowballing?

ANSWER: First, get estimates from several movers in your neighborhood. Then compare. Though tariffs are regulated by law, they do vary because there are several classes of carriers.

Make sure you get in writing an agreement on the declared valuation before you release your household goods, in other words, before he starts to load his van. To make sure your household goods are fully covered, you must declare their actual 100% cash value.

Obituaries

Ralph Smith

Fifty-two year resident

Ralph Smith, 83, of Cohasset, died Nov. 15 at Scituate Ocean Manor after a long illness.

Born in Boston, he lived in Cohasset for more than 52 years.

Mr. Smith was a World War II veteran and served as a Merchant Marine during the war, achieving the rank of first mate. He sailed aboard ships that transported troops, equipment and supplies to all three theaters of war in the Atlantic, Pacific and Mediterranean and endured bombings and submarine attacks.

For a time he was stationed in the Panama Canal Zone. He also worked for the War Shipping Administration and repatriated Marines who were sick or wounded or whose ships had been sunk.

Mr. Smith was active in the cause of acquiring veterans' rights for those who served in the Merchant Marine, which is not a military unit, during World War II. Those rights were finally awarded through a Supreme Court ruling several years ago.

Mr. Smith was a retired employee of the Boston Naval Shipyard, serving there following his years of Merchant Marine service until 1975. While at the shipyard, he produced illustrations for the shipyard newspaper and discovered his talent as a watercolorist. He was cited for his work in an South Shore Art Center exhibition, although he had no formal art education.

As a teenager he worked as a deck hand aboard various pleasure boats along the Massachusetts coast, including the Constellation, a yacht owned by the father of the late Eleanor Sears, a prominent Boston sportswoman.

Mr. Smith worked for American Export Lines, traveling to the Mediterranean and the Black Sea.

He was the husband of the late Anne (Weston) Smith and leaves many friends.

A graveside service conducted by the Rev. Richard Dutton was held Nov. 20. Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Donations in his memory may be made to First Baptist Church, 656 Country Way, North Scituate 02066 or to charity.

Whoever heard of a delicious Landmark?

Pool challenge at teen center

A Staff Pool Challenge will be held at the Teen Center Friday, Nov. 24. Over the holiday weekend the center will be open Friday night only. From 7 and 10 p.m., teens wishing to take on the local "pool sharks," and Teen Center staffers Corey Hughs and Kerri Quinn, along with those who wish to cheer their friends on, are invited to attend the event.

Prizes will be awarded to those who succeed in winning out over the two top-notch pool players, including gift certificates to Good Sport, the Strawberry Parfait and Victoria's.

New dance class offered

South Shore Community Center has announced that Session II dance classes will begin the week of Dec. 4. A new dance class with Donna Joyce has been added, and will be held Tuesdays, starting Dec. 5, from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Dance classes are offered for young people in Grade 4 through high school. The Dance Company Class is designed for students who wish to pursue dancing to a higher and more technical level and offers more structured training in ballet, jazz and creative modern dance technique. One full year of dance experience is required or teacher permission. Proper dance attire and shoes are required. Call 383-0088 to register.

Holiday offerings at shop

Stuffed animals, antique china and jewelry and holiday dresses are on sale at the new Cohasset Consignment Shop, which is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., just in time for the holidays. Proceeds support Social Service League nursing and counseling.

Kilts from Scotland, handknit sweaters from around the world, antique china from Bavaria, silver jewelry from Mexico and handmade German yuletide decorations are also featured at the shop, which is located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza.

Volunteers are needed and are asked to call manager Andy Merrill at 383-0771.

Would you please pass the furmety, Governor

"Would you please pass the furmety, Governor."

"You boiled it just right in the pipkin, Mary."

I'll have a little more aqua vita, Susanna."

It's possible the conversation went a bit like this that first Thanksgiving Day in Plymouth 37 years ago.

About 140 people sat at the three-day harvest–90 Indian men and 50 Pilgrims.

And if you happen to be the cook and you think you're going to work hard on Thursday, at the first Thanksgiving only four women did all the cooking.

They roasted wildfowl, turkeys and deer in English fashion. They boiled cod and sea bass in Indian tradition.

They cooked breads and fruit tarts in a skillet over an open fire.

For dessert they made furmety by beating wet wheat in a sack with a washbeetle, boiling it overnight, soaking it on a fire, boiling it in cream in a pipkin, then topping it with sugar.

Their guests were not worried about their cholesterol level or the fat content in the food.

They ate to their hearts' content then washed it all down with beer called aqua vita.

They scooped food from wooden bowls with their hands. There were knives, a few spoons, but no forks.

Huge napkins were very important.

It was a whole year after the Pilgrims first put their tattered boots on Plymouth rock before the first Thanksgiving.

Their tiny overcrowded Mayflower had tossed like a toy boat upon the fierce Atlantic waves for two months.

Their trip had been stormy and long. Their arrival was dismal and discouraging. The first winter saw more than half their number starve or freeze to death. Their first harvest was a disaster.

But the second year, with the help of the Indians, their fields bore fruit.

Instead of saying–"It's about time, God"–they thanked Him for His blessing.

It is now over three and a half centuries later.

We'll go a-hunting in a well-stocked supermarket and spear our frozen turkey with icy fingers.

Instead of checking our meat for arrowheads, we'll read the labels for the fat and MSG content.

Instead of cooking herbs and roots for days, we might pop a pouch of peas in boiling water.

Instead of skillet baked bread, we might brown and serve some rolls.

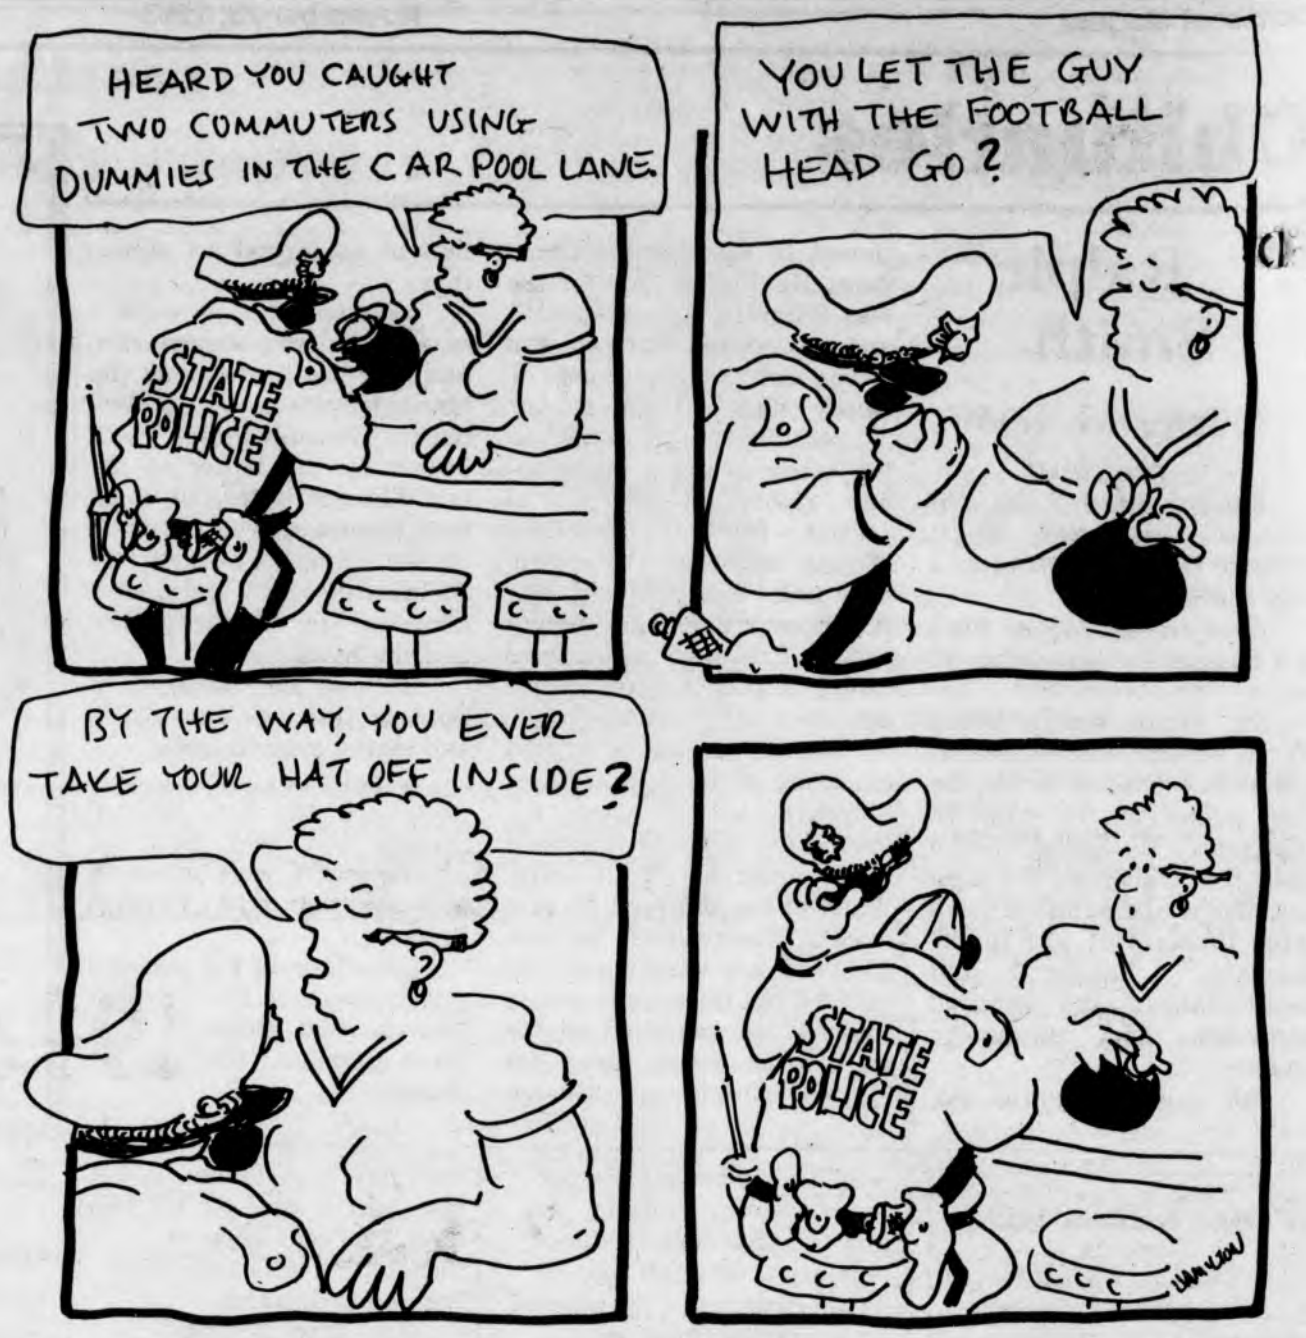
Instead of beating wet wheat for furmety, we might heat up a pre-baked apple pie.

But the warmth of Thanksgiving is still the same.

We ask nothing more from it than a high school football game in the morning, a turkey dinner at two and the warmth of our family around us all day.

Wouldn't this be a perfect Thanksgiving Day 1995. The Skippers beat the Pirates in the morning, a perfect turkey dinner with a loving family in the afternoon and a feeling of contentment with life in the evening.

Happy Thanksgiving!



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Town Counsel 'search' decried

To the Editor:

In the few short weeks since Town Counsel Richard Henderson announced his intention of stepping down, and Town Moderator George Marlette registered his intention to seek the position, a curious phenomenon has emerged. The telephones at our residence have rung non-stop with calls from an extensive and diverse group of Cohasset citizens applauding Marlette's decision and pledging support. On the other hand, reaction from our elected Board of Selectmen to Marlette's stated intention has been, to paraphrase Li'l Abner, "confusin' but amusin'."

Much like a cast from a Norman Lear sitcom, these elected 'despot' wannabes have trivialized the application of a highly-credentialed local applicant, and burnt up the phone wires, full of indignation that this naive citizen would not realize that the "nation-wide search" for a Town Counsel would in fact be the customary politically driven 'anointment' of an individual or individuals (to use street parlance) in the tank with our politically infested board.

Just as Colonists observed that "taxation without representation is tyranny," so too is this latter day abuse of power insulting and unfair to the taxpayers of our town.

To those readers who have already construed this letter as a lobbying effort in behalf of my son, I would like to set the record straight. Frankly, I cannot imagine why he (or anyone) would want the job. It would require a reduction in his typical hourly rate for legal services, and bring with it an aggravation quotient of large proportion. But then, George ran for Town Moderator (despite my incredulity) and in his years of service has spent hour after hour in meticulous research and preparation for meetings, fielded hundreds of phone calls, opened and demystified the Town Meeting process, conducted meetings with fairness and good judgment and participated at his own expense in statewide moderator workshops and events ... all this for 92 cents a year after taxes! George, like so many Cohasset residents, loves Cohasset, and he understands and values the uniqueness of our beautiful town. And, like the many residents and prior boards of selectmen and concerned citizens who have fought for decades to retain the character of this town in the face of many complex contemporary social, fiscal and environmental issues, understands that no cookie-cutter, big-ticket, impersonal legal experts will truly resonate to the particular dynamic of our town, or, for that matter, give a damn!

Greenbush doesn't make financial sense

To the Editor:

According to the Project Managers of the Big Dig, 70 percent of the cars on the Southeast Expressway (about 40,000) are actually traveling through Boston, not commuting into Boston. Therefore, putting in the Greenbush Line to take 850 South Shore cars off the road is not and never will solve the true root of the congestion problem on the Southeast Expressway.

Taking possibly as many as 850 cars off the road will not make even the tiniest dent in the pollution and congestion problems of the Southeast Expressway. Why should seven towns on the South Shore take on a $300 million expenditure which will require tax subsidies forever, introduce noise pollution and dangerous intersections, with a terminus within the flood plain of the North River when this project is totally off the mark in solving the problem it claims to be addressing? To be cost effective, a $300 million expenditure should be finding a solution which impacts at least 20,000 cars, not 850.

The other problem the Greenbush Line will not ever solve is the commute from the South Shore to the Copley Square, Kenmore Square or the Medical Centers beyond the Fenway. We already have three public transit systems terminating on or near South Station (the commuter boat included.) If you are going to add value to public transportation, we should be instituting express bus service from the South Shore directly to the Copley Square neighborhood. In addition, the ridership on the P&B bus, as well as the commuter boat, would increase substantially if an express service was established from South Station to Copley Square.

Spending $300 million to lay 18 miles of track to benefit 850 constituents is not a sound financial decision no matter what the environmental benefits may be. Any person making a proposal such as this to their Board of Directors in the for profit business world would be escorted right out the door. There is no reason in this time of fiscal responsibility that the taxpayers should settle for this type of decision making.

Citizen of the Year nominations open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual "Citizen of the Year" Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Joseph D. Buckley for, among other contributions, his work behind the scenes helping the town's senior citizens wade through the paper work to access health insurance benefits.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1995 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 29. Please see nomination form on page 11.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1995 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1996.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure, or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the third person honored as Citizen of the year, joining past recipients:

1993: T. Gerard Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister, usher at St. Anthony's Church and more.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), a state-administered program made up of trained volunteers who help seniors understand the complexities of the health-care system).

James Lane barrier. . .

Fitzpatrick. "You people are trying to take away my rights."

Sullivan promptly made a motion urging that the barriers be installed immediately, "because it's a public safety issue. It's gone on for two years. I just get the sense here that people are trying to be difficult."

When selectman Martha Gjesteby said she was worried about the possibility of legal action, Sullivan said the town would worry about that when it happened.

A January 18, 1994 letter from town counsel Richard Henderson to town administrator Gregory Doyon, stated that the town does have the authority to erect a barrier and that the Fitzpatricks, with access to Pleasant St., have no legal right to use James Lane.

Selectman Jane Goedecke supported Sullivan, calling Fitzpatrick's attitude "deplorable. If we have the right to block that road, I'm going to block it."

The motion passed unanimously.

When Fitzpatrick stated that he has had no communication with his neighbors since January, 1994, Goedecke stated, "They probably think it's a waste of time."

Neighbors indicated that was the case.

James Lane resident Scott Smith, accompanied by a contingent of some ten neighbors, requested the barriers, claiming that Matthew Fitzpatrick, his friends and family, regularly terrorize residents and endanger children by speeding along James Lane.

According to Smith, four discussions with the Fitzpatricks have produced no results. He said some 14 children live on or near James Lane.

The road is narrow, heavily settled and contains no sidewalks. In winter, Smith said snow piles prevent more than one car passing at a time.

Fast driving is an unnecessary hazard, he stated.

Smith said that the parents have been uncooperative in getting their son to slow down.

He said that Rosemary Fitzpatrick threatened to park vehicles along James Lane, blocking driveways, if a barrier is erected.

Goedecke said that no vehicle may block traffic on any public way, or a driveway. Illegally parked cars will receive tickets or be towed.

Smith said that residents and their guests never park on the street.

Robert Hillman, 20 Norfolk Road, said he has no objection to the boulders, which will be placed at the rear of his property.

It's Happening

Concert will benefit Father Bill's

The First Parish Unitarian Church will host its annual Christmas Concert Saturday, Dec. 9, at 4:30 p.m. in the Meeting House on the Common. The concert, featuring Margo Euler and the Unicorn Singers, will benefit Father Bill's Place, a homeless shelter in Quincy.

Tickets are $5 and will be available at the church office (383-1100) Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., beginning Dec. 3. Patrons will receive two tickets for a $40 contribution.

Come to the lightkeeper's house Dec. 10

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation will hold its second annual Christmas Open House Sunday, Dec. 10, from 2 to 6 p.m., at Bancroft Hall in the Lightkeeper's House on Government Island. Musical groups will sing carols, and homemade refreshments will be provided. Donations to the Council on Aging Medical Access Program, which provides transportation to medical appointments for Cohasset residents, will be accepted at the door.

Poinsettias are for sale

The First Parish youth group will sell poinsettias at the Parish House during the Village Christmas Fair planned for Dec. 2. Red and pink plants will be available in six-inch pots for $10 each, or three for $25.

Plants are cash and carry or may be preordered by calling the Parish House at 383-1100, Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Nov. 30 is the deadline for orders.

Coastal Christmas House Tour set for Dec. 7

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will showcase six unique homes reflecting a wide variety of styles and sizes on their Coastal Christmas House Tour, which will be held Thursday, Dec. 7 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

A recently remodeled ranch with its higher ceilings now captures a view of the ocean and offers a more gracious living space, while a tiny home overlooking the harbor is a treasure trove of colors, patterns and textures.

A larger Jerusalem Road house has the space for amenities such as a home theater, while another home, overlooking Little Harbor, was designed to capture the vistas from ledge to water and shoreline.

A colonial home features a collection of intricate Santa Claus figures, handmade needlework and sets of Noah's Arks. Another home off Jerusalem Road showcases a large colonial fireplace that dominates a kitchen decorated with bright, cheerful colors.

All six homes, which range from casual to refined, offer decorating ideas that are creative and stylish. Advance tickets are $15 at South Shore Community Center or by calling Peg Smart at 383-6438. Tickets on the day of the tour are $20 and will be sold at the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common beginning at 10 a.m.

Refreshments will be served at the church from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Proceeds will benefit the club's scholarship fund and other civic projects such as the Lighthousekeeper's home.

Winterfest '95 set for Dec. 2

Winterfest '95, the fourth annual exhibit and sale of traditional American crafts, will be held Saturday, Dec. 2, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Hingham Junior High School, Main Street, Hingham. The show will feature more than 40 professional artisans, many of whom have appeared in national magazines such as Country Home, Early American Life, Country Living and Yankee.

Artisans include miniature quiltmaker Kate Adams of Kennebunkport, Maine; gold and silver jewelry artisans Lynn Abravanel and Patty Legrand of Waban; Kenneth Henderson of Frankfort, Maine, who specializes in reproduction Early American redware and Denise and Rick Pratt from Loudonville, Ohio, who create unusual willow furniture.

Winterfest '95 offers an opportunity to purchase museum-quality folk art, wooden dolls dressed in period costumes, decoys, reproduction Shaker and Colonial boxes, porcelain jewelry, scrimshaw, pewter and one-of-a-kind woven baskets, along with many other fine crafts created by nationally known artisans.

Admission is $3 for adults and $1 for children under 12. A luncheon and refreshments will be available in the Holiday Café. The event is sponsored by Hingham Historical Society. Proceeds will help to support ongoing activities of the Society. Winterfest '95 is wheelchair accessible.

Diversity committee to meet

The Cohasset Diversity Committee, affiliated with the Cohasset PSO, will hold an informational meeting on Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 7:30 p.m. at Second Congregational Church. The purpose of the meeting is to review past accomplishments and discuss plans for the upcoming year.

All those interested in sharing ideas and supporting upcoming activities are welcome. For further information, contact Susan Etkind at 383-6602 or Nancy Herlin at 383-1463.

Jingle Bell Walk set for Nov. 24

The South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, which has become a Cohasset tradition, on Friday, Nov. 24, beginning at 1:30 p.m.with the arrival of Santa Claus and his elves by boat in Cohasset Harbor (Border Street. After he distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride on a fire truck. The walk will continue along the sidewalks of Elm and Main Street.

At 2 p.m. the SSCC welcomes residents to share cookies and beverages and join in a holiday sing-a-long with neighbors and friends. Choruses from local schools and churches will participate.

The Holiday Workshop will be open for young shoppers a the Nursery School to purchase small gifts, and Santa will be upstairs in the Center to pose for pictures with children and their parents. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers.

The bells of St. Stephen's Church will play from 2 to 4 p.m., and there will be hayrides around the Common from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Festivities will culminate on Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree.

The raindate is Nov. 25.

Hopeman is dedicated to improving game

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Amber Hopeman had a good feeling about Cohasset High's girls soccer team during the first few weeks of the season, but it wasn't until the Lady Skippers faced Division 3 state champion Hanover for the second time that the 16-year-old senior realized just how good the team was.

"After losing 5-0 in Hanover I think they were really cocky," said Hopeman who moved to Cohasset this August from Kansas City. "We dominated most of the game and went right at them. Once we got into the tournament we started playing really well."

Hopeman wound up playing a big roll in the Skippers' season. She scored two goals and added seven assists, but it was her play at midfield and stopper which earned her South Shore League All-Star honors.

Unlike the Kansas City area, where she played soccer and was named team MVP at the Barstow School, Hopeman says there is a big difference in the way girls approach the game. "Here in Massachusetts the girls seem more dedicated," she said.

Hopeman played forward during her junior year at Barstow and drilled home 10 goals. She was a league All Star and the team's top scorer as well.

Hopeman moved to Cohasset the day before school started. Unfortunately she missed the two weeks of preseason practices leading

Skippers are set for Hull

Knudek expects strong outing against Pirates

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

First-year head coach Bob Knudek isn't about to come out and say the Cohasset High football team is going to defeat Hull in Thursday morning's annual Thanksgiving Day game at the Pirates' home field.

What Knudek will tell you is that his young Skipper club has improved since its last game against Dover-Sherborn more than a week ago.

"We don't tell the kids you're going to win the game," said Knudek. "We prepare them with a game plan to follow if they want to win. They're confident that they themselves are improving this week."

More than anything, though, Knudek wants to see his Cohasset team play a tough game, win or lose.

"Our goal is to go down there and be competitive," he said. "I think it's going to be a dogfight."

Going to Hull for a football game is an experience unto itself. The high school field is located on Hull Gut, making the weather a major factor to consider before any matchup. Knudek, who is also a sailor, is well aware of the affect it can have.

"I know if it's 30 miles per hour down here it's a lot more down on the Gut," Knudek said.

A strong wind doesn't necessarily mean the Skippers would abandon their throwing game for the run. Instead Cohasset may opt for short

Turkey Day fearless football predictions

Okay, we know you have more... things on your mind then football games but on Thursday at 10 a.m. just about every high school student in the area will be attending a football game or playing in one.

In addition, many alums will make the long journey home to watch their alma matter in action.

With this in mind, Joe and I have spoken to football experts from here to Green Bay to compile a list of fearless Thanksgiving Day predictions.

We cover most of the teams on a regular basis so you know our info is tops. Anyway, here goes.

Marshfield at Duxbury

Dave: If the Rams win this game they will be Atlantic Coast League champs and will be punch their ticket for the Division III Super Bowl. And it says here that the Rams will run over and around the Green Dragons for an easy victory on Turkey Day.

In addition to larger and more talented players, karma is also on the Rams side ever since they beat Hingham on a last-second 35-yard field goal.

This is one is a lock for Marshfield.

Final score - 28-10 for Marshfield.

McKee

Reardon

Norwell at Hanover

Dave: As a former Hanover High graduate, I would like to see the Indians prevail on Turkey Day and unfortunately for Norwell High fans, this will happen.

The Indians have more talent at the skill positions and the Clippers are without one of their captains in starting fullback Jamie Kean.

Final score - 21-7 for Hanover.

Joe: At 8-1 on the season, don't expect the Indians to be distracted by what should be a huge crowd.

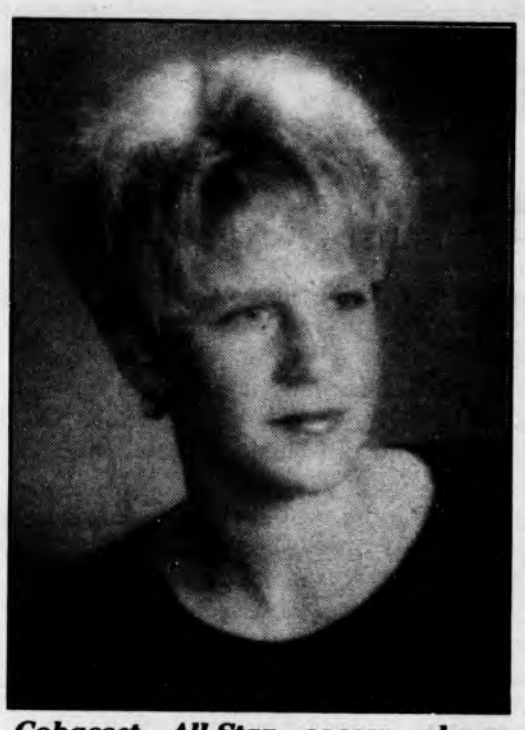
into the season. Hopeman says she didn't know what to expect when she went to soccer practice on the first day of classes.

"Iwas nervous," she said. "I had no idea what the girls soccer team was like. After the first practice I thought this was going to be a good thing. I seemed to connect well with the other girls."

Hopeman was also impressed with head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark, who listened and was genuinely interested in her input. "She was real easy to get along with," Hopeman said. "Being an experienced player I was able to voice my opinion. She let me do that and I appreciated it."

Hopeman proved to be a physical player on the field for Cohasset. Opposing offenses had their hands full in moving the ball past mid-field when Hopeman was in the area. But as adept as she is at the position, Hopeman realizes what her "major weakness" is and is determined to get past it.



Cohasset All-Star soccer player Amber Hopeman was a big reason the Lady Skippers qualified for the Division 3 South Sectional tourney.

"I'm not slow, but there are times I get beat," she said. "But I'm working on that now. It's not something I can't overcome."

Hopeman is a versatile player, able to help a team at practically any position. She also has good control of "air balls," an aspect of the game she has worked to improve in the past. Instict, part of the game that can't be taught, has always been one of Hopeman's strong suits.

"I know what I'm going to go with the ball when I get it," she said.

Originally a "...little Tomboy who went out and played baseball with the boys," Hopeman got a somewhat late start at soccer when she joined a team as an 8 year old. She admits she wasn't good, but had fun playing the sport.

After a while Hopeman began to dedicate much of her sports time to improving her skills. She remembers kicking a soccer ball against the garage door until dinner time. After dinner Hopeman would head right back outside and continue where she left off.

"I just love the game," she said. "Individual sports have their own thing about them, but I like getting out on the field and playing with other people."

Hopeman is pleased with her high school career after being named to All-Star teams in three different leagues. She is currently playing for a select team called the Greater Boston Bolts. During the winter the squad mainly trains and works on skills that'll be used when the team moves outdoors in the spring.

Hopeman believes the only way to play at a higher level is by kicking the ball and playing in games year-round. "I think if you want to be good you have to be dedicated to the sport," she said. "In order to be successful you have to give it your all."

Local rower aims for an Olympic berth

and the average of the four must be no higher than 155 pounds. It will be the first time the division is included in the Olympics. Collins agrees with the International Rowing Committee's belief that the inclusion of the category opens up the competition to a broader range of rowers

"This is seen as a good move by the International Rowing Committee," Collins said.

His typical day of training leaves little time for any other activities. Collins begins with the first of two workouts at 6:30 a.m., which lasts for two hours. He then heads off to his part-time job in the lab at Brigham and Women's Hospital before the 3 p.m. afternoon session.

Cohasset goalkeeper Jason Buckley makes a leaping save against Hanover during the Skippers' Division 3 South Sectional quarterfinals.

Collins decided to take his final year of medical school off to train for the Olympics. He has all his general required courses completed and only has to complete his electives. Collins is confident enough in his team's abilities to put school on hold and aim for the trials.

"I think I have a good enough chance," he said.

Collins does the majority of his training on the Charles River in Boston. Even when the temperature dips during the winter months, he continues to head outdoors, though Collins admits "everything warms up but your fingers." The only time Collins does head inside is when ice and waves bring about the chance for the boat to swamp. Collins then trains on a rowing machine which simulates rowing an actual boat.

Collins, though, would rather train in more favorable conditions and said he has "contingency plans to head south if the weather becomes too cold." Tentative plans have also been set to train in Tampa, Florida come January.

Although he and the rest of the crew may race against other crews if the opportunity arises, Collins knows of no formal regattas on the horizon between now and the trials. He is able to simulate racing by rowing alongside another group, but even though it is beneficial, Collins needs only a watch to get an idea as to how much of an effort he is putting out during a specific workout.

"We know what's expected of us," Collins said. "Certainly, though, having a boat next to you pushes you that much more."

With several national teams, including squads from Canada and Holland, the Head of the Charles Regatta provides a "good indication of how your training's going."

Collins is very familiar with the famous competition, having rowed in every one since 1987. In that span Collins has won twice and finished third this year.

While a gold medal in the Olympics brings with it fortunes in many sports, rowing is not considered one of them. The expenses involved with the sport can be steep, particularly if a rower doesn't own a boat. Collins currently trains with Moss, a Wellesley resident who was on the world championship team with him. They are able to borrow boats from the Boston Rowing Association, but the costs of travelling to competitions, coaching and massage therapy.

"This sport and some others are amateur compared to others which allow athletes to make their living from them," Collins said.

The Pilgrim Co-Operative, a local bank, has stepped forward and agreed to match funds up to $1,500 that Collins raises in expense money.

With the sacrifices he has made and work he has put into training for the trials, making the Olympic squad would be a truly satisfying experience for Collins.

Ski lessons offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill ski lesson registrations Thursday, Nov. 16, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 3 and 4 p.m., and again in the evening from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, ages seven and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 4. The bus will leave each week from the Town Hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five-week program is $100 and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five-week rental package is $45 per person. A rental fee can be included in the check for the program fee. This is the 20th year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and over the years hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn to ski, or to improve their technique.

Remember: Registration date is Thursday, Nov. 16.

SPORTS

Wrestling lessons offered

The South Shore Community Center will be offering wrestling Monday, Dec. 11, from 4 to 5 p.m. and 5 to 6 p.m. for eight weeks under the direction of Peter Buckley. Students will learn the basic take-down moves, the three starting positions and live wrestle. (Come in sweats and sneakers.) Call 617-383-0088.

Draft dates set

It is important that your son/daughter attends a 45-minute evaluation session so that balanced teams can be drafted. Please note the date, time and place from the schedule below:

Saturday, Dec. 2:

Grade 1 boys and girls, 9 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 2 boys and girls, 10:30 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 3 boys and girls, 12:30 p.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 4 boys, 9 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 5 boys, 10 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 6 boys, 11:30 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7 boys, 12:30 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 8 boys, 2 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 4-6 girls, 3 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7-8 girls, 4 p.m. CHS gym up.

Coaches will draft immediately following these evaluations and call you shortly thereafter regarding team status.

Including playoffs, finals and consolations, a total of at least eight games will be played by all participants. League rules provide for an equal division of playing time, emphasize the team concept of play and encourage sportsmanship, rather than just winning. Team rosters, schedules and rules will be provided at the first game.

Thank you for your continued support. We hope to again make refreshments available throughout the season if enough volunteers come forward to manage the concession stands.

Questions or comments, just call Jack Worley at 383-6791.

Meditation/Chi Kung seminar

Sunday, Dec. 3, Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi/Internal Arts will offer a one day seminar in Taoist meditation and chi kung practices. Attendees will learn the Taoist Chi (life force) energy meditation, which is the foundation practice for Tao meditation and chi kung. This approach has been practiced for centuries to calm the spirit and to relax the mind and relieve stress. Included in the seminar will be a chi kung practice noted for strengthening the immune system and for improving posture, balance and coordination. No previous experience is required and beginners are welcome. Jade Forest is located on Route 3A in Cohasset. For rates and further information please call John Loupos at 383-6822.

SS Community Center events

Girls Night Out, ages 8-13, Friday, Dec. 1, 5:30-7:30 p.m.

Come join Ruthann, George, Gina, and Liz for a fun-filled evening of bowling, obstacle course, gymnastics, make your own pizza.

Everyone receives something for participating and prizes are given out for bowling and obstacle course winners. Cost is $16. No drop ins.

EXTRA POINTS/Dave McKee & Joe Reardon

Hanover quarterback Brad Baronas has too many weapons for the Clippers to stop.

Hingham at Scituate

Dave: Both teams are a little short in the size department but can run the ball. Hingham plays in the larger Atlantic Coast League and has held their own against teams like Whitman-Hanson and Marshfield (all Hingham had to do to beat Marshfield was down the ball on the final play but alas, the Harbormen fumbled and lost on a field goal.) But the Sailors will be sky-high with the return of coach Phil Pisano, who had some health problems earlier in the season.

The Harbormen will find a way though in a tough battle.

Final score - 17-7 for Hingham.

Plymouth South at Silver Lake

Dave: As a long-time Laker follower nothing would be finer than to see the SL gridmen roll to a victory in front of the home fans. And with running back Tucker Apple and a sophomore QB sensation named Bond, Jon Bond, it should be a day of celebration in Laker land.

Final score - 24-14 for Silver Lake.

Whitman-Hanson vs. Abington

Joe: The Green Wave always gives the Panthers more than they bargain for on Turkey Day. Jim Kelliher's Abington squad will be that much tougher with its 6-3 record, strong defense and offensive line. Then there's that bothersome LaPointe character in the backfield. But even though they won't be defending their Super Bowl title, W-H should still edge the Wave after winning a 12th consecutive league title.

Rockland vs. Randolph

Joe: To put it simply, the Blue Devils will have to put the clamp down on the Bulldogs' Tyrone Jefferson. Even if they manage to stop Jefferson, Rockland is still too strong on both sides on the ball and will win the last game before moving to the South Shore League next fall.

Cohasset vs. Hull

Joe: It can get chilly in Skipper country, but in Hull, weather conditions get downright nasty. Cohasset is a young squad that showed some real talent during the season. If Mother Nature is kind, the Pirates should win by a pair of touchdowns. Anything lower than 40 degrees and Hull will roll over Cohasset.

Knudek expects strong outing against Pirates

passes from sophomore quarterback Pat Hurley. Knudek said the wind doesn't affect the short, quick passes, but more the throws which go deep.

Hurley has shown steady improvement all season in this, his first football campaign. Knudek calls him a "natural leader" who has earned the respect of all his teammates. The fact that he is Cohasset's starting quarterback is testimony to Hurley's hard work.

"It shows you how much he's willing to work," Knudek said.

Controlling both sides of the line of scrimmage will also be key if the Skippers want to stay in the hunt for a victory. Knudek believes Hull wants the Skippers to put the ball in the air, but that won't have to be the case if Cohasset's offensive line can hold the Pirates' defense.

Running back Ben Keefe should see a good amount of action against Hull. Keefe is coming off his best game of the season, a 162-yard rushing performance on 19 carries against Dover-Sherborn.

Knudek admits the energy surrounding the game has him counting down the days until Thursday. "I think the kids' tradition has got me caught up in it so I'm excited as well," he said.

COHASSET

Cohasset Business

Karen Fredericks, Pat Kelley, and Marge Gorman take a break in the tent during the second annual Harvest Fair at Jack Conway & Company real estate off Rte. 3A in Cohasset. The fair included a bake sale, silent auction, and yard sale with items provided by local businesses. The fair raised more than $3,000 which will be donated to the Cohasset and Scituate food pantries, organizers said.

Resident expands his eatery empire

Local restaurateur gets lease at Quincy's Marina Bay

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

With his next Hingham eatery, the FireKing Baking Company, slated to open in about three weeks, local restaurateur Edward Kane announced this week that his restaurant group Eat Well, Inc. has signed a lease agreement to oversee several of the food and beverage outlets at Marina Bay, in Quincy.

A Quincy native, Kane, now a Cohasset resident – who got his start in the restaurant business in high school by working in his parents Quincy tavern, Kane's Place – said getting involved in his hometown has a definite appeal.

"The market is great up there and being on the water is a plus," he said.

Kane, 34, opened his first restaurant Stars on Hingham Harbor in 1989. That $2.5 million per year business served as a spring board for his up-scale Italian restaurant Tosca, which Kane opened four years later with his wife and partner, Patty Kane, and partner, Greg Acerra. Tosca brings in $3.5 million annually. FireKing Baking Co., a bistro, wine bar, and market place, which will provide the breads and pastries for Kane's other two restaurants, will open in mid- December in the former Quinn's Bicycle Shop behind Stars.

Kane, who had been negotiating over the last three months on this new venture, said his group wanted to be in "a growth mode" this year and saw Marina Bay as a good opportunity. Eat Well, Inc. will replace the Barrett Family Restaurant Group at Marina Bay, and Kane said in addition to providing food and drink at the "Tent" and the Ocean Terrace, an outdoor function facility, he intends to convert the lower level of an administration building on site into a New England tavern and market area.

According to Kane, the new owners of Marina Bay – Coastal Partners which purchased the facility last spring – wanted to change and update the facilities and were impressed by the quality of food service and design at what Kane calls his "flagship restaurant" Tosca.

Kane said he is committed to putting $1 million this year alone into property renovations and kitchen upgrades at Marina Bay. Award-winning designer Peter Niemitz, who designed all three of his Hingham restaurants (Stars, Tosca and FireKing Baking Co.) will do the design work in the Quincy project.

At the popular club spot the Tent, Kane intends to create new entrances, pitch new tents and change the set up inside. Kane will also add food to the entertainment mix at the Tent, by creating a New England clam-bake and barbecue, making it more of a dining destination. Kane also hopes to attract a more varied, broad-based audience to the area which has in the past attracted a younger crowd.

"Our strength as restaurateurs lies in our commitment to outstanding food, service, concept and design," Kane said, adding "through Eat Well, Inc.'s involvement, we'll make this area appealing to all age groups, both young and old, by focusing on what we do best."

The Ocean Terrace will also get a face-lift and Kane's New England Tavern planned for the adjacent building will have a closer connection to this outdoor function area. Kane intends to sell FireKing's fresh breads and pastries at the Tavern's market area and while many of the Marina Bay facilities draw a seasonal business, primarily in the spring and summer, Kane hopes to be able to provide room for smaller functions inside the tavern during the fall and winter months.

Kane said plans for the facilities at Marina Bay are now in the concept and design stage and he expects to be in the permitting and licensing process in about two months.

"We'd like to start construction late in February," said Kane, who is targeting late May for an opening at Marina Bay.

Kane is also shooting for late May to open a 400-seat outdoor restaurant in Hull on the grounds of what was formerly the Vogue, a nightclub on Nantasket Avenue. Kane said work on both facilities will go on simultaneously with local designer Robert Palmer, a partner in the Hull venture, handling a good deal of that work.

In another seasonal venture, Kane also hopes to be able to renovate the large building on-site for a year-round restaurant in Hull.

Questioned if he's spreading himself too thin, Kane, a rising star in the food-service industry, said his group has positioned itself for growth.

"We have a lot of good people involved in the business who want to see this kind of growth," he said.

Kane, who with opening of FireKing Baking Co. will have three dining spots in the Hingham Cove, estimates with the addition of the Quincy and Hull ventures, Eat Well, Inc will bring in $12 million this year.

Youths arrested for possession of alcohol

Police charged seven juveniles and one minor, all Cohasset residents, with possession of alcohol at 6:16 p.m., Saturday (Nov. 18).

Arrested were Adam Donovan, 17, 422 King Street, and seven other males, ranging in age from 14 to 16, whose names were not released because they are juveniles.

Chief Brian Noonan said the youths were found with a 30-pack of beer and two 40 oz. bottles of beer. He said police are still investigating the possibility that the alcohol was purchased by an older sister of two of the juveniles.

Public Notice

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS THE TRIAL COURT PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT
Norfolk Division
Docket No. 93P0925E1
NOTICE OF FIDUCIARY'S ACCOUNT

To all persons interested in the estate of Gertrude S. Parsons late of Cohasset, Ma. in the County of Norfolk.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the First and Final account of Investors Bank and Trust Company, Sarah P. Sayre and Carol P. Stuart as Temporary and Permanent Executors (the fiduciary) of said estate has been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the 10th day of January, 1996, the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account. If you desire to object to any item of said account, you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P Rule 5.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this 15th day of November, 1995.

Lottery's Keno must pass local muster for now

By ALICE C. COYLE
The Cohasset Mariner

After a five month moratorium on Keno, one of the State Lottery's most popular and most controversial games – the lottery commission has instituted a policy that will give local governments some control over where Keno goes in their town.

This temporary legislative amendment changes the lottery's licensing procedure and requires the lottery to publish a notice in a local newspaper that a license has been filed with the commission. The notice must include specific information about the applicant. If the local authority objects to the issuance of the license, it can notify the commission within 21 days and a hearing will take place at lottery headquarters in Braintree. The chairman of the commission decides ultimately if the license will be issued, said Media Director Deirdre Coyle, who noted that in most cases the chairman will not overrule the local government's objections to issuing a license.

"It's very rare for us to overrule local decisions," she said.

The policy change, proposed by a special legislative commission formed to study Keno licensing, comes after 25 Massachusetts communities voiced concerns and five towns formally complained to state Treasurer Joseph Malone about Keno – a game many feel is more addictive and closer to casino-style gambling.

"We're getting started again," said Coyle, who noted that the hold on Keno was self-imposed while the commission waited for a legislative proposal.

"We didn't want to be put in the position of undoing what had been done," she added.

Cohasset only has one site in town

Contrary to the belief that the lottery is eager to bring Keno to every convenience store and pub in town, Coyle said the commission looks at new installations of the game strictly from a marketing perspective.

"Not everyone who applies gets Keno," she said, noting that it is the top selling lottery agents who are considered first. With a cost of $10,000 to install each machine, the lottery looks at each application carefully. Approval time can vary, but with six to eight weeks for a background check on the the applicant and an additional three weeks for town authorities to object – the licensing process can take up to three months, she said.

After scratch tickets and the Daily Number, Keno is the lottery's biggest seller. Implemented in 1993, this lotto style game grossed $300 million in fiscal year 1995, that's about $75 million net, and a considerable portion of the lottery's $641 million contribution to the state, Coyle said. Keno can be played between 12 noon and 11 p.m. daily, costs a dollar to play and a new game begins every five minutes.

Based on the same format as Megabucks, Mass Millions and Mass Cash, Keno has a base of 80 numbers. Players choose between one and 12 numbers form one to 80 and the game selects 20. The player decides by how many numbers he chooses, what kind of odds he faces. With fewer numbers chosen their are lower odds, but also lower prizes, she said. The odds and prizes can vary greatly depending on the way the game is played.

For example, if a player chose four numbers and all four hit, the player wins $100. If 12 numbers are chosen and all 12 are among the 20 the machine picks, the player wins $1 million.

Coyle explained that Keno, which is currently available to the public at 1,300 locations was initiated through a legislative mandate and supported by the governor.

But many town officials are critical of Weld's support for Keno and other legalized forms of gambling.

"Personally, I believe the governor is dead wrong to foist more casino style gaming and slot machines on the Commonwealth," said Cohasset Selectman Peter Pratt, a vocal opponent of Keno.

Pratt is critical of the game for several reasons including the exposure children have to the game because of the kinds of locations in which it exists and frequency of the games which encourages players to congregate for longer periods of time in the establishments where it exists.

"I think Keno is bad for lesser reasons than casino games but one leads to another and a gambling addiction is a societal vice," he said.

Cohasset is among the handful of towns that have strongly complained about Keno and continue to push local control over the game. Curr Cohasset residents can play Ken town only at Cohasset Food Mart (formerly Joe's Market) on Route 3A and Pratt said he's made it known to both the previous and current owner that Keno is not welcome in town.

"The town just doesn't like Keno. I've had everyone on my case," said Josie Boles, who bought the store in June. Unaware of the town's smoke-free policy, Boles said she was surprised when the board of health informed her that smoking was not allowed in the store and noted that her Keno sales dropped immediately from $5,000 to $7,000 per week to about $2,000 per week.

And if Pratt has his way, no additional machines will be installed in Cohasset.

"I want to see our board to work for the maximum local control and restrictions of Keno in town and I hope the legislature and the lottery commission will support towns and cities who want to closely control this," he said.

Unless otherwise extended or amended by the legislature, Coyle said that the current policy for Keno will expire on Dec. 31, 1995 after which the lottery commission can revert to the old law which gave local authorities no control over licensing. A legislative amendment making this policy permanent has been filed but may not pass before the deadline.

A cautious Christmas

Consumers count pennies as retailers hope for a cheery holiday season

By Paula Woodhull
Mariner Community Newspapers

Christmas shoppers will be making a list and checking it twice, but more to make sure they're getting their money's worth this holiday season.

Saddled with high consumer debt and fearful of the overall state of the economy, shoppers will be buying, but watching every penny they spend, say retail experts.

"Consumers will be looking for sales to receive the value they want," said Jon Hurst, president of the Retailers Association of Massachusetts, Boston.

> '(Competition) is good for consumers. No retailer wants to have inventory left on Dec. 26.'
> — Jon Hurst, analyst.

Early returns for the holiday shopping season are encouraging, with most retailers reporting post-Thanksgiving and Veterans' Day weekend as the best for sales that they've seen in awhile.

That was a welcome bit of good news following the release of flat retail sales figures in October that showed only a slight increase over October 1994.

"The weather turned colder in November, people started going to the malls," said Hurst.

Ed Kelley, store manager of retail giant J. C. Penney at Kingston's Independence Mall, said store sales on Veterans Day were 45 percent higher than last year.

But if people are hitting the stores earlier than the traditional Thanksgiving kick-off to the holiday shopping season, that means they're following the sales and spending cautiously.

Most consumers, by nearly a two-to-one margin, plan to shop at discount stores, according to a survey by Deloitte and Touche, the Boston accounting and consulting firm.

Plus, with Thanksgiving coming early this year and a longer-than-usual shopping season, some of the urgency to buy early is lost.

Also gone is the "buy now, pay later" mentality of the 1980s when people freely binged on credit-card purchases to get through the holidays.

"People with high credit-card balances will likely go to cash," said Hurst.

Consumers plan to spend most of their money on clothes and toys this year, according to Deloitte and Touche. The average household will spend about $685 this year compared with $714 last year. Electronics, strong last year, will not be a top priority this year, the survey found.

Weld can't waffle at breakfast, South Shore Chamber warns

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Governor William Weld will be the main speaker at today's annual South Shore Chamber of Commerce breakfast at the Lantana in Randolph where the sold out crowd of more than 780 local business people may have more than pancakes and scrambled eggs on their minds.

And the throngs of banner-waving rail opponents and proponents expected to rally outside will share these concerns.

> 'What better place to make the announcement than before the biggest group of business people he will go before this year.'
> — State Rep. Frank Hynes.

The Governor may talk about his government re-organization plans or that he may seek U.S. Sen.John Kerry's seat in the next election – but whatever Weld's agenda entails – he'll have to make room to address the controversial Greenbush rail restoration project, Chamber officials say.

More than a decade in the planning, the project to restore commuter rail along the 17-mile line between Braintree and Scituate has met strong opposition – spurred on in the last two years by the anti-rail Coastal Coalition founded by Hingham resident, Nancy Buckley. Rail opponents are concerned about the noise, pollution and safety problems commuter rail could bring to the area.

School health advisors to meet with drug and alcohol board

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Although parents say the majority of Cohasset adults have always been concerned about teen-age drinking and drug use, several recent events have prompted a closer look at the subject.

"Some of the things have really raised people's consciousness," said Donna O'Donnell, a parent and chairman of the health advisory committee, which works with the school department on the health curriculum.

She said that last week end's traffic accident involving Cohasset youth and a recent Mariner article in which parents were accused of ignoring teen-age alcohol use have raised the subject's visibility.

The health advisory committee will meet Monday, Dec. 11 at 7 p.m. and has invited

Clean catch basin covers

All Cohasset residents are encouraged to clean off any catch basin covers near their homes to prevent flooding and subsequent damage to their properties.

The Highway Department cleans these covers as often as possible, but during this time of year with leaves falling quickly and the current rainfall, the Highway Department cannot continually clean off the basin covers, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Planting trees is encouraged

The Norfolk County Conservation District has compiled a free 23-page brochure, "Conservation Trees," to encourage planting, preserving and managing of trees to conserve soil, energy, water and wildlife. It also briefly explains the proper way to plant and prune trees.

In February, a list of popular plants suitable for spring planting (burning bush, lilac, forsythia, mock orange, pink almond, red barberry, dogwood, pussy willow, sedum, bleeding heart and aster and evergreens, fruits and vegetables) will be published.

To request a free brochure and to be added to the group's mailing list, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Norfolk County Conservation District, 400 Main St., Walpole 02081, Attn: Trees.

Officials say that upgrades to the 70-year-old Osgood School will not qualify for state reimbursement. Shown here is a classroom at the elementary school. The school committee will present the option of building a new school to solve overcrowding problems to voters at the special town meeting in January, for story see page 12.

Selectmen set single tax rate

Exemptions are available to some

by MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Selectmen approved a single tax rate of $14.50 per $1,000 of assessed valuation at a public hearing Nov. 20.

In last week's Mariner, the tax rate was incorrectly reported at $14.30.

The new rate represents an increase of 18 cents per $1,000 of assessed valuation over the previous year.

Less than 10 percent of the town's valuation is commercial/industrial/personal property (CIP), so assessors recommended the town stick with a single tax rate for both commercial and residential property.

Cohasset has always had a single tax rate. Towns with split rates (different ones for residential and commercial) are usually more than 20 percent commercially/industrially zoned, assessors said.

The owner of an average home – which is valued at $306,000 – will have a tax bill of $4,437 in fiscal year 1996, an increase of about $336 over last year, assessors say.

Last year, the owner of the average Cohasset home, valued at $286,000, had a tax bill of $4,101 in fiscal year 1995, which ended June 30.

In FY'92, the average home in town was assessed at $300,000 with a tax bill of $3,600. In FY'93, that same home was assessed at $286,000 with taxes of $3,855 and in FY'94, the taxes were $3,990.

The assessors remind taxpayers that the elderly, disabled veterans with a 10 percent or greater service disability, widowed or blind may qualify for an exemption of property tax. Please call 383-9900 or stop by the assessors' office for information.

Investment Club to meet Nov.30

The next meeting of a new club for people interested in learning about investing is at 7 p.m., tonight (Thursday) Nov. 30 in the meeting room at the Scituate Public Library. All area residents are welcome to attend.

Holiday gifts and attractions abound at Fair

Annual event has something for everyone

Some early birds may have joined throngs of day-after-Thanksgiving shoppers, but crowds of other holiday shoppers geared to hand-crafted gifts, home-cooked goodies and attic treasures, will again throng buildings around Cohasset Common Saturday, Dec. 2, beginning at 10 a.m. when the 55th Cohasset Village Fair opens. The fair closes at 3 p.m.

The familiar features of a seasonal benefit event–wreaths and greens, boutiques, bargains and books, chowder, pastries and other goodies, will be offered in abundance in churches around the Common and in the Town Hall, while outside there will be the festive attractions of a visit from Santa and hayrides around the historic green.

Proceeds from the various events will go to four participating churches, to the town's Appalachian Service Project, and to the Cohasset Dramatic Club which has added the Holiday Hayride from noon to 2 p.m.

Shoppers for the ever popular greens, wreaths and boxwood trees being offered in the Town Hall by the Greek Orthodox Church, have had the opportunity to jump the gun by calling in their orders to volunteers at 749-2226 and 925-7033. These popular items are often sold out well before the fair closes.

Heading the appeal to youngsters will be the arrival of Santa on a fire engine about 10:45 a.m. when he will be escorted to his sleigh on the Common, outside for the first time in several years, weather cooperating. There he will entertain the entreaties of the young while they have their pictures taken for family albums. This visit has been arranged by the young people who go each summer to work for the Appalachia Service Project.

While the Town Hall will merchandise greens and Greek goodies, the Second Congregational Church next door will be offering the popular Chowda Bar and a boutique stocked with hand-crafted gift items made by church volunteers working weekly through the year to make sure that every holiday shopper's needs are met.

Meanwhile across the Common in the Unitarian Parish House, the attic and basement treasures from many a Cohasset home will be offered in a Jumble Sale that includes small appliances, outgrown sports gear, toys, records, furniture and winter clothing. Complementing the Jumble Sale will be a Coffee Shoppe featuring homemade Swedish coffee bread.

Walton Rodgers Hall of St. Stephen's Church "on the rock," will again be the venue of the fair's traditional book sale with hundreds of fiction and non-fiction best sellers available at bargain prices as well as books for children of all ages. Here also will be tables laden with home-cooked baked goods, and a chance to bid in Silent Auction on holiday table centerpieces.

The Second Congregational Church is the coordinator for this year's edition of this traditional holiday season event which has been presented in various forms since 1940.

Tillie Nardo, who has been busy working on items for a boutique at the fair, takes time to try out a horn she has decorated for the annual event.

Visit Santa Claus at the Village Fair

The Appalachia Service Project has invited Santa Claus to Cohasset's Village Fair Saturday, Dec. 2. Drop by and visit with Santa from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the common. To raise funds for their summer service project, ASP will offer to take a picture with Santa and put it in a folder ($3), or on a button or tree ornament ($4).

Drop by Bates Hall in the Second Congregational Church, where ASP will offer raffle tickets for a charming handmade country bunny, complete with six year-round holiday outfits. Tickets are $1 each, or six for $5.

Consider creative Christmas gifts for your family and friends. ASP suggests a "piece" of an Appalachian home, a Humani-tee shirt, or a share of stock in the Appalachia Service Project.

All proceeds benefit the Appalachia Service project in Cohasset. Under the direction of the Rev. Gary Ritts, 84 high school students and adult advisors will travel to Appalachia for a week this summer to repair housing for needy families. The students work all year to raise over $40,000 for their materials and transportation.

Weld can't waffle at breakfast, Chamber warns hold for several months as transportation planners studied alternatives to commuter rail in the Greenbush corridor, which includes Marshfield. Earlier this month state Secretary of Transportation James Kerasiotes said he'll make a decision on Greenbush between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

The timing of the Chamber breakfast makes it a good opportunity to press Weld to comment on whether or not the state intends to restore rail service along Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad, said Chamber Executive Director Terry Fancher.

People on both sides of the issue agree that the time for a decision has long past and with his appearance before the South Shore business community, the Governor seems to be on the proverbial hot seat.

A hot seat that state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said the Weld administration has created on its own.

"This (Greenbush) has been in the making for well over a decade and a half and has received support all along. By halting the process two years ago, that created and caused the hot seat to begin with," he said.

The state held up the Greenbush leg of the three-pronged Old Colony Railroad project to study alternatives to restoration of commuter rail along the existing right of way, which includes Hingham Square, a historic district. Construction on the Middleboro and Plymouth lines is underway.

Hynes said he is confident that the Governor will speak up on Greenbush and that a decision to restore the line will be made.

"I'm feeling optimistic," said Hynes.

"The Governor is well aware that this is the issue of most concern to these business people. You don't come into the back yard of supporters for restoration and tell them you're not going to do it. Especially when you've said it is in the economic and transportation interest of the South Shore," he added.

According to Hynes, Greenbush corridor communities have been proclaimed a "step child or second cousin" to other regions around Boston.

"The importance of the Greenbush line," he said, "is to put this region on the same level with other communities, economically and transportation wise."

Hynes also suggested that if the Governor is planning to seek a senate seat he will need to appear decisive and to put public interest above all else. If an announcement is to be made, Hynes said, this is the place for Weld to do it.

"What better place to make the announcement than before the biggest group of business people he will go before this year," Hynes said.

Hynes' optimism for a "build" decision has been growing since the pro-rail Chamber of Commerce hired an outside firm to conduct a telephone survey on Greenbush two months ago, which showed that 61 percent of those polled favor commuter rail restoration along the corridor.

Hynes said the results of the study, while criticized by opponents of the project, seemed to regenerate enthusiasm and energy among rail supporters.

Rail proponent William Grimes and his group "Back on Track" took to the highways this fall, holding banners along Route 3 over-passes encouraging Boston bound commuters to call the governor's office and show support for Greenbush rail restoration. More recent efforts in this "Greenbush push" include the circulation of thousands of pro-train flyers to commuters on the MBTA Red line at the Quincy Center, Quincy Adams and Braintree train stations and on the Plymouth and Brockton buses at the South Station bus terminal.

"There's a very deep feeling out there that the government has been giving us short shrift down here," said Grimes, who noted he remains cautiously optimistic about the project. Still, Grimes admits he has no inside information from the state on the decision.

"It's like trying to read tea leaves," he said.

Grimes and other Back on Trackers will rally outside the Lantana toting pro-rail banners, he said, but lamented that many proponents are the commuters who will be in gridlock on the highways by the time Weld takes the podium.

Grimes, who expects rail opponents to rally as well, said he hopes everybody will behave themselves.

"We'll be there to reassure members that their chamber took the right step to support this," Grimes said.

And Nancy Buckley said she and other Coastal Coalition members, who remain confident that the Governor will decide not to restore the line, will be on hand to support him.

The Coalition hit the road last week staging anti-rail demonstrations at the commuter boat terminal and at the Hingham rotary. Buckley said she's sure Weld won't decide to restore the line.

"We're confident he'll be announcing he's not building a train to Greenbush," she said.

Buckley expects a crowd of 50 to rally against restoration outside and said the group will have good representation inside by a number of business people opposed to the project.

"I believe Governor Weld is such a strong leader, he will face these people and explain to them why he's not going forward with this and why it doesn't' make sense," she said.

Former fire station slated for use in Cohasset sewer

Farmer's market cannot locate there

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

After a complicated discussion with sewer commissioner Ted Guild last week, selectmen decided not to rent out the North Cohasset fire station on Hull Street after all.

The decision means the end of plans to locate a farmer's market in the building.

Michelle Goodson, a member of the cooperative group, The Ancient Farmer's Market, said they had hoped to open a market in the fire station building. She said the organization does not have another site picked out yet.

Town meeting earlier this year approved an article giving selectmen the option to rent the unused building.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild explained that no matter what plan is ultimately adopted for the sewer system, it will involve rebuilding the fire station for a pumping station. (See related story, page

He submitted a letter from a consultant explaining that the fire station is the only town-owned parcel of land in the northern part of town large enough to accommodate a pumping station.

Goodson, who has spent considerable time and money developing the farmer's market proposal, said she wished the information on the pumping station had been presented earlier.

"The fault is ours," said selectman Peter Pratt.

"I don't hold you totally responsible," Goodson said.

During his presentation, Guild told selectmen that Hingham may use the pumping station to transport sewage from that town for treatment at the Hull plant.

However, he stated that Hingham is not sure how much of the eastern portion of that community will be sewered, while Hull has not announced how much new sewage to accept.

Cohasset is now negotiating with Hull over the installation of sewers around Strait's Pond, a critical environmental area now believed to be polluted by leaking septic systems.

In addition, Cohasset faces a state order to improve the sewage situation at the harbor. The proposed new pumping station could be used to alleviate that problem and bring sewage into Hull for treatment, Guild stated.

Kudos go to Joe and Andrea Kinnealey of Pleasant Street. They donated 28 turkeys to the Food Pantry for Thanksgiving! You can be sure that those families were very grateful, and we are pleased and proud to have such fine citizens living in our town.

Imagine the contented feelings that Joe and Andrea must have felt as they sat down to their Thanksgiving meal, knowing that they did for others. They fulfilled the true meaning of the season, how wonderful!

News from the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce — the annual mailing of goodies and reminders from home has been sent to each of the graduating seniors from Cohasset High.

Each year they send a box of supplies, toiletries, giveaways, and other small items to the kids at college, in the service or at home. A subscription to the Cohasset Mariner is also included.

Hats off to Bob Martin and his hard-working crew for making this happen again this year!

Can't you just imagine the happy feelings that must come over the guy or gal that receives this bundle? How about the person that watches them open their package? Surely a most popular event and a great way to show all that Cohasset cares about those away for the first time!

We applaud you!

Wentworth Institute of Technology recently held commencement exercises. Receiving a degree was Cohasset resident Roger Hill, who was awarded an associate's degree in Building Construction Technology. Boston Mayor Thomas M. The Community Garden Club of Cohasset is presenting its "Coastal Christmas House Tour" next week, Thursday, Dec. 7. It will feature six beautifully decorated homes, reflecting the joy of the holidays. The time is 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. You can purchase advance tickets for $15 at the Cohasset Community Center (or call 383-6438), admission will be $20 the day of the event.

Maura Ditmar, chairman of this house tour, tells us that refreshments will be served from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common with entertainment by the Broad Cove Chorale Octet, directed by Margo Euler (proceeds to benefit the Garden Club's Scholarship Fund and civic projects in Cohasset).

This is always a spectacular event, certainly gets you in the spirit, and gives you wonderful ideas for your own home decorating projects. The ladies work diligently to make everything beautiful, make it a point to attend. And be sure to get your tickets early, this event brings people from all over Massachusetts!.

How about Thomas M. Reardon's latest feat, he is so awesome! Thomas was awarded the Henry N. Lamar Award recently. The award is given every year to the senior member of Harvard football that exemplifies dedication to the program and concern for fellow man. It was stated that Tom has made a "unique contribution to Harvard football. In Thomas M. Reardon's case, the spirit that he gave to the team was unique."

Thomas received a gold pocket watch, we are ever so proud of him! That surely is an honor indeed, well deserved we might add.

Joseph was born October 20 and weighed 7 pounds 2 ounces (he was three weeks early, which would have made him about 9 pounds on his due date).

His grandparents are Judy and Tony Sestito and Joe and Lena Carbone, all of Cohasset fame. Just imagine the love that surrounds that little guy!

Just one question remains — will there be one more waiter at J J's, or one more landscaper on the Sestito crew? If he is as diligent as his folks, definitely both — days behind the mower, nights behind the window!

Congratulations go to all of you!

It's a great fair too, make it a day and go to both of them.

Cohasset was once Hingham's pasture land

By DAVID H. WADSWORTH
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset once was part of Hingham, and its first settlers were farmers, tradesmen and fisherman from the parent settlement some four miles to the west. Until the year 1670, this easternmost frontier of Hingham was mostly vacant land, useful only for the pasturing of domestic animals and for the harvest of salt hay along its shores. Hingham residents called the area "Conahasset ," meaning "Long Rocky Place," in Algonquin language. The Indians' descriptive term was as accurate then as it is today.

In the year 1636, the Town of Hingham began to grant land in the Conahasset area to its citizens. These first land grants were in an area called Turkey Meadow, to the north and northeast of today's Turkey Hill, near the present Cohasset Golf Club. Hingham settlers David Phippeny, Edmund and Joshua Hubbard, Thomas Lincoln, Thomas Wakelye and George Stranye were among the more than dozen Hinghamites to receive grants of meadowland at Turkey Meadow between the years 1636 and 1638.

By 1647, Hingham voters had decided to parcel out to private owners many of the coastal salt marshes and shoreline meadows of Conahasset, including those bordering Little Harbor, Cohasset Harbor or Cove and 60 acres described as being "over the River." The marshes "over the River" to the east and south of the Cove were the notorious Threescore Acres lands which had given rise to a continuing boundary dispute between the settlements at Hingham and Scituate, and between the two colonies of New Plimouth and Massachusetts Bay.

In the salt marsh and meadow land divisions of 1647 to 1651, more than 50 Hingham residents received parcels at Conahasset, all taken from the town's "undivided Common Land," or land owned in common by all the freeholders or landholders of Hingham. But the 60 acres called Threescore Acres, bordering on Scituate, remained disputed land, with Scituate's settlers maintaining their purported rights of ownership against Hingham's claim. As early as 1640, an intra-Colony Commission, constituted of residents from the two towns (and the two colonies), had defined the colonial boundary between Scituate and Conahasset. Threescore Acres had been awarded to Hingham and the Massachusetts Colony, but the dispute flickered up and broke out anew as Scituate continued its efforts to levy real estate taxes in the disputed area, to the chagrin of the Hingham owners.

The Threescore Acres question remained unsettled for two more centuries until the latter 1800s, when the Commonwealth of Massachusetts overturned the old colonial decision and gave the marshland to Scituate and Plymouth County.

By the decade of the 1660s, agitation was increasing in Hingham to divide up the upland areas of Conahasset among the town's landowners. In January, 1669, a town meeting was held to determine the number of shares of undivided common land should be granted to each property owner. The rule adopted gave the largest landowners and prominent citizens the greatest number of shares and the smallest landowner the least number.

Thus the Rev. Peter Hobart, Hingham's parish minister, received 25 shares; Capt. Joshua Hobart received 18 shares; Lieut. John Smith, 15 shares; and Ensign John Thaxter, 16 shares. At the other end of the scale, Daniel Stodder received two shares, as did John Farrow, Samuel Stodder, Samuel Bates, Joseph Andrews, Thomas Huit and several others. Low men were John and David Stodder and Clement Bates Jr., who received a meager one share apiece, as did Onesiphorus Marsh.

At about the same time, certain areas of the undivided common land were set aside by the voters of Hingham to remain undivided in perpetuity for the use of the townspeople. In Conahasset, the land to be left undivided included the area of today's town common.

Lieut. Joshua Fisher of Dedham was hired to survey the Conahasset upland. This was done in short order, and the resulting plots of land were conveyed by the Hingham Proprietors on Dec. 6, 1670.

With the Conahasset lands open for the founding of farms and homesteads, numerous sons and daughters of the parent town turned their eyes towards the eastern shores of Hingham. This set in motion a series of events that would see the new village at Cohasset become Hingham's Second Parish and Second Precinct in the year 1717 and become a separate district or town in 1770, a full century after the initial Land Division, and some 90 years after the first humble dwellings were raised in the Conahasset uplands.

Victorian tea held

The Friends of the Library hosted "A Christmas Carol" Victorian tea Nov. 23. Appropriate tea-time sweets and beverages were provided. The Cohasset Drama Club entertained the children with some of Charles Dickens' most beloved characters.

Sue Terry, the children's librarian, reminds everyone that the "Holiday Shelf" is full of appropriate books to help your children share and enjoy the Christmas and Chanukah season.

Peter Scholl's art exhibit, "Pastels," opened at the library Nov. 17. Mr. Scholl, a Cohasset resident, has been exhibiting his works around the country since the early 1970s. Come and enjoy!

A reminder to everyone — The Friends of the Library recently mailed their annual appeal for financial help. Donations from residents allow the library to buy new books, sponsor exhibits and provide special occasions for adults and children.

Computers arrive at library

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have announced the arrival of a new computer workstation on the first floor, which includes a computer, CD-ROM changer and a printer, as well as a 15-inch flat-screen, non-glare color monitor.

CD-ROMS can hold as much as 300,000 printed pages or a large 20-volume encyclopedia and can store and play back sound, pictures and videos. Although accompanied by a printer, the computer is available for CD-Rom services only, and word processing will not be available for public use.

The workstation will be loaded at all times with seven CD-ROM reference products for use by library patrons, and additional products will be loaded by staff members upon request.

The following CD-ROMS are available:

McGraw-Hill Multimedia Encyclopedia of Science & Technology; The Way Things Work; The Ultimate Human Body; Microsoft Encarta; Grolier Multimedia Encyclopedia; Smithsonian's America; Global Explorer; Garden Encyclopedia; U.S. Atlas and World Atlas and Ancient Lands (Egypt, Greece and Rome).

The Village Fair

Don't miss the Village Fair which gets underway at 10 a.m., Saturday.

You won't be disappointed, there's lots to do, see, eat, and buy and it's all for good causes.

There's the ever popular book sale at St. Stephen's, the jumble sale at the Unitarian Parish House, the wreath and greens sale at Town Hall, and the boutique at the Second Congregational Church.

Santa arrives on a fire engine at 10:45 a.m. and weather permitting, will hear all those Christmas wishes from Cohasset youngsters who join him on his sleigh on the Common. Pictures with Santa will be available along with hayrides for the entire family.

If you get hungry or want to bring some delectable treats home – there will be Greek Pastries at town hall, a chowda bar at the Second Congregational Church, and homemade Swedish coffee bread at the First Parish House.

Proceeds from various sales and events go to the four participating churches, the Appalachia Service Project, and the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

So whether you've finished your Christmas shopping, just getting started or are somewhere in between – the Village is the place to be Saturday.

The nicest part of it all will be the chance to see friends and chat with neighbors who will surely be there.

The setting is perfect and the entire event is bound to fill you with the holiday spirit.

See you at the Fair! It's over by 3 p.m., so don't delay.

P.S. The Snowflake Fair at Beechwood Congregational Church is also "on" for Saturday. There, the famous Jones Family Chowder will be served — and there'll be baked goods, wreaths, grab bags, ornaments, and Beach Glass Candy, to name a few. Don't know about you, but we're going there too

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Please patronize local shops

To the Editor:

As Christmas once again fills our thoughts and empties our wallets, it occurred to me how very important it is for us to patronize our local merchants. These are the people who are asked to donate to all the various events that fill our year. Even though an item may be less expensive at a discount store, remember that without our merchants helping with the tax burden, living in Cohasset would be far more expensive for the homeowner.

And are you really saving any money when you consider the gas you are using as well as the extra time it takes? When you are ready to purchase your Christmas tree, remember the merchants who will still be in Cohasset the day after Christmas. Shopping locally is the most relaxing and fun way to get your Christmas shopping done.

Merry Christmas to all.

Citizen of the Year nominations are open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual "Citizen of the Year" Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Joseph D. Buckley for, among other contributions, his work behind the scenes helping the town's senior citizens wade through the paper work to access health insurance benefits.

Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner, said the Citizen of the Year is a great way to salute those who give tirelessly of themselves.

"We are proud to use your community newspaper as the vehicle to recognize those among us who go that extra mile to make the town, we all love, a better place," Ford said.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1995 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 29. Please see nomination form on page 11.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1995 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1996.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure, or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the third person honored as Citizen of the year, joining past recipients:

1993: T. Gerard Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister, usher at St. Anthony's Church and more.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), a state-administered program made up of trained volunteers who help seniors understand the complexities of the health-care system). Over the years, Buckley also served as a volunteer with the Boy Scouts, Little League, Sunday School and on the town's advisory board. He serves as a eucharistic minister at St. Anthony's, is on the board of directors of South Shore Elder Services, and is a member of the Council on Aging.

New school construction tops option list to. . .

School board to vote Dec. 7

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

And then there were two.

School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder announced at the Nov. 16 meeting that after careful consideration the options suggested to solve the need for additional classrooms in Cohasset had been narrowed to two.

"The (School Facilities Committee) was unable to come forward with an option that retains Osgood in the mix," Kidder said.

Osgood Elementary School, a pre-kindergarten to grade three facility, has been actively studied over past months. Experts have reported numerous inadequacies at the school, including the smallness of the site, the potential firehazard from the structure's wooden frame, the limited play area, the lack of a food preparation area and cafeteria, and the crowding of hallways and classrooms.

Additionally, the Massachusetts Department of Education will not fund any work done on the Osgood because it does not meet state standards. The department will fund 60 percent of the work done for other projects.

A pre-kindergarten to grade four option is also off the table because it would have created too large a student population, said administrators. Because that option has been eliminated, its related option, the creation of a middle school, is also no longer in the running.

The two remaining options, which are available for funding, both involve construction of a pre-kindergarten to grade three facility, which will be "in all likelihood" built on the easily accessible 77-acre site between the Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

In addition to the new school, the Deer Hill School will house grades four through six, (option one) or grades four through seven (option two). Supt. Steven Hart said that the grade configuration of the new school and the Deer Hill School could be flip-flopped.

The projected enrollments in the year 2005 for option one are 480 students in the pre-kindergarten to grade three school. Only 15 of those students would be in the pre-kindergarten group, said Hart.

Hart added that if an extended kindergarten program or a special education program were housed at the school then the population would be larger.

The projected enrollment for grades four through six would be 373 students, Hart continued. The junior/senior high school, grades seven through 12, would have a projected enrollment of 595 students.

Under option two the pre-kindergarten to grade three school would still have 480 students; however, because the grade configuration of the Deer Hill School would be grades four to seven, the projected population of the school in 2005 would be 500 students.

Grades eight through 12 would then have a population the drug and alcohol committee, a town-wide group appointed by selectmen, to attend. The meeting is open to the public. Call O'Donnell at 383-6113 for information.

According to O'Donnell, most parents are very aware of the dangers of teen age substance use.

"It's a problem that's indicative of our society," she stated. "Teen-age drinking is a problem, not only in Cohasset."

She explained that the health advisory committee is intended to help the school department review health-related material.

The group's goal "is to keep our kids safe," she said, "and provide them with a substance free childhood."

The committee, trying to understand concerns parents might have about how a particular subject matter is presented, offers support to parents and feedback to the school department,

"We have a very conservative approach to what is taught," O'Donnell explained. "The town is conservative. You try to fit the curriculum to the community."

Parents are invited to view videos which will be shown to children and to review printed material in advance.

"There are no surprises," she said. "We're very low key."

In addition, the committee and the school department health staff agree that material should be presented in an appropriate manner. For instance, O'Donnell said that when explaining to young children the need to be wary of strangers, it is important that the youngsters are not made so afraid they will not want to go outside.

That particular lesson was presented in a low-key way to avoid placing unnecessary stress on children.

Another example of introducing topics in a sensitive way is to explain to children that when a classmate is bleeding on the playground, an adult should be summoned and students should avoid contact with the blood, washing hands if necessary.

O'Donnell said it is not necessary to explain about blood and AIDS to very young children, but rather to stress that good health habits warrant the avoidance of blood.

This message is in keeping with the general hygiene concentration of much early health education, O'Donnell said.

Other lessons may include how to act in a fire, telephone etiquette and general nutrition and health maintenance.

"Health education is very complex," agreed Dr. Michael Gill, health education coordinator for the school system.

He said that 30 years ago the focus was almost totally on hygiene, but that the educational effort has changed in response to changing risks.

The advent of AIDS in the early 1980's clearly required an educational response, he said.

The health advisory committee has existed since 1974, and Gill has been in Cohasset since 1980.

Calling violence prevention the next big issue, Gill stated that students need to learn what he called "gender respect," including topics such as violence on dates and acquaintance rape.

When asked if those are major problems in Cohasset, Gill replied that such phenomena are present to some degree in most communities in America, cutting across socio-economic lines.

However, Gill noted that Cohasset does not have the gang violence so prevalent in many urban neighborhoods.

Another uncomfortable subject, child abuse, also "exists in every town in America."

Ellie Waal, a member of the town's drug and alcohol committee, said members of that group plan to attend the Dec. 11 discussion "to see what's on their agenda."

She said "obviously, we have a serious problem in town."

Waal said she received a number of calls after the Mariner article on the subject of youth alcohol abuse several weeks ago and invited others to join the drug and alcohol committee. Anyone interested may call her at 383-6882.

of 485 to 490 students.

The principals from all three schools were on hand to voice their opinions on the two available options.

All agreed that they preferred option one.

"I have serious reservations about an elementary population of 500 (students)," said Donna Hartlage, principal of the Deer Hill School.

"Developmentally speaking, fourth- graders and seventh-graders are quantum light years away from one another," she added.

Linda Whitney, the principal of Osgood, also informed the committee that 500 students at an elementary school was too large a population.

Curtis Collins, the principal of the junior/senior high, said he has sent for material on middle schools. He added that he has formed a study group to examine a middle school model, as opposed to the junior high model now followed at the school.

Under a seven to 12 grade configuration it would be possible for him to create a middle school for the seventh- and eighth-grade students. The "traditional" middle school contains the grade figuration five to eight or six to eight; however a middle school is based more on a different way of structuring than the number of grades, said Kidder.

For instance, teachers in a middle school model have a common planning period in which they discuss students' progress and curriculum.

Dec. 7 the school committee will vote and the chosen option, be it one or two, will be the option presented at the January town meeting.

At the town meeting citizens will get an opportunity to see why and how the school committee arrived at its final decision. Facts and figures will be used.

School committee member Jim Kirk said that the final decision is more than a space issue – it is a quality of education issue.

If the option is approved at the January town meeting an override vote needs to be scheduled by February, said Kidder. This affords the educational architects, from Earl Flansburgh and Associates, enough time to submit the plans by the state's deadline of June 1.

School News

Students earn computers

Cohasset schools are again participating in the Bank of Boston Investment in Education program. Last year through community support, the schools were able to earn a color printer and an Apple Quick Take camera.

Participants are asked to collect investment points issued by the Bank of Boston from now until April 30. Anyone can do this by stopping by any Bank of Boston branch and completing a bonus certificate. There is no obligation. Further details are available at the bank. This year's goal is to accumulate enough points to obtain another color printer.

Students raise money for AIDS in benefit dance

Students from the Cohasset High School Social Awareness Organization participated in the AIDS Dance-a-thon at the Hynes Convention Center in Boston Sunday, Nov. 19. Donations made by CHS students and teachers and pledges from community and family members amounted to more than $735.

Students participating in the event were Alli Ritts, Ryan Goff, Holly Brennock, Tobey Horn, Ryan Sawchuk, Nicole Peterson, Patricia Bull, Amber Hopeman and Caitlin Connolly.

The event raised more than $475,000 for the AIDS Action Committee, New England's oldest and largest AIDS service organization. In the past year alone the AIDS Action Committee has provided services to more than 3,000 people with AIDS or HIV.

PAC meeting is Dec. 5

The Parents Advisory Council of Cohasset invites all parents and guardians of students receiving services from the Cohasset school system under Chapter 766 to attend a meeting Tuesday, Dec. 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School library.

Larry Lambros, recently appointed interim director of student services, will be present to participate in an informal discussion. For further information, call PAC Co-chairs Anne Whiteley, 383-9310, or JoAnn Pilczak, 383-0268.

Volunteers needed at CHS

Cohasset Junior-Senior High School is seeking volunteers to help with cataloguing and typing in the school's library. Anyone interested in donating their time is asked to call Susan McFadd at 383-6100.

Health advisors to meet

The Cohasset Health Advisory Committee will meet on Monday, Dec. 11, at 7 p.m. at Cohasset High School. The Cohasset Town Drug and Alcohol Committee has been invited to send representatives to the meeting to help define the goals for both committees regarding substance abuse problems within the town.

Those who are interested in becoming a member of the HAC are welcome to attend the meeting and are asked to call Michael Gill, health educator at the high school (383-6107), or Donna O'Donnell (383-6113) for further details.

Deer Hill book drive ends

The Deer Hill School book drive for Boston City Hospital's Pediatric Unit will end Dec. 1. Students are asked to donate a used book from home, (in very good condition) or to purchase a new book that would be suitable for all age levels, infant to preteen. These books will be delivered to the Pediatric Unit of Boston City Hospital for use in their "Reach Out and Read" program with economically disadvantaged families.

Area financial aid workshop

With college costs more than $25,000 at some private schools, nearly all families share a growing anxiety about how to pay for college. Those worrying about college costs should consider attending the Financial Aid Night to be held at Norwell High School Thursday, Dec. 7, beginning at 7 p.m.

Parents of college-bound seniors are encouraged to bring the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, the New College Scholarship Service Profile, #2 pencils, and their questions to the workshop. Forms and financial aid pamphlets will be available at the workshop.

This timely program, featuring Eileen O'Leary, director of Financial Aid at Stonehill College, is being sponsored by Lighthouse Area Guidance Directors. All South Shore area parents are welcome.

For additional information or directions call the Norwell High School guidance office at (617) 659-8806 during school hours.

METCO news update

The METCO committee will host at "Dessert Discussion" at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 6 at Connie Afshar's house, 141 South Main St. This will be an opportunity for Boston and Cohasset parents to meet with and get to know each other better and share ideas about how to improve the METCO experience.

The METCO committee is sponsoring a matinee trip to Black Nativity at Tremont Temple's Converse hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston on Dec. 10. Bus transportation will be provided. The bus leaves town hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. performance and returns to Cohasset by 7 p.m., Tickets are $20. Call Connie Afshar at 383-6006 or Cliff Chase at 383-1574.

Please note, there is an early release "Stay-Day" for Deer Hill students only on Wednesday, Dec. 6. Cohasset host families, please contact your Boston families and make the appropriate accommodations.

Teen center news notes

The Cohasset Teen Center has announced there will be a dance for grades 7-9 to benefit the center held at Cohasset High School, Friday night, Dec. 8, from 7:30 to 10 p.m. There will be music, a DJ, prize winning raffles and dance contests. Admission is $5.

The Teen Center will be open this weekend Friday and Saturday nights, 7 to 10 p.m. The center will be closed Friday, Dec. 8, because of the dance, and open Saturday, Dec. 9. Cohasset youth and their parents are encouraged to call the center anytime with questions and ideas and speak to the center's new director, John Getgey. The number is 383-2492.

Ability levels won't disappear under Ed. Reform

But general track is a goner

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Special to the Mariner

Within the past couple of months, either through a school department-sponsored survey or with comments made to school committee members, parents have expressed confusion over the subject of academic levels.

"There seems to be some concern that under the education reform law, all classes will be heterogeneous," said school committee chairman Ralph Kidder at its Oct. 19 meeting. "That there'll be no levels, period."

However, that is not the case, say Kidder and a host of other administrators. Under the Massachusetts Education Reform Act of 1993, all schools in the Commonwealth had to submit a plan to eliminate the general track, also called Basic, Level 3 or Remedial, by September, 1994.

But Cohasset never had a general track, which is referred to as a virtual dead-end by education experts. Students in that track are not being prepared for a college education or the work force, said a background paper on the general track put out by the Massachusetts Department of Education.

Cohasset's Junior/Senior High School started phasing out its Level 3 before the state's mandate; however, its Level 3 differs from the general track in that the students enrolled in the program go on to post-secondary education.

Jack DeLorenzo, assistant principal of the high school, said that 65 of the 66 students who graduated last year went on to higher education. The one student who didn't had been accepted to several colleges, but had not been able to go because of financial reasons.

One of the reasons Level 3 is being phased out is because of the small population at the high school, said Superintendent Hart. There aren't enough students to fill all the course levels that are available. Now there are only a few Level 3 courses, such as math.

Research, published by the Mass. Department of Education, states that a "tracking system promotes high expectations for those students in the higher levels and lower expectations for those students occupying the lower levels."

The report went on to say that if students are grouped together, the level of achievement for the previously lower track students increases, and students previously in the higher track maintain the same level of achievement.

DeLorenzo said, "We found that (the students from Level 3) do work harder when they are in with the Level 2."

Kidder said that in the foreseeable future, Cohasset will not have students of all levels in the same class. The high school will continue to have an advanced placement level, a Level 1—accelerated and Level 2—college preparatory.

He added that, depending on the student's ability, he or she could be in an AP math course and a Level 2 English course, or vice versa.

The absence of a third track necessitates that teachers broaden their scope, said Kidder. They must simultaneously reach the so-called "top" students in the level and those on the "bottom." The teacher cannot aim for the middle, he added.

DeLorenzo said that because of the high school's small size, teachers have had to teach several mixed-level classes. In this respect, Cohasset is ahead of education reform.

"Our teachers have been teaching that way for at least 10 years," he said.

Hart added that a mixed group of students working together develops cooperative learning where the strengths of various students are tapped.

The Mass. Department of Education states, "The American economy will increasingly depend on workers who have the experience of working cooperatively with others to solve complex problems."

DeLorenzo and Kidder agree that the elimination of the general tract is geared to more urban schools with larger populations and a more varied student population. In the state's blueprint for elimination of the general tract, it suggests college preparatory programs, vocational programs, apprenticeships and work-site training as program options.

Cohasset does not have a vocational high school within town limits, but does fund students who wish to travel to the South Shore Regional Vocational/Technical High School in Hanover, said Hart.

He added that in terms of apprenticeships and work-site training, Cohasset, along with 22 other local communities, is in a partnership with the South Shore Coastal Employment Board. The program, Cranberry School to Career Partnership, offers career information to students, starting at the elementary level. The partnership also sponsors job-shadowing opportunities and other links to businesses, said Hart.

Although the state's mandate to eliminate the general tract has not greatly effected Cohasset, other aspects of education reform have. What will change, principal Curtis Collins said, are curriculum frameworks, which are "technical documents for teachers from which they write curriculum."

Curtis added that these frameworks are still in the drafting process and implementation will go on for the better part of five years.

"I look on it as a good opportunity to rewrite (the curriculum)," he said.

Newcomers' Club celebrates

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club is planning to celebrate the holiday season with special parties for children and adults.

On Saturday, Dec. 9, the club will hold its annual adult Holiday Party to benefit "Globe Santa" from 6 to 8 p.m. at a member's home. Call 544-3479 for further information. All members are invited and asked to bring an hors d'oeuvre. Last year the club raised more than $600 for "Globe Santa" at its holiday party.

On Saturday, Dec. 16, the Moms & Tots Group will host their annual Children's Holiday Party from 10 a.m. to noon at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Scituate.

Parents are asked to bring a pair of new, waterproof gloves or mittens for a child of any age to be hung on the Holiday Mitten Tree. (Donations of money are also welcome.) All mittens and gloves will be given to Scituate Community Christmas for distribution to needy families. The party will feature Santa, refreshments and games and crafts. The cost is $2 per child, with a maximum of $4 per family.

Membership in the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club is open to all residents of both towns who are new to the area or are interested in getting together wilt individuals with shared interests. For membership information, call 545-4937 or 383-0454.

Dunkin' Donuts drive-thru heats up coffee war

Window to open in January

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

In January, the Dunkin Donuts shop at Cohasset Plaza will have a drive-through window so customers can purchase coffee, donuts and sandwiches without leaving their cars.

A drive-through coffee window opened at the nearby Mobil gas station this summer, an indication of the competitive coffee market, especially for morning commuters.

In an informal discussion at a recent meeting, plaza owner Donald Staszko told the planning board that the shop will be remodeled slightly to accommodate the window, which will be at the back of the building, toward Sohier St.

Staszko and his attorney, Charles Humphries, agreed to slightly modify the parking configurations to make the traffic flow safer.

To reach the drive through window, vehicles will enter the plaza from Rte. 3A and proceed to the back of the site. They will turn left to drive behind the building housing the video and liquor stores, and arrive at the window. After making their purchase, drivers will reenter the main parking lot at the end facing Rte. 3A. To leave, cars will have to cross the parking lot.

Both planning board chairman Alfred Moore and Robert Sturdy suggested it could be unsafe for vehicles to cut across the parking lot and suggested barriers to force traffic into clearly marked lanes.

Staszko agreed to install barriers to improve the traffic flow.

Since the plaza parking lot was reorganized this summer, it has a total of 113 parking spaces, more than required. Staszko said he could easily lose the 16 parking spaces to install traffic barriers.

Those spaces will remain as reserve parking, which could be used in the future if needed.

Moore said the changes in the parking plan have improved the site. In the summer Staszko moved a section of wetlands which had been surrounded by parking lot, to the back of the site, where it is now adjacent to a wild area.

"There's no question this improves the (traffic) flow," Moore said. "The wetlands belong with the (other) wetlands."

Moore also predicted the new drive through window will work well. "You have a reputation for doing a nice job," he told Staszko.

The developer had earlier wanted to create an entrance to the plaza from Sohier St., but withdrew the suggestion in the face of opposition.

Planning board member John O'Toole suggested showing the plans for the remodeling to the design review committee, which Staszko agreed to do, even though he is not required to.

"That's an excellent idea," Moore said. "It (review) is free and they (design committee) would love it."

Sturdy was also concerned that the signs and outside menu would not be intrusive.

Staszko replied that they would not be.

The 28-seat Dunkin Donuts has operated at the location since 1989 and therefore planning board approval for the drive through was not needed.

However, Staszko said he came before the board as a matter of courtesy.

Furthermore, as an existing business, the restaurant is exempt from the ban on fast food which was recently passed by town meeting.

The Dunkin Donuts at Cushing Plaza is set to close in February so that site can be rebuilt.

In an unrelated matter, Moore wondered when the mound of earth at the back of the site would be removed and was told it would be gone by spring at the latest.

School council tackles current issues

By KATHIE O'NEIL
Special to the Mariner

The November meeting of the Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School Council was held recently. The strategic planning session which was attended by three members of the council was reported on and all three spoke positively of the efforts put forth. A final report will be presented to the town shortly. Major focus areas would be curriculum, technology, facilities and communication.

Other areas of discussion during the Council's meeting were coffees with the principal for the Jr. High parents, the principal's newsletter (beginning in January) and the school newspaper.

Also parents have approached council members regarding how to go about calling a teacher if there is an issue or concern. It was advised that the avenue to follow would be teacher, department chair, principal then superintendent.

A letter was sent to the school committee encouraging it to seek input from administration, faculty, parents and council members before rendering a decision concerning restructuring school facilities and grade configuration.

A draft of the council's proposal for a School Improvement Plan was presented. After some discussion by the council it was accepted with modifications. This proposal was presented to the school committee at its late November meeting.

The next council meeting will be held Dec. 6 at 7 p.m. The public is encouraged to attend or call a school council member if there is a matter

Classes offered at SSCC

The South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., is offering several classes and activities during December.

A "Shoemaker & the Elves" Puppet Show will be held Friday, Dec. 1, at 10:30 a.m. Admission is $2 at the door.

Hedlund dinner is well-attended by Republicans and Democrats

State Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) was the guest of honor Monday evening at a dinner given at Hingham's Tosca restaurant. The dinner, which was the only event at the restaurant, was well-attended by Republicans and Democrats from Hedlund's senatorial district. After an informal discussion about local and regional political issues, Hedlund addressed the group, talking about issues of concern to his constituents in which he has been heavily involved. They include:

• The Seaport and Transportation Bond Bills – Hedlund's work on these bills has led to a commitment of $1 million for improvements to Hingham's commuter boat terminal and a further commitment of significant funds to improve the region's overall commuter boat service;

• Transportation Infrastructure Construction – Hedlund noted that 25 percent of all state road and bridge construction not related to the Central Artery project will be within his senatorial district in the next phase of state transportation infrastructure construction;

• The Megaplex – The Senator expressed pride in his lone vote in opposition to the expenditure of $1 million in state taxpayers' money to fund further study of Boston's Megaplex project;

• Public Employees' Pensions – This week the state is expected to set aside a $350,000 contribution to Hingham's employee pension fund as a direct result of Senator Hedlund's intercession;

• The Charter School – The Senator worked to assure full state funding for Hull's new Charter School.

The dinner at Tosca was one of a number of events that Senator Hedlund's grassroots supporters plan to organize to assist in Hedlund's upcoming re-election campaign. For information about future events, call James Claypoole at 749-9404.

Most people think mothers like to cook. But with Mom living alone these past few years, things had changed. She got tired of grocery shopping and fixing her own meals. We began to worry about her eating properly. Bathing and taking her medications on time were becoming difficult, too.

That's when we looked into assisted living at Allerton House. Allerton House is managed by the Welch family, a trusted name on the South Shore for over 45 years. Our first visit convinced us. This was a choice we all felt good about.

Last month, Mom moved into her own private apartment at Allerton House. Tomorrow, she's having us over for dinner. And she won't have to lift a finger.

Traditional American crafts offered at Winterfest

By VIRGINIA BARTLETT
Special to the Mariner

No matter what kind of traditional American craft you are looking for, the chances are you will find it at the fourth annual Winterfest '95, Saturday, Dec. 2, at Hingham Junior High School on Main Street from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. You will discover dozens of museum-quality objects created by 46 skilled artisans – handwoven linens, gold and silver jewelry, Victorian needlework, hand-braided wool rugs, penny wooden dolls in period costumes, decoys, spongeware, primitive paintings, hand-carved folk figures, and many other items to make your Christmas shopping special this year.

Among the unique folk art collectibles on sale will be Kate Adams' remarkable miniature quilts, each one an original based on many years of research into the history and tradition of the 19th and early 20th century quilt makers. Many hours are involved in the drafting, fabric selection, cutting and stitching of these charming limited edition miniatures which also utilize the techniques of stenciling, hand appliqué and ink embellishments.

Adams learned quilting as a child from her mother and grandmother, then worked as a costume designer and with a living history center, making costumes for Renaissance and other historic fairs.

Adams chooses her fabrics carefully. To take apart important quilts or historic clothing would be unthinkable, she believes, so she uses small snippets, bits and pieces gleaned from early quilt makers' scrap bags found in estate sales, farm auctions and antique stores. Flaws in the fabric are often apparent, and signs of wear and tear add to the antique look. Created on a scale of 1 inch to 1 foot, her miniatures have been featured in Early American Life, Colonial Homes and Victoria. Although her work is represented in many galleries, Winterfest '95 visitors will have a unique opportunity to view and purchase these unusual folk art miniature quilts right here in Hingham.

Susan Edholm of Sharon, Conn., is another craftsperson who creates exceptional handmade needlework, but she specializes in reproduction 18th century children's wear. Her museum-quality period clothing for youngsters includes Christening gowns and caps, baby clothes, jackets, dresses and bonnets in all-natural materials of wool and linen. Each piece is individually hand-crafted, and she strives for the highest quality and accuracy in reproducing these garments. Even the buttons are handmade of wood, horn or pewter.

Children and adults alike respond with delight to Cathy Shamel's Jellicle cats, cats in dozens of incarnations as primitive paintings, dolls, angels and many other accessories. Shamel considers herself a true folk artist, since she has had no formal art training. She began working in a New York City youth center, involving kids in craft and art activities, with an emphasis on cats. Her hobby grew into a full time job, and the rest is history.

Admission to Winterfest '95 is $3 for adults and $1 for children under 12. Luncheon and refreshments will be available in the Holiday Cafe. Winterfest '95 is sponsored by the Hingham Historical Society, and proceeds will help to support the ongoing activities of the society. Winterfest '95 is wheelchair accessible.

Book Angel program returns

In the spirit of sharing holiday happiness, Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cohasset, and Buttonwood for Kids, Hingham, is again holding a Book Angel program. From now through Dec. 18, a 15 percent discount on books purchased through the program will be given to children and adults served by Wellspring in Hull and as gifts to children served by the Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Mary Martha Learning Center and the South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program.

For further information call 383-2665 or 749-2665. Both children and adults are invited to participate in the program.

Youngsters are key to crew team's future

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset High crew coach Jack Buckley has the exciting prospect of a young squad to work with for the next few years. It's a safe bet that the Skippers will go through some major improvements as they continue with the sport, which is growing in popularity among men and women.

Rowing with a crew of three females and four males, the Skippers placed fifth in the New England High School Rowing Championship at the Charlestown Navy Yard. The day-long event was made up of five quarter-mile sprints.

Coach Jack Buckley said the combination of added conditioning and more races would play a big part in the team's improvement.

"Inexperience is a factor," Buckley said.

Cohasset does have three experienced seniors in Cyrus Dolph, Anthony Green and David Marr, but the sophomore and freshman crew members still have nothing but time to perfect their skills on the open sea. The sophomores include Ben Laney and Dawn Masa while the freshman unit is made up of Susana Candia, Karyn Gray and Buck Hubbell.

"I think the five who are coming back could develop into very good rowers," Buckley said.

Hull High was the overall winner and Hingham finished just in front of Cohasset for fourth place.

The squad had a respectable racing season this fall with a pair of second- and third-place showings. During the winter Buckley hopes to get the kids involved with indoor rowing competitions.

The season culminates with the CRASH B competition in Feb. at Harvard University. The letters are an acronym for Charles River All-Star Has-Been. It is considered a world championship with very stiff competition.

Although the team will do very little rowing outside, Buckley says the squad will keep in shape by "working out on the erg." The ergometer is a rowing machine which measures the speed and effort of a rower. The same rowing motion is used without the worry of frostbite or being capsized by large waves.

"It's a real tough machine to work out on," Buckley said.

Hull teaches Cohasset a lesson with 41-0 win

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers wrapped up their season with a 41-0 loss to the Hull Pirates on Thanksgiving, a game played under frigid conditions at Hull High School. The Skippers gave their best efforts, as always, but were no match for the stronger, and, most importantly, more experienced Hull squad.

Cohasset's team was greatly diminished by the loss of 14 key players from last year. Senior captains Brain Sasso and Brian Riley, both hard-working veterans who start on both sides of the ball, provided leadership both on and off the field this year.

Sasso, in fact, playing the Thanksgiving game on a bad knee which barely allowed him to walk, still gutted it out, coming up with several big tackles and throwing vicious blocks. Sasso's quiet determination set an example for the younger players. Few will be able to forget his heroic efforts while playing on one leg. Riley, who could often be seen flying through the air to make a tackle, was a bright spot at linebacker this year, and a stalwart on the offensive line. Riley's intensity and hard work on the field earned him more than a few key tackles this season.

Senior Ben Keefe, who started the year as the team's quarterback, injured his thumb in the second game of the season and was moved to tailback. Gaining more than 150 yards two times this season, Keefe anchored the backfield and played outstanding defense from his position as safety.

Newcomer Pat Reynolds was another standout this year for the Skippers. The senior started both at defensive and offensive end. His superior speed and hustle allowed him to pair with sophomore Jamie Buick to pressure opposing quarterbacks as well as haul in several catches of his own.

Nearly all of Reynolds' snags were fired by sophomore quarterback Pat Hurley. Hurley was thrusted into his starting role as signal-caller in the third game of the season in his first year of organized football. Hurley's skills vastly improved over the season and his improvement after only eight games was

Healthy team is Ardizzoni's main concern

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

After battling injuries and sickness for two seasons, the Cohasset High gymnastics team is entering the '95-96 campaign with some level-headed goals. The main goal is easy enough: stay healthy. Head coach Ruth Ardizzoni believes the girls' talent and dedication will take over if goal No. 1 is accomplished.

"We've really got to stay healthy and injury-free," Ardizzoni said of the Lady Skippers, winner of the past two South Shore League titles. "We happen to be unfortunate enough where we get sick every year."

Unlike last season when the Skippers had 11 girls on the squad, the team will be without three gymnasts who transferred to private school. Cohasset, however, does have the nucleus of the last two championship seasons back and is still very young.

Tafana Fiore is the lone senior on the squad and one of five returning All-Stars. The other four include juniors Jodi Colwill, Megan Pratt and Erica Hettstrom, and freshman Tara Hettstrom. Carolyn Pratt, Kristen Reynolds and Lauren Genovese will also be called upon to play major roles on this year's team.

Despite being named to the All-Star squad last winter, Erica Hettstrom, had a particularly rough season. Hettstrom, the top all-around gymnast in the SSL in '94-95, was diagnosed with mononucleosis late in the season and forced out of the championship meets. She later had a relapse and had her gall bladder removed in the summer.

Hettstrom's ailments kept her out of the gym for five months, but she is slowly working her way back into shape. Ardizzoni hopes Hettstrom can regain top form by the end of the season.

"I'm happy with the progress she has made," Ardizzoni said.

Ardizzoni said she is particularly impressed with the work of two-time All-Star Jodi Colwill. Colwill didn't miss a beat at the end of the high school campaign and continued training straight through the summer and fall.

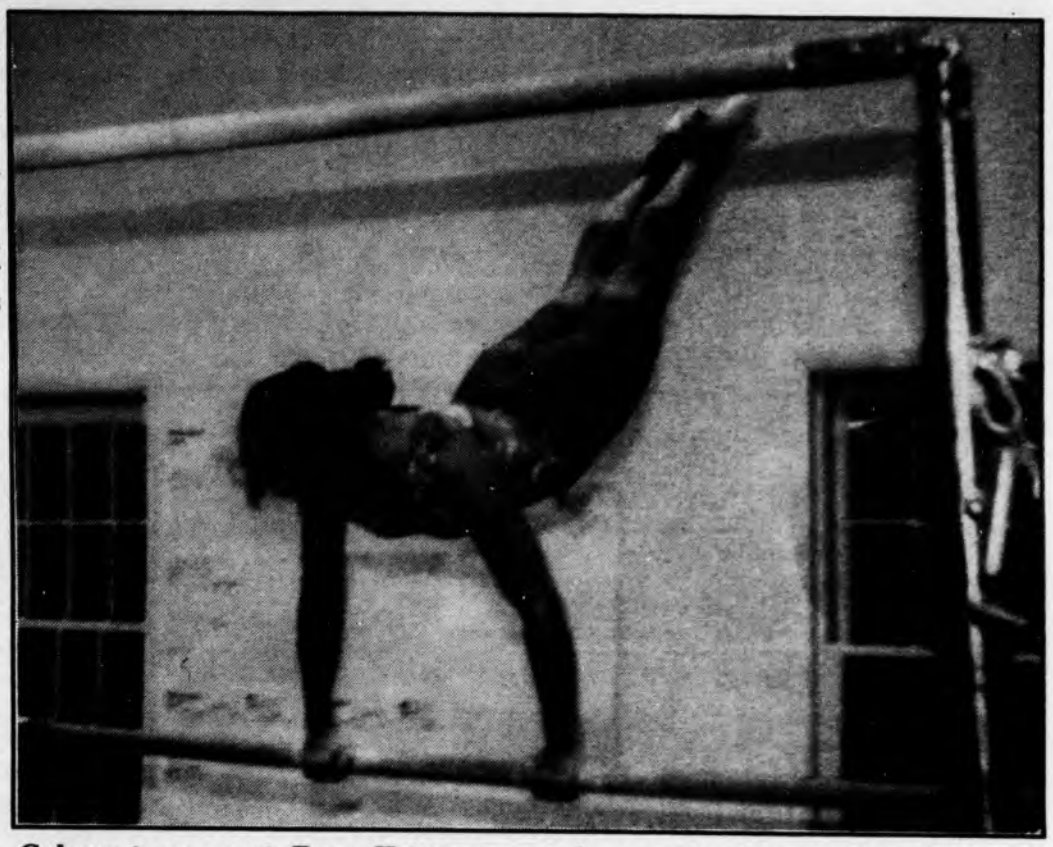
"She has been working very hard and has been very faithful," Ardizzoni said. "Jodi could sprout up this season."

Ardizzoni expects Hanover and Scituate to be Cohasset's biggest roadblocks this season. She said the Skippers will be "pushing for the top spot," but knows the team's health and determination is still the key as to how far Cohasset will go.

"They have told me they would like another league championship," Ardizzoni said. "It's up to them how they finish. If they (Hanover) beat us because they are better than us then that's O.K. But if we are the better team and don't do our best, that's tough to take."



Cohasset gymnast Tara Hettstrom works on her bar routine during a practice session. A South Shore League All-Star last winter, Hettstrom will be a vital part to the Skippers' this season.

Two flags are missing

Sometime during late summer, the American flag and the CYBA baseball flag disappeared from the flagpole at Barnes Little League Field.

The American flag is a 4-foot by 6-foot cloth flag, and the baseball flag is a 3-foot by 5-foot nylon flag featuring a baseball and the motto, "Our children are our future."

Anyone having information about the missing flags is asked to call 383-6141 or return them to the flagpole anonymously.

Hoop shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting registration applications for a basketball shooting clinic for girls and boys, grades four through eight.

Head Cohasset basketball coaches Ron Ford and Cori Hughes will co-direct this three-day clinic to be held Tuesday, Dec. 26, through Thursday, Dec. 28.

Shooting clinic will be held at the Sullivan Gym, CHS, from 9 a.m to noon. The fee is $60. The three day program is designed to help younger players develop correct fundamentals involved with shooting the basketball. Students will receive individual instruction, attend lectures and participate in shooting competitions.

To register, please complete forms available at the Cohasset Recreation Office, first floor, town hall.

Late ski registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept late registrations for Blue Hills ski lessons for youngsters ages seven and over at the recreation office, town hall.

Late hoop registrations

If you have not yet registered for winter basketball for girls and boys grades one through eight, please do so immediately at the recreation office, town hall. Evaluations are to be held Saturday, Dec. 2.

Spring soccer registration

All players participating in the fall 1995 program are automatically registered for spring 1996.

Any other players wishing to be on a spring 1996 team can pick up a registration form at the Osgood, Deer Hill or high school offices.

Deadline for registration is Dec. 1.

For other information call 383-1206.

Wrestling lessons offered

The South Shore Community Center will be offering wrestling Monday, Dec. 11, from 4 to 5 p.m. and 5 to 6 p.m. for eight weeks under the direction of Peter Buckley. Students will learn the basic take-down moves, the three starting positions and live wrestle. (Come in sweats and sneakers.) Call 617-383-0088.

Draft dates set

It is important that your son/daughter attends a 45-minute evaluation session so that balanced teams can be drafted. Please note the date, time and place from the schedule below:

Saturday, Dec. 2:

Grade 1 boys and girls, 9 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 2 boys and girls, 10:30 a.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 3 boys and girls, 12:30 p.m. Deer Hill School.

Grade 4 boys, 9 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 5 boys, 10 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 6 boys, 11:30 a.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7 boys, 12:30 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 8 boys, 2 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 4-6 girls, 3 p.m. CHS gym up.

Grade 7-8 girls, 4 p.m. CHS gym up.

Coaches will draft immediately following these evaluations and call you shortly thereafter regarding team status.

Including playoffs, finals and consolations, a total of at least eight games will be played by all participants. League rules provide for an equal division of playing time, emphasize the team concept of play and encourage sportsmanship, rather than just winning. Team rosters, schedules and rules will be provided at the first game.

Thank you for your continued support. We hope to again make refreshments available throughout the season if enough volunteers come forward to manage the concession stands.

Questions or comments, just call Jack Worley at 383-6791.

Meditation/Chi Kung seminar

Sunday, Dec. 3, Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi/Internal Arts will offer a one day seminar in Taoist meditation and chi kung practices. Attendees will learn the Taoist Chi (life force) energy meditation, which is the foundation practice for Tao meditation and chi kung. This approach has been practiced for centuries to calm the spirit and to relax the mind and relieve stress. Included in the seminar will be a chi kung practice noted for strengthening the immune system and for improving posture, balance and coordination. No previous experience is required and beginners are welcome. Jade Forest is located on Route 3A in Cohasset. For rates and further information please call John Loupos at 383-6822.

excellent.

Hurley was protected this year by an offensive line comprised not only of Riley and Sasso, but seniors Nate Caldwell, Greg Stevens, and Mike Coats, and juniors Chad Whitman and Jarred Batts, as well as sophomore John Kasameyer. Caldwell, who stands 6-foot, 6-inches and weighs in at 265 pounds, provided some much-needed muscle and experience on the line, as well as snagging a few tosses at tight end.

Stevens, who also played his first season on the gridiron this year, played on both the offensive and defensive lines and played with an intensity and ferocity which helped him make tackles and be involved in nearly every play. Coates was yet another Skipper rookie who contributed to the squad. Providing the team with some size, Coates' quiet demeanor and all-out hustle helped Cohasset on both sides of the ball.

Whitman, Batts, Jones and Kasameyer will anchor the Skippers' offensive and defensive fronts next year. Whitman, 6-foot, 2-inches, 250 pounds, was a brick wall in the middle and Batts, although he dispensed punishing hits, was agile and quick to get into opponents' backfields. Kasameyer combined strength with quickness to punish an opponent. Jones, who played his first varsity season this year, should also be a force up front for two more years.

Senior Keith Wright was also an integral part of the Skippers' season. Playing noseguard despite his 5 foot, 7 inch, 160 pound frame, Wright was involved in some big plays and helped keep his teammates fired up.

Kevin Gentile was a versatile player for the Skippers this year at running back, lineback and defensive back. Providing the Skippers with some big tackles and sacks, he also paved the way for some of Keefe's best runs, while coming up with a few excellent carries of his own.

Yet Keefe and Gentile have not been alone in the backfield. Junior Grant Emde and sophomore Andy Hamilton played well, both running and blocking. Emde had several long runs this season and played well at defensive back. Hamilton figures to be a sure thing in Cohasset's backfield for the next two years. Kevin Duffy also played well at back this season, though his best moments came at defensive back. Duffy made key interceptions this year and helped to stop numerous runs as well. Eric Snow, in his first year of football, showed speed and quickness both out of the backfield and returning kicks.

Matt Conley and Sean Cogill, more Skippers who didn't play last season, helped to solidify Cohasset's defense. Cogill exhibited a rare combination of strength with speed. He played the linebacker position and Conley helped pressure opposing quarterbacks from his defensive end spot.

Junior Doug Sheerin, who played defensive back this year, was what Coach Bob Knurek called "tenacious" and should provide the Skippers with leadership in the secondary next year. Kevin Smith also played well in the secondary, filling the deep safety position quite well while serving as the Skippers' kicker.

While the Skippers were led by seniors this year, they look forward to help from their returning underclassmen and a strong group of about 20 freshmen to lead them next year. The Cohasset football program started the rebuilding process and behind the stellar example of this year's graduates, should excel next season and for many more to come.

Coastal Christmas House Tour set for Dec. 7

Making preparations for the Cohasset House Tour are Community Garden Club members (L-R) Lee Androski, Chris Camacho and Maura Ditmar.

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will showcase six unique homes reflecting a wide variety of styles and sizes on their Coastal Christmas House Tour, which will be held Thursday, Dec. 7 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

A recently remodeled ranch with its higher ceilings now captures a view of the ocean and offers a more gracious living space, while a tiny home overlooking the harbor is a treasure trove of colors, patterns and textures.

A larger Jerusalem Road house has the space for amenities such as a home theater, while another home, overlooking Little Harbor, was designed to capture the vistas from ledge to water and shoreline.

A colonial home features a collection of intricate Santa Claus figures, handmade needlework and sets of Noah's Arks. Another home off Jerusalem Road showcases a large colonial fireplace that dominates a kitchen decorated with bright, cheerful colors.

All six homes, which range from casual to refined, offer decorating ideas that are creative and stylish. Advance tickets are $15 at South Shore Community Center or by calling Peg Smart at 383-6438. Tickets on the day of the tour are $20 and will be sold at the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common beginning at 10 a.m.

Refreshments will be served at the church from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Proceeds will benefit the club's scholarship fund and other civic projects such as the Lighthousekeeper's home.

Open house at lightkeepers

The Cohasset Lightkeepers will open Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' House on Government Island for a Christmas Open House from 2 to 6 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 10. Everyone is welcome to enjoy hot cider, coffee, hot cocoa and homemade holiday treats. Holiday music and caroling will fill Bancroft Hall. Contributions to the Council on Aging Medical Access program are welcome at the door.

The Council on Aging has been working to develop a comprehensive program of transportation for clients who have scheduled medical appointments. Currently, by combining a variety of available services, this goal has been nearly met, but there are still needs. Contributions made to the Medical Access program will help to fill these gaps and provide for full-time transportation availability for Cohasset residents. Checks payable to COA (MAP) will be graciously received at the door.

Bancroft Hall is the first floor of the old lightkeepers' residence on Government Island, which has been renovated through the efforts of community volunteers and donors.

Merrie Market at Old Ship Church

Old Ship Church, will hold its annual Merrie Market on Saturday, Dec. 2, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Parish House, 107 Main St., Hingham.

The old-fashioned fair welcomes people of all ages, and will feature children's toys, handmade crafts, homemade baked goods and gifts for pets. Festive holiday wreaths and centerpieces will also be sold, and there will be a raffle table offering a handcrafted advent calendar and uniquely designed gifts. Proceeds will benefit Old Ship Church.

A Solstice Table, with gifts focusing on sun-moon-angel themes will be a highlight of the fair, and hot cider, cocoa and fresh baked goods will be available from the church kitchen.

All Paws benefit set for Dec. 12

Winners of the nearly 50 prizes donated by area merchants, restaurateurs, service professionals and other friends to the fourth annual All Paws Rescue Benefit Drawing will be announced at Chili's, Queen Ann's Corner, Hingham, Tuesday, Dec. 12, beginning at 7 p.m.

Chances are $1 each or 16 for $15. Winners need not be present to win. To purchase benefit drawing coupons, or for further information, call 749-0968.

Concert heralds holiday season

Amid glowing candles and Christmas greenery, the Old Ship Church will host a Hingham Civic Orchestra Yuletide Concert Sunday, Dec. 3, at 4 p.m. The event has been held annually for nearly a quarter of a century.

The concert will open with the stately sound of brass instruments in a Michael Praetorius piece, followed by "In Dulci Jubilo" by Orlando de Lassus, featuring Old Ship's new organ.

The concert will also include Mozart's joyful "Sleigh Ride," a group of ancient carols arranged for woodwind quintet by Judy Hardy, the "Sandman" scene and "Children's Prayer" from Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel," dances from "The Nutcracker", instrumental music from Handel's "Messiah" and a suite of ancient dances by Susato. The concert will close with the audience joining the orchestra in singing familiar carols.

A Wassail Bowl Reception will be held at the Parish House across the street from the church immediately following the concert. Tickets for the hour-long concert are $8 each, and are available at Hingham Public Library, at the door or by calling 925-1311 or 749-4411 (evenings). Those interested in reserving tickets are asked not to call the church.

New dance class offered at SSCC

South Shore Community Center has announced that Session II dance classes will begin the week of Dec. 4. A new dance class with Donna Joyce has been added, and will be held Tuesdays, starting Dec. 5, from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Dance classes are offered for young people in Grade 4 through high school. The Dance Company Class is designed for students who wish to pursue dancing to a higher and more technical level and offers more structured training in ballet, jazz and creative modern dance technique. One full year of dance experience is required or teacher permission. Proper dance attire and shoes are required. Call 383-0088 to register.

Unicorn Singers at First Parish

This season's annual Christmas Concert at First Parish on Saturday, Dec. 9, at 4:30 p.m. will again feature the talented Unicorn Singers creatively directed by Margo Euler. Respighi's "Laud to the Nativity" will be performed with chorus, soloists and chamber orchestrato. It is said to be one of choral literature's most gorgeous Christmas cantatas. This poignant telling of the angel's visit to the shepherds and their joyous journey to Bethlehem, includes sublime moments for men's chorus a cappella; rhythmic jubilation for full chorus, woodwinds, and piano four-hands and intimate moments of duet for solo soprano with English horn, as Mary and the angel sing their part of the familiar complements the arrangement.

As always, festive carol arrangements for all to sing together will be included with an exciting adaptation of Vaughan Williams' beautiful "Fantasia on Christmas Carols." The concert will benefit Father Bill's Place in Quincy, a transitional and emergency shelter for homeless men and women.

Patrons are welcome. A $40 contribution includes two tickets by return mail. Five dollar tickets will go on sale at the church office December 1. The church office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. to answer questions and sign up patrons for the concert. Call 383-1100 for further information.

Consumers count pennies; retailers hope for cheery season ago and are feeling only slightly better about job security, said Rich Sneider, senior audit manager with Deloitte. Also, while retailers expect sales to be up this year, the majority expect profits to be less than stellar.

With the average worker's wages rising only three percent over the past year, people may have maxed out on their credit cards to make major "must have" purchases during the year like appliances that they wouldn't otherwise be able to afford.

"I'll be spending less," said Judy Hines of Scituate who was shopping at the Hanover Mall the weekend before Thanksgiving. She had just snapped up a couple of national brand sweatshirts for $15 each, half the usual price.

Hines said she's cutting back this year out of concern for her husband's job security at a big warehouse distribution center where there are labor union problems.

"I think my husband may lose his job by the end of the year," she stated. "We'll get by somehow," she said, adding that her own job is secure.

Even during good times, Hines says she makes ends meet by shopping for sales after the holidays.

Jean Kraus of Rockland said she's not impressed with the price reductions she's seen so far this holiday season.

"I'll be spending less, way less" this year, she said. "The prices are crazy. Everyone I know is cutting back."

Diane Robinson of Hanover was also at the Hanover Mall shopping with her husband and two children.

A teacher, she'll be charging a lot of her Christmas shopping but doing it conservatively.

Still, with two adolescents, it's hard to cut back at Christmas, she lamented. "We'll probably spend the same amount as last year. We use one credit card," she said.

Robinson said her husband, an electronics engineer, was in between jobs this fall after working for the same company for 15 years.

"It was scary," she said.

DESPITE THIS dose of reality, retailers are counting on a 3-to-5 percent increase in sales over last Christmas which would still be a disappointment over the 7 percent increase in sales from 1993 to 1994.

"Last year was a relatively good holiday season. Even reaching last year's level will be an accomplishment," Hurst said.

"We believe sales will be up, but probably not a robust increase," said Hurst, who added that retailers are expecting apparel to sell well this year. Men's and women's apparel, items that need to be replaced, have not sold well for the last three or four years.

"There is a pent-up demand in the area of apparel," Hurst said.

Smaller specialty retailers like Jackanson's gift shop in Marshfield survive the holiday hustle by "sticking to the basics," said owner Jack Dennehy. The store was left holding the bag a few years back when the troll fad went bust. This year the store has found a winning gift item in the Marshfield historic afghan that sells for $44.95.

As a small retailer, Dennehy puts little faith in the predictions of economists regarding holiday sales. "They don't know," he said.

The fight for holiday consumers is fiercest among big department stores and national discount chains. With the price distinctions between Kmart and J. C. Penney blurred, some retailers are seeing a trend back to the traditional department store where good values can be found.

"There's a lot of competition out there," said Hurst. "There's a great deal of promotion to get customers in the door."

To compete, stores are slashing prices early in the holiday season, offering coupons and using other come-on's, all of which are survival strategies that eat into profits.

The cut-throat competition "is good news for consumers," said Hurst. "No retailer wants to have a lot of their inventory left on Dec. 26."

Retailers are gambling that electronic sales and home entertainment gifts will be big this year. Rollerblades are also high on children's wish lists.

Sears has revamped 100 stores around the country featuring an improved electronics department and larger inventories in apparel and cosmetics.

"There's been a trend in upgrading the entertainment value in the home," said Mark Mettler, manager of Sears in Hanover Mall.

* * *

EXPECTING A whopping 10 percent increase in sales this holiday season, the national chain has not cut back on inventory.

"Our overall inventories are higher," said Mettler.

Retailers expect wide-screen televisions to be in demand this year, even at the pricey range of $2,000 and up.

Stores are also pinning their hopes on the popularity of flashy new video games like Saturn by Sega and Play Station by Sony. The game systems aren't cheap, selling for between $300 and $350.

"These are generating a lot of excitement in video player games," said Mettler.

That may be one of the few areas that's generating excitement this Christmas.

One woman buying boxer shorts in the men's department of Filene's at the Hanover Mall seemed to sum up the bah humbug mood of many holiday shoppers. Asking for a gift box, she sighed, "Oh, well, you can't be creative every year."

Local shops report brisk sales with cash and cards

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

There is no evidence of a slow Christmas shopping season in Cohasset.

With the first weekend under their belts, local merchants report brisk sales as their customers prepare for the holidays–many armed with credit cards.

Valerie King at King Jewellers said this week that her sales have exceeded those recorded at the same time last year.

"We've done 20 per cent above last year," she said.

And, unlike reports that consumers are avoiding credit cards, she has seen plenty of "plastic": 27 per cent more than the same period in 1994.

Diamonds of all sorts are very popular among shoppers, King said. Heart-shaped diamond pendants have joined the diamond "tennis" bracelet in popularity.

Across Route 3A, at the Barn at Bound Brook, partner Chris Johnson said his customers are decking the halls with bees wax candles, velvet-robed Santas, and Christmas ornaments.

Christmas represents approximately one-third of his sales, and customers are using their credit cards.

"It's just the opposite," he said of his experience as compared to reported national trends for more cash transactions.

Betsy Detwiler at Buttonwood Books and Toys also reports higher sales and more credit card use than last year at this time.

"We just don't follow trends," she said.

Detwiler is especially attentive to her sales this year since there are now two Buttonwood stores: one in Hingham Square, as well as Cohasset.

The Hingham store is now established, having been open a little more than a year. Detwiler said she wanted to see if the stores were competing with each other, but that has not been the case. Each is showing healthy sales and attracting more customers.

"It started out quiet on Saturday," she said, but by the end of the day, "we were well above last year for the weekend after Thanksgiving."

Classic children's books, such as fairy tales, "Treasure Island," and "Little Woman," as well as Lego blocks, Playmobil playsets, and Geo Safari mini-computer are popular gifts.

'We just don't follow trends.'

— Betsy Detwiler of Buttonwood Books.

For older children, parents and grandparents are buying craft kits and the "Mystix" juggling sticks.

While many travellers have already made their plans for trips during upcoming the Christmas school vacation, Justine van der Lugt at Cohasset Travel has seen an increase in customers making plans for mid-winter and early spring vacations.

"It's really starting to pick up," she said. "People are going more for active, adventure vacations."

Rather than a relaxing week on a Caribbean beach, she has seem more interest in trips to hike the rain forests in Central America, or scuba diving off Costa Rica.

The Christmas shopping season hasn't really started at Curtis Liquors.

Manager Joe Gagne said his sales pick up as the days tick closer to Christmas. Gifts of wine in particular tend to be "last-minute" items.

"But, we had a great Thanksgiving," he said. "It was significantly better than last year."

His customers have been particularly anxious of the French Beaujolais Nouveau that Curtis has had air-shipped from France. This saves about two weeks over conventional shipping.

In one way, Cohasset is following national trends: Gagne noted an increase in sale of red wines, which he attributes to recent news reports of health benefits.

Local company offers free blood pressure screenings

In celebration of National Home Health Care Week, Nov. 28-Dec. 2, Fidelity Home Health Services of Cohasset is offering free blood pressure screening.

Contact Fidelity's office at 383-1060 to schedule an appointment. Arrangements can be made to visit the home of anyone unable to get to Fidelity's office across from Bergson's Ice Cream on Rte. 3A.

Linda McCarthy, R.N., has recently been named the director of Clinical Services at Fidelity Home Health Services. With more than 20 years experience, McCarthy's focus will be to develop Fidelity's concentration in the private pay sector of home health care through her expertise in quality assurance and staff development.

McCarthy is also very active in her hometown, Cohasset. She is involved with the Elder Affairs Board, the Drug and Alcohol Committee, and the Teen Center.

VERC in joint venture with community center

VERC Enterprises of Duxbury announced its joint venture with the South Shore Community Center in a fundraising promotion involving VERC's briteway car washes in Norwell (Route 3) and Marshfield (Route 139).

The South Shore Community Center will receive part of the proceeds from every specially-priced briteway coupon sold. South Shore residents are invited to purchase these coupons at the center from Nov. 24 through the holidays.

The joint partnership between VERC Enterprises and the South Shore Community Center began with VERC's Grand Opening of its Quikava on 3A in Cohasset, which also benefited the South Shore Community Center.

Man charged with A & B on local officers

A 35-year-old Scituate man led two local police departments on a chase Nov. 22 before allegedly assaulting four officers while being captured.

Thomas A. Ballerino, 35, 28 Gridley Bryant Road, Scituate, was charged with four counts of assault-and-battery on a police officer, four counts of malicious destruction of property valued at $250 or less (uniform units), and one count of domestic assault-and-battery.

Scituate police received a call from their Cohasset counterparts at 3:06 a.m. that police had attempted to stop a vehicle on Route 3A. The operator took off at speeds estimated at 90 mph. When Scituate officer Harold Westcott arrived at Ballerino's home, he discovered the vehicle had apparently crashed into a stone wall in the yard. Officers checked the area but were unable to locate the operator until 6:36 a.m., when they received a 9-1-1 call about a domestic disturbance at the residence. At 6:44 a.m., Scituate police requested mutual aid for a domestic dispute, Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

When officers arrived, Ballerino allegedly appeared in the yard and fled through back of house into an extensive marsh and brush area that runs between Gridley Bryant and Gannett Road.

Police said he then fled into the marshland in the Gulf River area. Police received a call from a resident at 6:52 a.m. that a suspicious man was spotted off Gannett Road. Two officers from Scituate and two from Cohasset, Patrolmen Jeffrey Treanor and Greg Lennon, confronted Ballerino and he allegedly turned on them and attacked them. They were able to place him under arrest at 7:17 a.m.

None of the police required medical treatment. The charges of destruction of property refer to uniforms that were torn during the struggle.

Cohasset police are seeking complaints against Ballerino for failure to stop for a police officer, operating to endanger, and speeding, Jackson said.

Ballerino was arraigned on the Scituate charges Nov. 22 in Hingham District Court. He was being held in the Plymouth County House of Corrections pending his next court date Nov. 29.

Drug use alleged in accident

Police are still investigating "possible further charges regarding the passengers" involved in a one-car accident Nov. 25, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

The operator of the 1988 Jeep Cherokee, Matthew D. Keefe, 19, 35 Stephens Lane, Cohasset was cited for operating under the influence (drugs); possession of a Class D controlled substance; failure to keep right; operating negligently so as to endanger the lives and safety of the public; no use of seat belt; and speeding, Jackson said.

State police, who reconstructed the accident, estimate that Keefe was travelling about 66 miles per hour in a posted 30 mph zone, Jackson said.

Keefe was travelling east on Norman Todd Road about about 2 a.m., when the car he was driving went of the street, struck a couple of cedar trees, and rolled over at least once, Jackson said.

Injured in the accident were passengers Victoria Maynard, 19, 20 Locust Road, Cohasset; Sarah Atherton, 19, 34 Clay Spring Road, Cohasset; and Matthew Cox, 20, 15 Shoal Water Road, Scituate. Atherton was treated and released at South Shore Hospital; and Maynard was listed in good condition Tuesday, hospital officials said..

Police said Keefe has requested a hearing on the charges in Quincy District Court.

Straits Pond sewer hook-up plan is in the works

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

With a draft municipal agreement with Hull and Hingham on the table, Cohasset sewer commissioners are moving ahead on a sewer project that if approved will give relief to one of the town's biggest trouble spots – Straits Pond.

Described by Sewer Commission Chair Ted Guild as a large evaporating pan with little tidal flow, Straits Pond has been an on-going problem for the town and the state's tough Title V regulations have drawn more attention to a worsening situation. The pond itself is an area of critical environmental concern (ACEC), said Guild who noted that nitrates and phosphates produced by septic systems adjacent to the pond encourage the growth of Phragmites, weeds that can choke off the pond.

Currently the Hull hook-up plan calls for the allocation of a total of 110,000 gallons per day to be shared by Hingham and Cohasset to be pumped to the Hull plant. Cohasset will get 65,000 of the 110,000 gallons per day allowed.

Guild said the plan to sewer the Straits Pond homes would be done in conjunction with one of two other sewer projects under consideration by the state. Both plans would involve upgrading the town's waste water treatment plant with one discharging into James Brook and the other into Cohasset Harbor.

The town is currently under a court agreement for judgement by the state to sewer 1/3 of the town – about 650 homes- by April 1, 1999.

The next scheduled meeting on the proposed joint project is Thursday, Dec. 7 at Hull Town Hall.

If either plan is approved – the James Brook alternative has the most public support so far – Guild said, he'd like to move forward as quickly as possible on this tri-town project.

While Guild noted that Hull commissioners have negotiated identical but separate agreements with Cohasset and Hingham, there is a third agreement between Hingham and Cohasset.

The two towns will share sewer costs along Hull Street which runs through both communities and for a pumping station and force main that will pump the waste water against gravity up Nantasket Avenue and into the Hull system, he said.

Guild would give no cost estimate for the project, but said he'd like to win approval for the project by the annual town meeting in March. If the state approves one of the two sewer alternatives expeditiously, Guild said the commission might be able to bring the project to the floor of the special town meeting slated for January.

If the proposal is approved by voters, construction could begin by spring of 1997 and would be completed by the state-imposed sewer deadline.

Capital costs for the project would go onto the town's tax rate – while operating, maintenance, and user fees would be charged to the users, Guild said.

"We're waiting to hear from the state," said Guild, who noted that two representatives from the Department of Environmental Protection have been on hand for recent meetings on the proposed project.

Guild is pleased the project is going forward and feels confident that, as the pond is shared by both Cohasset and Hull, the Straits Pond hook-up is something both towns want.

The next scheduled meeting on the proposed joint project is Thursday, Dec. 7 at Hull Town Hall.

Greenbush rail ready to roll

MBTA says lawsuits won't derail the train

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Still feeling "bullish about rail" a week after Governor William Weld announced plans to restore the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad, state transportation planners are moving ahead on the project and expect to have a final environmental impact report completed by some time this spring, said MBTA Director of Planning Geoffrey Slater.

Current construction estimates call for work on the line to begin as early as mid-1997 with completion expected by mid to late 1999.

Lawsuits launched by rail opponents may slow the project, Slater said, but they won't stop it.

"We expect to get sued," he said. "But we don't expect any lawsuits to prevail."

One lawsuit that had the MBTA concerned had already been filed by the Conservation Law Foundation, a non-profit environmental law organization working to protect public health and natural resources in New England.

Gov. Weld's decision gets mixed reviews

Local reactions are mixed following news of Gov. William Weld's decision to go ahead with the train.

As Hingham looks into the legal issues surrounding the project – including the MBTA's plan to fund the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad with state money exempting the project from federal environmental regulations – members of the anti-rail Coastal Coalition are calling for Lt. Governor Paul Cellucci to intervene and force the governor to rescind his decision.

Weld announced the state's plan to restore the Greenbush line, last Thursday (Nov. 30) before a crowd of 800 South Shore business people assembled at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce breakfast at the Lantana in Randolph.

Coalition founder Nancy Buckley called the decision to restore commuter rail service to the Greenbush line "a disgrace" and attributes Weld's announcement to a lack of information about the project.

Landfill expansion plan is back in town's court

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Years of lobbying state environmental agencies to oppose the proposed expansion of Cohasset Heights ended last week with the Department of Environmental Protection's qualified approval of the controversial 27.5 acre project.

Town officials and local environmentalists are angry and feel betrayed over the DEP's finding that the site proposed for the expansion is suitable for construction and demolition debris and see no victory that acceptance of municipal solid waste would not be allowed.

"The onus has been put on this little community when they (state) passed it right through," lamented Selectman Martha Gjesteby, who noted the town has spent upwards of $400,000 in legal fees in its battle with the privately-owned landfill.

Gjesteby charged the state is holding the town's to a higher standard.

"The conservation commission has (applicants) run through hoops before they can do something," she noted about the local board dealing with state regulations. "And then the Board to pick building option for new school

At its meeting tonight (Thursday, Dec. 7) the school committee will vote on how it wants to solve the school over crowding problem.

The meeting will be held at 8 p.m. at the high school.

The committee is considering two choices, both of which require the construction of a new elementary school, probably on land between the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools.

The new facility will likely house kindergarten through grade three. Option one calls for the Deer Hill to house grades four through six. Option two would place grades four through seven at Deer Hill.

The dilapidated Osgood School would be closed.

The plan will be presented to the public at the Dec. 13 meeting of the school facilities committee, which is scheduled to be held in the AV room at the high school.

After the school committee votes, the issue must be presented to town meeting and a Proposition 2 1/2 override be approved by voters

Budget process changes

In the future, Cohasset voters could be asked to attend two town meetings each year.

Selectmen and financial officials Monday night considered whether to permanently include requests for capital expenditures at a fall special town meeting, as is now done in some communities.

At the special town meeting in November, voters did consider a number of capital requests, giving the procedure a sort of trial run.

Roger Whitley of the advisory committee and town accountant Michael Buckley said the change could allow the spring town meeting to concentrate on the operating budget.

This would allow the advisory committee to offer more informed recommendations on warrant articles, they said.

Although selectmen like the policy, several said items requiring Proposition 2 1/2 overrides should be considered at the annual spring meeting to avoid confusion.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said she wanted to avoid placing two override questions before voters in one calendar year.

In a related matter, selectmen vowed to be more strict about deadlines for submitting budgets and other financial articles for town meeting.

After a long discussion Monday night, the board agreed to a suggestion by selectman Michael Sullivan that town committees and departments submit requests for town meeting articles on printed forms which will ask how much each item is expected to cost.

They will also impose tighter deadlines.

In addition, departments and committees under the jurisdiction of selectmen will be required to submit town meeting articles to selectmen before going before the advisory committee.

Goedecke said that in the past, space for warrant articles was reserved even when full financial information had not been submitted.

As a result, the advisory committee was often not able to make a recommendation until the town meeting floor, which some voters found confusing.

Accountant budget approved

The town accountant has recommended a budget increase of 2.4 percent for his department, which selectmen accepted Monday night.

For fiscal year 1997, which begins July 1, 1996, the requested budget is $58,138, up roughly $1,200 from the FY 1996 budget of $56,976.

Safety takes center stage

Selectmen will not waive the parking ban along Highland Ave., despite a request from the Cohasset Drama Club to do so.

Roland Barrie asked that the town allow parking to accommodate attendees of the club's performance of "A Christmas Carol."

But after some discussion, selectmen agreed that if parking were allowed, a fire truck or ambulance might have difficulty getting through.

They said there is adequate parking at the town hall lot, the public lot in the Village and along both of sides of North Main Street.

Wigmore is appointed

Thomas Wigmore was named part-time police dispatcher Monday night by a four to one vote of selectmen. Martha Gjesteby voted no.

Town Hall budget approved

With clerical expenses removed, the town hall operating budget has dropped. Town meeting will be asked to consider a request of $61,283 for the upcoming fiscal year, down from the current budget of $63,672.

DPW garage proposals received

Selectmen can forget about Agatha Christie or Stephen King for a while. Monday night they received stacks of more urgent bedside reading: 17 proposals from architects wanting to construct the DPW garage. They will review the plans prior to deciding which firms to interview.

Selectmen approve bills

At their lengthy meeting this week, selectmen approved the following expenditures: to special legal counsel Warner & Stackpole, $5,436.81 and $9,425.51; to R.A.D. Corporation for Milliken Field, $76,670; and Tucci & Roselli, CPA, $2,025.

School business is conducted

The school committee recently conducted the following business at its Nov. 16 meeting:

• decided that for the 1996/1997 school year Cohasset public schools will return to their former vacation schedule. The March vacation will be eliminated and the February and April vacation periods will be reinstated.

• approved the Strategic Plan, a system-wide five-year plan, providing several word and technical changes were made. The next step is to develop an action plan.

• listened to a presentation by Kevin Ulmer Ph.D. on the possibility of a Cohasset Lobster Lab: A Student Research and Teaching Center. The lab would be located at the former Cohasset Colonials Showroom, on the harbor, and would involve students from nursery school to grade 12 in age-appropriate investigations, research projects and lab work.

• received a report on the Junior/Senior High School 1995/1996 School Council Improvement Plan, which included an update on the success of Ann McCarthy-Egan, the new school adjustment counselor, and a report on the volunteer organizations at the junior/senior high school.

No tires, propane in waste bins

SEMASS, the trash to energy facility which accepts Cohasset waste, will no longer accept tires or propane gas tanks. Residents are requested not to leave those items in the bins at the landfill.

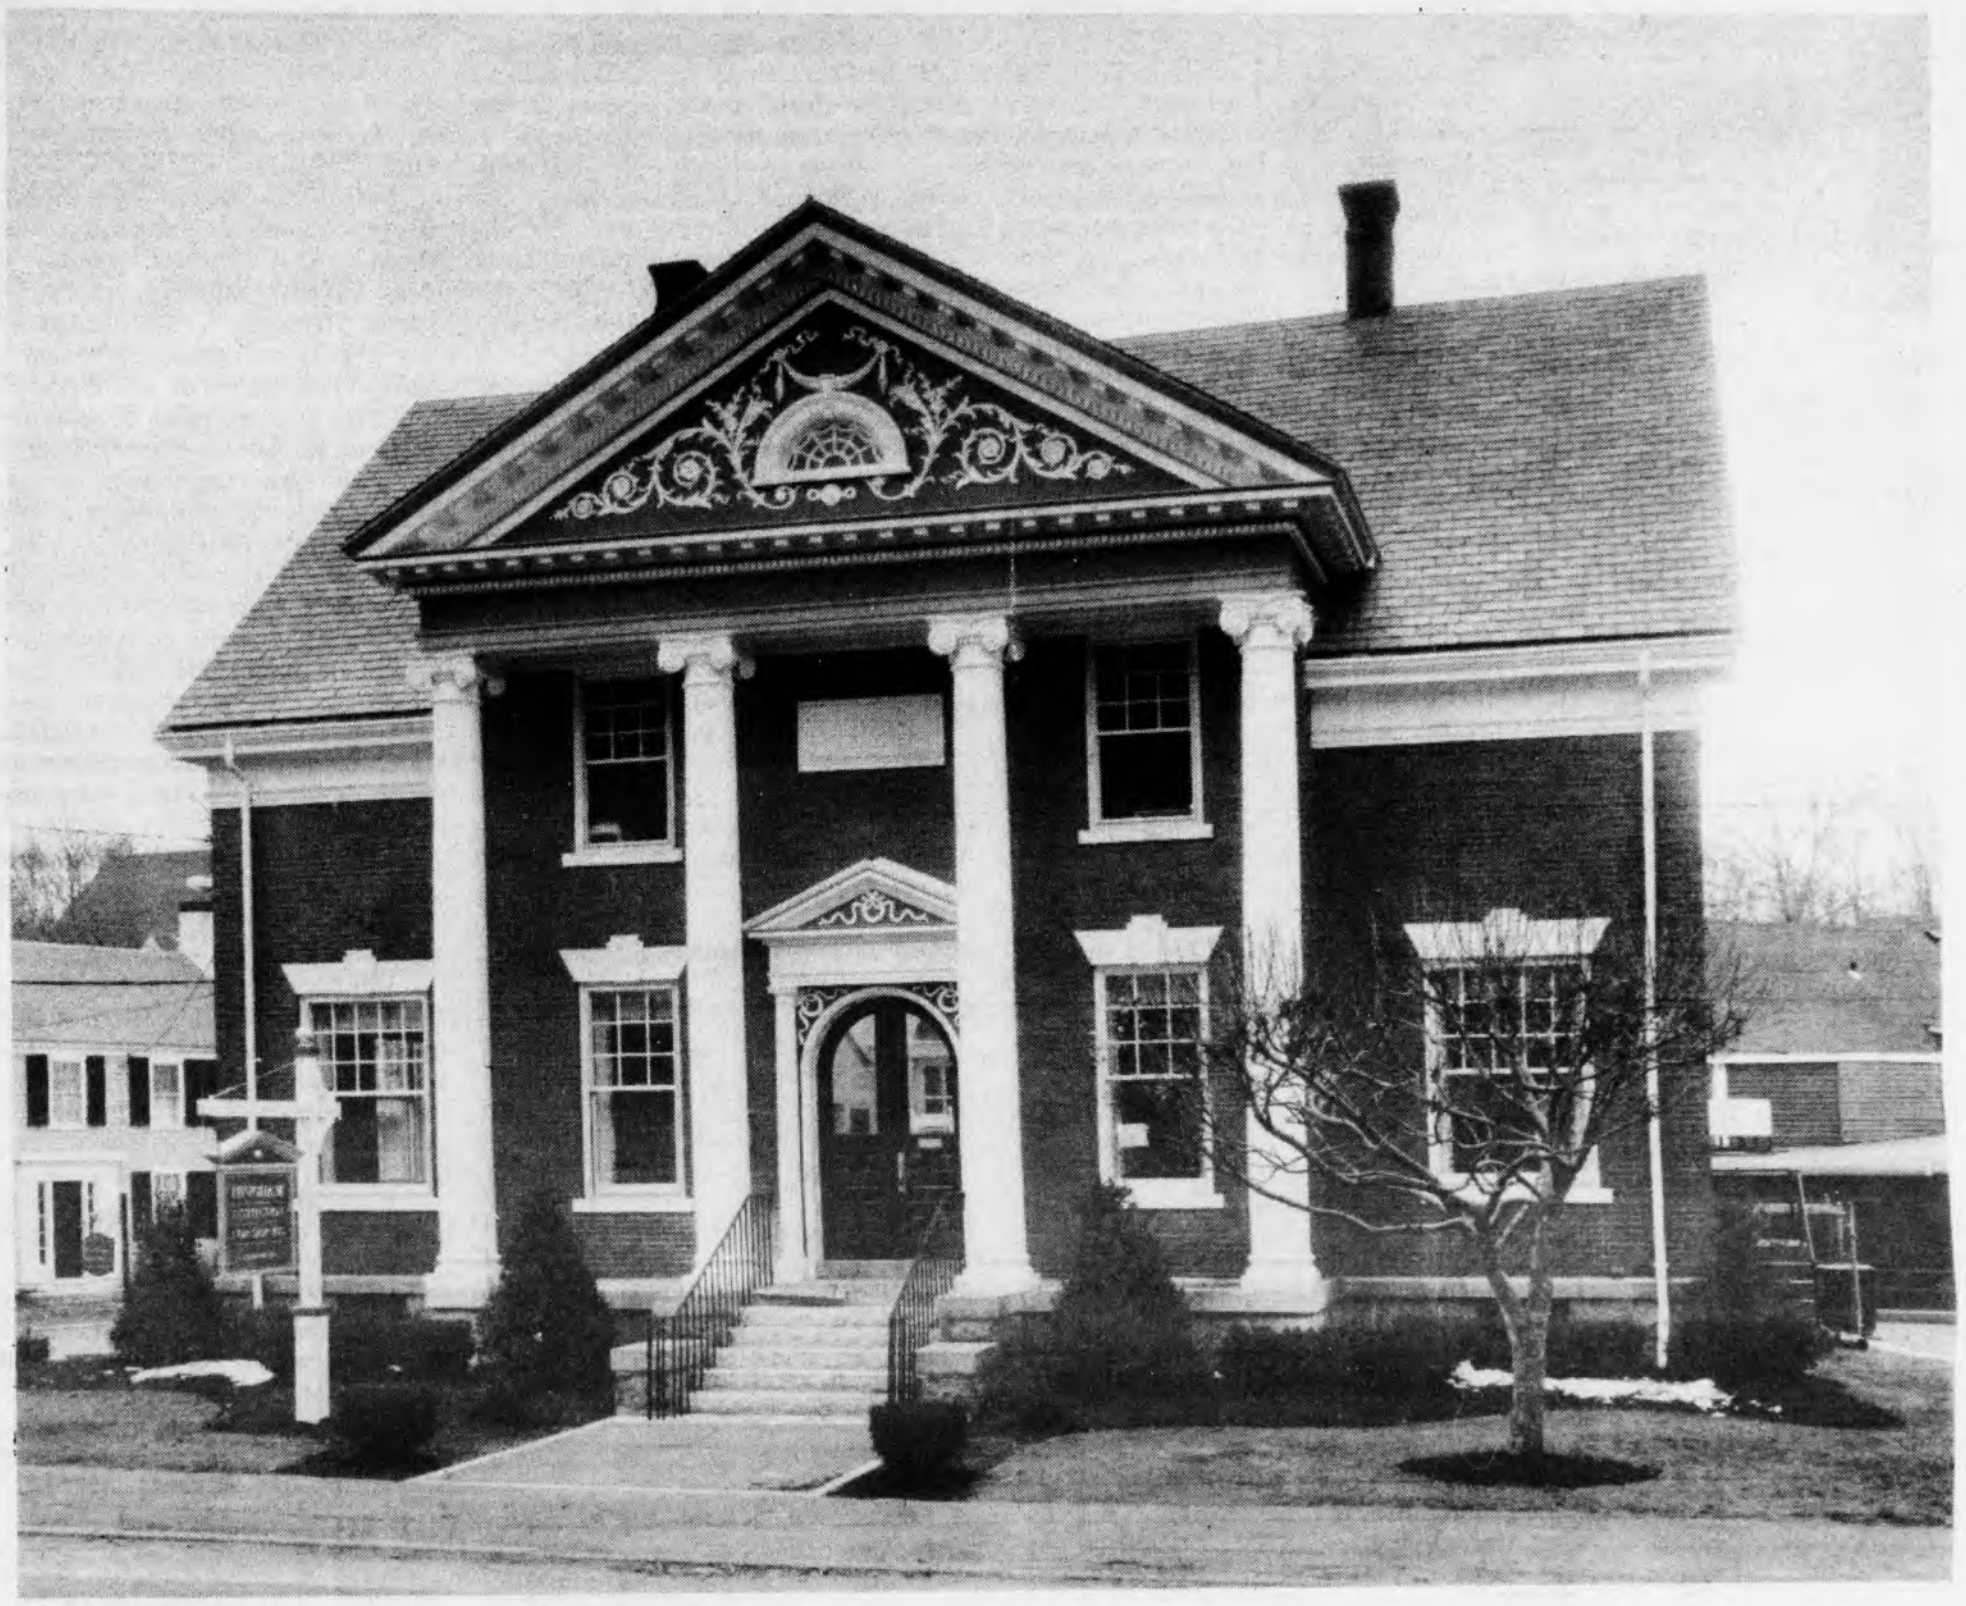
This Was Cohasset's Bank for 100 Years!



Now, It Is Again!

We've been helping South Shore residents with their banking needs since 1834. As of Monday, December 11, 1995, we have a new home in Cohasset. We're located at 13 Elm Street in Cohasset Village, the site of the former Cohasset Savings Bank.

If you step inside, you'll see that extensive renovations have restored this building to its original character and charm; you'll find friendly, helpful people and personal service. This is the kind of service you just don't get from those big regional banks.

You'll also find a 24-hour ATM and a night depository.

If you step inside soon, you'll find out about our free offer for stadium blankets and canvas tote bags for qualified depositors.

As a locally owned and managed community bank, it's our goal to provide you with quality financial products and superior service. Your deposits help us provide loans for families and businesses right here in Cohasset.

MBTA says lawsuits won't derail the train

CLF filed suit against the state nearly five years ago over construction of the Central Artery – a project destined to put more cars on the road and more pollution in the air. Restoring rail service along the Old Colony Railroad was the mitigation measure that led to an agreement between the state and CLF allowing work on the "big dig" to continue.

Work is well underway on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines which are expected to be in operation by the end of next year.

But if the MBTA did not complete the Greenbush line – the third prong of the Old Colony Rehabilitation Project – or come up with a suitable Greenbush alternative that would do as much as commuter rail to improve air quality and reduce emissions, CLF would launch another suit again bringing the Central Artery Project to a halt, officials said.

Slater said that while the CLF suit had an impact on the state's decision to restore rail service on the Greenbush line, it was clear to the MBTA that nothing else was as effective in helping the state meet federal clean air standards.

"We looked at the alternatives and commuter rail is the way to go," Slater said, noting that if the case is brought into court by opponents and given the same sort of scrutiny it will show the same thing.

Slater also said state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes intends to fund the $215 million Greenbush line entirely with state money. Kerasiotes has said the line will be restored at grade with no tunnel under Hingham Square. The project will go through state and local environmental review processes only, he said.

In explaining how full state funding will be possible for the Greenbush line, state Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield) said in 1989 and 1991 the legislature authorized expenditures totaling $280 million for the entire Old Colony restoration project.

By using 80 percent federal funding on the Middleboro and Plymouth lines and only 20 percent of the state revenues for the project, Hynes estimates there is about $180 million available for the Greenbush line, leaving the state about $35 million short.

This would require an additional authorization from the state, but Hynes said by using state money for Greenbush, the project will be advanced and other state transportation projects for which there may be federal funding can also go forward. There will be no more federal funding available for the Old Colony project, Hynes said.

'Hingham had an opportunity to advance the tunnel, but did not. There is a lingering concern whether it was being put forward in good faith.'

– State Rep. Frank Hynes.

In Hingham, the community that has most vocally opposed the project, Selectmen Chairman Katharine Reardon said there is great concern that by using state money, the intention is to circumvent the federal environmental laws that protect the town's historic down town.

According to Hingham Historical Commission Chairman Alexander Macmillan under section 4F of the Federal Transportation Act, no transportation project can adversely impact a protected resource – including an historic district – if there is a prudent and feasible alternative that will avoid those adverse impacts.

If no such alternative exists all possible steps must be taken to mitigate that impact. Additional federal protection for Hingham's historic assets comes through section 106 of the Historic Preservation Act, said Macmillan who noted there is a state equivalent to 106.

Ideally, Macmillan said negotiations between the state and the town, based on these laws, would culminate in a memorandum of agreement.

But Macmillan shares Reardon's concerns that state funding is planned for Greenbush to avoid compliance with federal environmental laws, as compliance would mean Hingham would need heavy mitigation, he said.

Noting that both the Plymouth and Middleboro lines have received federal funding, Macmillan also questioned whether the MBTA will be permitted to segment the Greenbush portion of this project.

According to Macmillan, under the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) there is special language that frowns on segmentation and it is not clear that the Federal Transit Administration would approve of it.

Before pursuing any lawsuit, Macmillan said a lot of negotiating will have to be done.

"I hope beforehand any differences will be negotiated away," he added.

Through that negotiation, Macmillan hopes alternative 6A – the short tunnel option will come back to the table.

"Alternative 6A still makes as much sense as it ever did, whether you see it as an alternative or mitigation," Macmillan said.

The 3/4 mile tunnel would run beneath Historic Hingham Square, eliminate five of the 17 Hingham grade crossings, and would mitigate the noise and vibrations felt by down town businesses and homes that sit just feet from the tracks.

With the support of rail proponent and Back on Track founder William Grimes, Macmillan worked to get the state appointed Citizen's Advisory Committee – with representatives from all Greenbush corridor communities –to back the tunnel option last year and until the 1995 town meeting, Hingham's board of Selectmen also supported 6A.

But Reardon said the board changed its mind on that resolution and decided not to support any rail restoration after town meeting voters indicated that it was a poor second choice.

The board's about face on Greenbush left many who backed the tunnel compromise feeling angry and betrayed.

Grimes, a staunch rail supporter who said he would take the train whichever way it came, backed the tunnel compromise last year but said he will no longer do so.

"We're not talking tunnel anymore," Grimes said.

In addition to the governor's and Kerasiotes' consistent position not to build the tunnel, Grimes said the selectmen have said no to the train, with or without a tunnel.

"We're not saying we're against the tunnel, but now that the state has said they don't plan to do it, we shouldn't put all our eggs in the tunnel basket. We don't want to see anyone taking a last stand over it," he said.

Hynes, too supported the tunnel, but said it would be worth pursuing again only if the "entire town of Hingham backed it."

"Hingham had an opportunity to advance the tunnel, but did not. There is a lingering concern whether it was being put forward in good faith," he said.

"Hingham would have to say we support Greenbush restoration with a tunnel. Until then, it would fall on deaf ears," said Hynes, who maintained the town would have to accept the reality of restoration and work toward the tunnel as an alternative.

"But if they plan to pursue lawsuits or alternatives to rail service, I don't see how they can with any kind of sincerity expect others to take them seriously," he added.

Reardon said the town will continue to consult with Andrea Ferster, the Washington D. C. Attorney – an expert in preservation law – hired to guide the town on this issue. Reardon said the town will look into the legality of segmenting the project to avoid federal environmental regulations and red tape.

Now that a rail decision has finally been made, Hynes said Greenbush is at the starting gate but faces a lot of scrutiny ahead.

Hynes said it would be positive for the MBTA to demonstrate good will and make a hand clasping effort to work together with communities and meet the regulatory requirements of all agencies as it seeks to restore Greenbush.

Macmillan too, sees the decision as a new starting point for the long delayed project.

"Now that we've passed through this political phase, we're back where we were before we were so rudely interrupted," he said.

Board to pick option for new school

cial town meeting for Monday, Jan. 22 and assuming the project is approved, set an override vote for Saturday, Feb. 10.

John Calabro of the school facilities committee told selectmen that speed is necessary since the town could receive 60 percent state funding if the completed application is submitted to state education authorities by June 1.

Railroad could affect home values

BY JENNIFER R. HORAN
Cohasset Mariner

With the restoration of commuter rail service to the South Shore on its way, most area real estate agents agree that Greenbush will cause property values in area towns to rise – except for property right along the tracks.

Cohasset and Scituate saleswoman Mary Ellen Neagle of the Jack Conway & Co. believes that the value of some property in those areas may suffer as a result of Greenbush.

"Any homes along the tracks are going to go down in value right at the moment," she said. "In the long run it could level out, but presently it does scare people."

"People get nervous about moving to homes near the tracks because they don't know what to expect. The unknown is frightening to them. It will be difficult to sell those properties right away. But I think that people will find out it's not going to be as painful as they think it is," she said.

For houses not so close to the tracks, Neagle believes property values will increase.

"Because there is very little land available in Cohasset and Scituate, that will make the value go up," she said. "People want to live by the ocean and if they can have an easy commute to the city, I think many people will come. The problem we've always had is that everybody likes this area but they hear how hard it is to commute. With the rail coming, why wouldn't people want to move here?"

"The train will increase property value because people will be able to get back and forth to Boston easier," said Hingham-based Realtor Clayton Stone. "Most people are moving further away from Boston. Hingham is pretty well absorbed now, there's not much room for expansion here, but people will move further south because of the train."

"I was opposed to it in the beginning – it has some negative aspects to it, with something like 17 crossings at downtown Hingham which could be dangerous – but overall it will help all the communities on the South Shore. We need the transportation," said Stone. "In time, the town will be glad it did it."

Greenbush tracks will stretch 17.7 miles from Scituate to Braintree, connecting South Shore residents to Boston's South Station in by train in 1999.

Brokers and salespeople expect the demand for homes in towns that will benefit from the revitalization of the Greenbush line to increase along with the value of property,

Marilyn Moran, Vice President of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors, believes that while rail service will help the South Shore real estate industry to compete with other suburban areas, it will not specifically cause property values to increase.

"I think it will increase the volume of sales, but it's not necessarily going to make the value of property go up," she said. "I think we will see an increase in the number of homes sold. Homes on the South Shore will be much more saleable."

Money for war memorials

In order to create memorials in various locations honoring Cohasset residents who have died fighting for their country, selectmen approved a transfer of $4,500. The article calling for the creation of the memorials, was passed by the recent special town meeting with no money figure attached.

Landfill expansion plan is back in town's court

state just lets this go by."

Selectmen will meet with special town counsel Michael Leon of the Boston law firm Warner & Stackpole in executive session Monday to discuss seeking a possible court injunction to stop the DEP decision.

The meeting will be set for 6:30 p.m. and members of the conservation commission and board of health will be invited.

However, since health board members will now be acting as administrative judges in the case, it is probable that they will not attend.

John McNabb, of Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), a citizens' group that has led the effort against the proposed project, said his group is outraged and blames the governor.

"Weld can no longer claim to have a good record on the environment. Weld has sold out to the solid waste industry and left the people and environment to twist in the wind. This decision seriously trashed Weld's already spotted environmental record," he said.

Selectman Peter Pratt blamed also the decision on the Weld administration, which he said has sold out to the solid waste management industry, which has powerful lobbyists on Beacon Hill..

"Weld essentially is going to let us battle to defend the state's solid waste management plan," Pratt said, adding the costs to the town are going to "ramp up significantly."

The state plan shows only a minimal need for additional construction and demolition landfill capacity during the next five years, McNabb said.

Leon cautioned that CHL still has a long way to go before the expansion can become a reality.

"There are many hurdles CHL will have to jump over before it can open (an expanded) facility," he said.

Leon explained that after conducting a "rough screening" based primarily on information CHL submitted, the DEP believes the proposed project meets the site suitability criteria established in state regulations and should go into the site assignment process at the local level. The town disagrees with the DEP's assessment, he noted.

The Cohasset Board of Health must now consider facts presented at a required hearing within 30 days and come up with a decision to grant or deny the site assignment in 45 days. The approval could be granted with conditions, health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik explained.

Leon noted that CHL will need a special permit from the zoning board of appeals, will have to meet state and local wetlands regulations, and must obtain a site assignment from the board of health and a state permit to operate a solid waste facility before it can expand. CHL must also address problems with the existing facility like the enforcement order to correct its storm water management problems.

While Leon would not say that the efforts of citizens who sent in comments opposing the expansion were all for naught – he conceded that "everyone would hope that the DEP made greater inquiry into all the issues raised in the comments submitted."

Also during Monday night's selectmen's meeting, SAFE chairman Linda Keller praised Cohasset officials for their efforts in the fight.

"I wanted to congratulate the the town," she said. "Everyone is working together very well."

Keller, who had waited until after 11 p.m. to make her comments, said she is "extremely disappointed" in the "cowardly decision."

She charged DEP bureaucrats with ignoring the public. "I don't think they paid attention to anything we said," she remarked.

SAFE won't stop fighting landfill

The Department of Environmental Protection's limited approval of a C&D-only (construction and demolition waste) landfill expansion at Cohasset Heights Ltd. is a setback for the expansion opponents, but not the end of the fight, according to John McNabb Jr., vice present of the anti-expansion group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion).

"We're very upset," said McNabb. "We're going to line up as much testimony as we can to convince the Board of Health that the landfill should not be permitted."

The next step in the landfill permitting process, he said, was for the local Board of Health to schedule site assignment hearings to start by Jan. 2, and for the board to decide by Feb. 15 whether to grant a site assignment for the expansion.

"It is no victory for the expansion to be limited to C&D. The existing landfill is allowed only for C&D and has contaminated more than six acres of groundwater, 2.5 acres of wetlands and constantly emits noxious and partially harmful landfill gases. We need to say enough is enough," he added.

"This decision of the Weld/Cellucci administration is a bag job," McNabb said. "Their decision relied on more than 200 pages of supplemental information submitted by CHL after the end of the public comment period, which neither the town nor anyone else could legally respond to. It was an improper process and an improper determination."

"It's now all in our hands," he said. "It's now up to the people of the Town of Cohasset, our board of selectmen and our board of health to stop this expansion once and for all, which I hope we will do."

This is a press release from SAFE, a citizens group opposed to expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

"Tis the season of love, joy and happiness and do I have a wonderful love story for you! Many of you know Maryellen Gibbs, our town's licensed certified massage therapist. Well, this story is about her! Maryellen currently lives at 245 South Main St. in an apartment over the garage, a place I am about to make famous! Awhile ago she met Anthony Joseph Prall (Jay), and they fell madly in love. What comes next but marriage, right?

But neither wanted a conventional marriage, so they decided the best thing to do would be to elope. The day was set, the bags packed and Maryellen was in the bathroom doing a little last-minute primping when she saw Jay arrive in a pickup truck with a big extension ladder in the back. Up he climbed. She handed him the camera and a cup of coffee, pictures were taken and they went down the ladder and off to North Kingston, Rhode Island.

There they went to the North Kingston United Methodist Church where they were married by the Rev. Stan Culy, who is the former minister of the United Methodist Church in Scituate Harbor, with Constance Nicotra of Ocean Bluffs and Marshall Stone of Tewksbury standing up for them.

They called their Moms after the fact, and Maryellen's mother, Isabelle Howe Gibbs wasn't even surprised! It seems that she and her late husband, William Bryan Gibbs, also eloped!

Maryellen and Jay now live at 1248 Forest St. in Marshfield Hills — be sure next Nov. 4 to remember their grand story!

While you are filling out your calendar for the month of December, you might be interested in the U.S. Service Academies Annual Ball, sponsored by the New England Parents' Clubs of the four U.S. armed forces academies.

This year's ball will be held Wednesday, Dec. 27, at 7 p.m. at Lombardo's, off Route 128 in Randolph. It is being hosted by the West Point Military Academy Cadet Parents' Association of Eastern Massachusetts. The Chairpersons are John R. and Mary Maynard of 20 Locust Road. If you desire further information, you may contact them.

Nov. 22, 1995 was a special day in the family of Roger and Ann Pompeo. That's the day Alexia Nicole Ritz was born! Alexia is the daughter of Laura (Pompeo) and Jeff Ritz, and right now they live in Chicago (Dad and Mom are both attending graduate classes). She was seven pounds, one ounce at birth and 20 inches long.

After all of the exams and "heavy duty" term papers, they will be in Cohasset for the holidays — everyone is so excited? Of course, we don't have to tell you that Roger and Ann have already seen Alexia. They flew right out there and celebrated Thanksgiving with them! From all reports, she is a real gem!

We hope Frank Wheelwright, who recently underwent surgery, is feeling much better and that he will be home in time for Santa's visit! You cannot keep a good man down for long, so we are sure he will be!

This Sunday is the Community Christmas Party at the Lightkeepers' residence from 2 to 6 p.m., with holiday music provided by local area choirs. Hot cider, hot chocolate, coffee and special home-cooked holiday treats will be provided. The suggested donation will go to the Council on Aging Medical Access Program. You can either pay at the door or send a check payable to COA (MAP), 3 North Main St., Cohasset.

Greenbush, at last!

During a campaign sweep through the South Shore about 18 months ago, Gov. William Weld and Lt. Gov. Paul Celucci, apparently unenlightened about "Greenbush," failed to grasp the desperate transportation picture in the region.

On that humid August day at the commuter boat dock in Hingham – the hot bed of the Greenbush rail debate – Gov. Weld refused to answer questions on restoration of the third leg of the Old Colony Line. Later that afternoon, Lt. Gov. Celucci fared slightly better during a meeting with Mariner Community Newspapers editors who implored him to take this message back to his boss: get Greenbush back on track.

Ironically, we may have rail opponents to thank for waking up the administration which has thrown us a life-line. The persistent anti-Greenbush Coastal Coalition, a grass-roots citizens group, screamed so long and hard against the train that it forced state officials to take a closer look and commuters to speak up.

What the administration found was a transportation nightmare: a badly neglected, traffic-snarled regional highway – the sole artery from the South to the greater Boston metropolitan area – and inadequate commuter boat service with limited parking and access.

They also discovered that the South Shore, with population growth that has outstripped much of the rest of the state, is a popular place to live but, nevertheless, a place in danger of economic strangulation without an efficient transportation system.

Last week, before a audience of South Shore business leaders, the governor promised Greenbush rail would be restored to Scituate, commuter boat service would be improved and expanded, and Route 3 would be widened from Weymouth to the Sagamore Rotary.

A multi-modal answer to our transit problems is great news for the future of our coastal communities and will ensure our region's economic health well into the next century.

Here at the Mariner Newspapers, we have backed Greenbush and the enormous need for improved transportation for the South Shore from the time former Gov. Michael Dukakis started the wheels in motion to restore commuter rail to the Old Colony Line, which includes service to Middleborough and Plymouth.

Although in our editorials, we unequivocally supported the train, over the years, we have strived to provide unbiased coverage in our reporting on innumerable meetings and hearings on Greenbush.

From now through the planning and construction phases until the conductor says "all aboard!", we pledge to continue to report on the train's progress every step of the way from mitigation for historic Hingham Square to possibly relocating the layover station to the Scituate landfill or the adding of a "whistle stop" in Cohasset Village.

This week the state-appointed Citizens Advisory Committee, which includes representatives from all Greenbush towns including Cohasset, reconvened. And next week, the Plymouth County Development Council and Citizens Bank host a workshop to bring together area groups to focus on transportation needs into the next century. When both groups set their agendas, Greenbush still had a question mark after it.

Now, thanks to Gov.Weld's recent forthright announcement before the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, it's Greenbush, at last!

Greenbush was a political decision

To the Editor:

The December 2/3 edition of the Patriot Ledger tells of How The Rail Was Won (paraphrased). It is surprising that the pro-Greenbush Ledger would even print it. The article explains that the anti-train folks were winning the battle to save their towns and homes, not to mention their lives with the potential for accidents at the 43 at grade railroad crossings. The article neglected to mention, however, that more than 8,000 signed faxed petitions were sent to Gov. Weld and Secretary Kerasiotes, along with hundreds of letters to Lt. Gov. Cellucci during the months of July and August, protesting the train. The article claims the pro-trackers then took over the ratings race, thereby forcing Gov. Weld to 'go Greenbush.' It further states that the governor said this was purely a transportation and not a political decision on his part.

In subsequent paragraphs the article tells the tale of GOP state committee Vice Chairman Polly Logan of Cohasset telling Weld's scheduler to slip the governor a note saying she would raise money for his Senate campaign if only he approved Greenbush. A further quote states her saying, "The money people in Cohasset are for the train," and continues on by her telling Lt. Governor Cellucci, "You're not going to raise any money from that anti-train group." Did Ms. Logan know, I wonder, that the newspaper was going to print those seductive words? Having been a seasoned political maven for many years, I can't believe she was aware that those words would ever see a sheet of newsprint.

Many of these same anti-train folks have been faithful admirers of the governor and have contributed to his campaigns and would like to give him the benefit of the doubt that this was a transportation and not a political decision, but with all those pearls from the GOP vice chairman being poured forth, it leaves that explanation in serious jeopardy.

Republican rails about train politics

To the Editor:

Today is my last day as a Republican. A brief form at town hall is all it takes. Or is it?

Recent events surrounding Governor Weld's controversial decision to back Greenbush restoration were too much to bear.

Transportation czar James Kerasiotes has admitted to several newspapers that anti-rail citizens nearly derailed the train decision. Thousands of people wrote, faxed and called the governor's office to stop the project, and thousands voted against it in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate. What happened?

In the end it had nothing to do with public sentiment or transportation, but with power and politics. With a U.S. Senate race drawing closer, the governor was bullied by some of his own supporters. GOP state committee vice chair Polly Logan made it clear to the governor that she would not raise money for Weld if he nixed the train. "The money people in Cohasset are for the train," she was recently quoted as saying. "You're not going to raise any money from that anti-train group."

Logan, Sheila Evans and others of Cohasset's Gold Coast Cocktail Crowd have long advocated restoration, while aiming their sights on abutters. Who's next? It appears they have been busy over the last several months staying in touch with their wealthy friends. Big money from deep Republican pockets in town apparently had a major part in the governor's decision.

A small group of wealthy citizens have flexed their muscles. In the process, the hard-won victories of the anti-rail folks of the South Shore have been ignored. Money means power, both politically and economically. Mrs. Logan's comments are very disturbing, because they illustrate one of the major problems with politics in this country.

We can teach our kids how democracy was intended by the founding fathers, but can we explain what is really happening today? Voter turnout for any election is small; interest in politics is waning. Should this come as any surprise? And yet, with this issue severely affecting our towns, people got excited enough to get out and vote. They did so in record numbers. And for what? Mr. Weld brushed our votes aside like yesterday's newspaper.

Mr. Weld and Mr. Kerasiotes area very concerned about any and all opposition to their rail expansion plans. This was a revolt that must be put down. Mr. Kerasiotes brags that "we" will pull

Jingle Bell Walk support appreciated

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Community Center, we would like to express our appreciation to the many merchants who lent a helping hand on our Second Jingle Bell Walk.

We had a beautiful day, the downtown was decorated with red and green balloons, the bells were ringing from St. Stephen's Church, Mr. and Mrs. Claus and helpers arrived at Government Island by lobster boat and everyone got into the holiday spirit.

We would like to thank all our volunteers, a special thanks to the students from the Community Service group at Cohasset High School, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Merchant Members and the Council on Elder Affairs who gave so much of their time to make this event a huge success, thank you.

together a legal dream team whose goal will be to pummel any lawsuit against the train into submission (using our tax dollars in the process).

This is not the Republican party I joined 18 years ago. This is not the governor I voted for twice who promised in 1990 not to force a train on the South Shore. I can no longer stomach party leaders like Polly Logan, Newt Gingrich and Pat Buchanan. Like more and more voters, I am registering as an Independent who won't be voting for William Weld again.

Collins' coverage was super!

To the Editor:

We appreciate the attention given to our son, Matthew, in the Nov. 23 Mariner. It was exciting to see the picture of Matthew and his teammates sporting their gold medals won at the World Rowing Championships in the Czech Republic in '93.

Of course, we hope to see him compete in the Olympics in Atlanta this summer. And, with some luck, a fair wind and lots of very hard work on the part of Matthew and his teammates, we may have the great pleasure of seeing them win another gold medal in the lightweight four rowing event in Atlanta.

Town proceeds with harbor pollution testing

If additional testing reveals high levels of pollution in the soil in Cohasset Harbor, the dredging project might have to be reduced because of high costs.

Town administrator Gregory Doyon said this week that polluted soil cannot be dumped in the ocean when dredged up. Rather, it must be buried on land at more than double the cost.

He estimated that if the testing reveals serious pollution, disposal on land could cost $800,000, some $500,000 more than ocean disposal.

Saying that they have no choice but to proceed, selectmen reluctantly voted to conduct additional testing at a cost of $60,000. The state may reimburse the town for some of the cost.

Preliminary testing has revealed high levels of mercury and other pollutants in four locations.

Weld tells business community Greenbush is a go

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

The governor didn't waste any time as he addressed close to 800 South Shore business people in Randolph Thursday (Nov. 30) in announcing the state's plan to restore the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad.

"I'm pleased to announce that we are on our way to a restored Greenbush line," said Weld, whose statement drew enthusiastic applause from the assembled group.

It's been a big week for Weld announcements. On Wednesday, Nov. 29 the Governor said that he will run against Sen. John Kerry in the 1996 election.

But the long-awaited decision to restore commuter rail service along the 18-mile Greenbush corridor was clearly the biggest issue on the minds of South Shore Chamber of Commerce members attending the sold-out breakfast at the Lantana.

Weld provided some background on what led to the decision.

"No crusade was ever more heated," Weld said.

Weld acknowledged there was passionate opposition to the project and noted the record-breaking turnout at town meetings in Greenbush communities.

Weld also noted that his administration has taken heat for taking its time on a Greenbush decision.

Still, he said the decision is based on an unquestionable need for public transportation on the South Shore – a region that has become "one of the most popular places on the planet to live."

Beyond the announcement, Weld did not elaborate on any of the project's finer details, but he indicated that the Greenbush alternative, which includes a short tunnel under Hingham's historic down town area, will not be pursued.

"I think it's a no on the tunnel," said Weld, who estimated a construction start on the Greenbush line in 1997.

The Middleboro and Plymouth lines of the Old Colony Railroad are already under construction.

Fierce opposition to restoration along the Greenbush line, led by the anti-rail Coastal Coalition, was a concern to the administration and nearly de-railed the project.

Decision making deadlines set throughout the year came and went as transportation planners looked into what they hoped would be less controversial transit options for the region.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce can take some credit for helping to turn the tide toward rail restoration with a random telephone survey taken two months ago that showed that 61 percent of those polled favored restoration of the line.

Along with the MBTA draft Environmental Impact Report, which indicates that commuter rail is the most efficient system for the region attracting the most riders and eliminating the greatest number of cars from clogged roadways, Weld credits the chamber survey as an important factor in helping him make this decision.

Doing nothing for the area was not an option, said Weld, who maintained that plans are in the works to upgrade commuter boat facilities in Hingham and possibly add ferry service to Weymouth and Hull. If next month's commuter boat trial in Scituate is successful, Weld said a permanent service could be established in that community as well.

Weld also noted the better than projected success of the new High Occupancy Vehicle (HOV) lane on the expressway and a project in the works to widen Route 3 from Weymouth to the the Sagamore rotary.

"In other words," he said, "we are making a serious investment in infrastructure on the South Shore."

An investment that Weld said will make the people on the South Shore "healthy, rich and way too cheerful to curse the other maniacs on the northbound road."

Decision gets mixed reviews

apprised of the facts surrounding this issue before the breakfast. He didn't know what he was talking about," said Buckley who said the Coalition is gearing up for a fight.

In addition the chairman the National Transportation Safety Board to discuss the project, Buckley said, she's planning to contact the attorney general, inspector general, and state auditor because of serious procedural violations that led to the decision. Among the violations Buckley listed flawed bus studies and other cursory looks at Greenbush transportation alternatives.

"We are adamant that our tax money should not be spent on MBTA lawyers hired to defend this project," she said.

Buckley acknowledged that "inevitable lawsuits" would lead to such a defense on the state's part.

Rail supporter and Cohasset Selectman Martha Gjesteby, who sits on the Citizens Advisory Committee appointed to comment on the MBTAs feasibility studies on the project, said its time to move into the mitigation stage.

"I think this was a well-thought out, comprehensive decision," she said,noting that Weld promised to expand commuter boat service and widen Route 3 along with restoring the train.

Gjesteby said Hingham selectmen sent a mixed message to the MBTA when they backed off support for the tunnel. And she does not think a lawsuit to stop the train will succeed.

"The rail bed is already there, it's not like the train will go through virgin wetlands."

COHASSET'S YESTERDAYS/David H. Wadsworth

Cohasset broke away from

Cohasset once was Hingham's Second Precinct and Second Parish before it became a separate town in the year 1770, some 135 years after the establishing of the parent settlement at Bare Cove.

Not until 1670 had the upland areas of east Hingham or Conahasset been divided up among Hingham landowners. The first settlers in the Conahasset area were Hingham families who built farms and homesteads in several scattered parts of the newly opened Conahasset uplands.

Clement Bates and Ibrook Tower located near today's King Street, Israel Nichols lived next to the rough highway now called Jerusalem Road at Strait's Pond, Perth MacFarlin built at Turkey Meadow in an area of Conahasset which today has since reverted to the town of Hingham, Daniel Lincoln constructed his home near Little Harbor and the Town Common, and Nathaniel

WADSWORTH

Nichols settled on the ocean's edge near today's Black Rock Beach.

John Jacob soon built his homestead near the cold spring at the present Spring Street. There were others, also, whose identities are not clear in the early records.

From Plymouth Colony came Aaron Pratt, son of Phineas of the old settlement at Wessagusset. More Conahasset settlers carried the names of Lincoln, Farrar, Horswell, James, Lasell, Orcutt, Souther, Stodder, Wilcut and Wilson, all from Hingham.

Conahasset's earliest roads may have been old Indian trails which began as cart paths used by the first harvesters of salt hay at Hingham's eastern shores. Additional highways soon developed to link together the scattered farms and homesteads springing up in several places.

But the journey between the new settlement at Conahasset and the parent town of Hingham, some four miles in length, continued to be difficult in the extreme, and dangerous during winter months. By the year 1711 more than 20 families lived in the Conahasset area, and most found the overland trips to the town's Meeting House and school to be arduous if not impossible.

The fact was that the new village often was not able to send representatives to Town Meetings, nor were its children able to attend the distant schoolhouse. Conahasset's young people were lacking the advantage of education, and its families frequently unable to participate in the vital municipal and religious functions of the town. Still missing from the growing community in east Hingham were two important figures, a clergyman and a school teacher.

Finally, May 17, 1713, Hingham voters gave their consent for the building of a new Meeting House on the town's Common Land at Conahasset. They also granted Conahasset residents the liberty to engage a clergyman of their own choice. The first meeting house and church soon was constructed, but several years were to pass before a permanent clergyman could be found. Despite the concessions made by Hingham's voters, agitation continued to increase among the Conahasset families for limited autonomy in the form of a separate Precinct in Hingham's eastern section.

This movement for the establishment of a precinct was strongly opposed in the parent town and Conahasset's petitions were defeated at Hingham Town Meetings. Finally, the acrimonious dispute between the two villages was placed before the Colonial Government at Boston, where it was settled.

November 1717 the Great and General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony enacted a bill establishing Conahasset as a separate Precinct and Parish in the town of Hingham. Thus the growing community of East Hingham achieved a certain autonomy, particularly in matters of religion and schools. Conahasset became the Second Precinct and Second Parish with the right to maintain its own church and schoolhouse, and to levy taxes for the support of a minister and a teacher.

Cohasset's first record book of Precinct and Parish Meetings begins with the first meeting, held July 14, 1718. At that meeting, Precinct voters chose Daniel Lincoln to be the Moderator and Thomas James as Clerk. A committee made up of John Orcutt, Joshua Bates and Joseph Bates were appointed to warn and announce the holding of future meetings. The most important business of the new Precinct was to find a permanent clergyman to occupy the pulpit of the Parish Church. Thus began a search which would last until the year 1722 when the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart, grandson of Hingham's first minister Rev. Peter Hobart, accepted the call of Conahasset's Parishioners and raised a home on today's North Main Street, across the street from the Precinct Meeting House where he would preach.

In matters other than schools and church, municipal authority remained vested in the town government at Hingham. The precincting of Conahasset may have solved the problems of education and worship, but roads to Hingham remained difficult to traverse, and the new Precinct found itself continually under-represented at important Town Meetings held in the parent village.

The discontent remained and soon became disaffection as Conahasset's families longed for a final and complete separation from Hingham. The new community on the eastern shore grew rapidly to become a center of seafaring activity and shipbuilding to viral its older parent. Agriculture, small industry and fishing combined to produce a thriving group of villages in the uplands and along the shore, and strong community leadership developed within the Second Precinct.

Thus it happened that 53 years after the establishing of the Precinct, its residents once again went before the Great and General Court of the Colony praying for separation from the original town.

April 26, 1770, the petitioners were granted their wish to incorporate the second Precinct in Hingham into a District by the name of Cohasset. Cohasseter Benjamin Lincoln was further instructed to see that a meeting would be held to organize the new District. The signature of Colonial Lieut. Governor Hutchinson made it official on the same day, and the new town found its most cherished dreams realized with the stroke of a Royal pen.

Despite some hard feelings lingering on both sides, long since buried, parent and offspring communities found it easy to work together for their next common goal, the Independence of their colony and the founding of a new nation.

Local travel agents say let the buyer beware!

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Consumers surfing the 'net for travel bargains may be missing the plane, according to local travel agents, because a home computer and a modem will not guarantee reservations or the best prices.

Nick Doyle, owner of Carlson Wagonlit Travel in Hingham Square said consumers may miss discounted fares from airlines, charter travel companies, and hotels.

"It's virtually impossible for internet users to book their own flights and be assured of the best possible price," he said.

In the case of airlines, fares change almost daily, he explained. Travel agents can check several different carriers and numerous scheduled flights. While a traveller may check one airline's schedule and find a flight to a particular destination, that traveller may be unaware that flying a day later, later in the day, or with another carrier, may result in a savings, he said.

He added that travellers may not be aware that a flight with one connection may also mean a lower fare than a direct flight.

The internet does allow "comparison shopping" for airline flight schedules and fares, but this can be time consuming for a person who makes travel plans infrequently, Doyle said.

The internet, he added, "doesn't ask travellers if there is any flexibility in their plans."

"Consumers see the fare, but they don't know what restrictions may apply," said Justine van der Lugt of Cohasset Travel.

The internet does not provide the additional information, such as the payment schedules and cancellation penalties, that travel agents routinely know and advise their clients, she said.

Patsy Campbell Walsh at Lido Travel in Cohasset agrees that travel agents have the experience to find lower airfares, and discounts at hotels.

She said travellers believe that dealing directly with an airline or hotel will produce a savings, by eliminating the middle-man of a travel agent.

However, travel agents, she said, are paid commissions by the airlines, hotels, and charter companies. Consumers pay the same price whether they deal directly with an airline, hotel or charter company, or make their travel arrangements through an agent.

Campbell Walsh also noted that many travel agents belong to a consortium that receives hotel discounts that are not available to individuals who book their rooms directly with the hotels.

Doyle also cautions consumers that the internet is not secure for credit card payments.

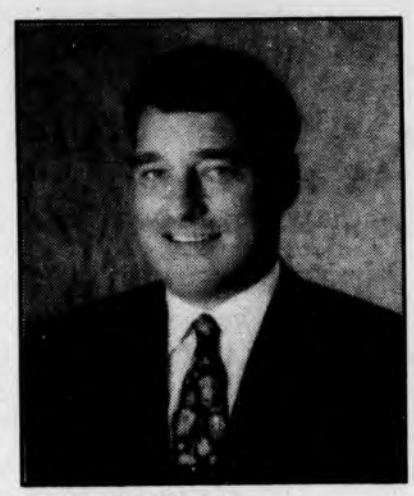
"Credit card numbers should not be transmitted over the internet," he said, explaining that security for these transactions have not yet been developed, and computer "hackers" have been able to retrieve those numbers.

"If consumers are going to use the internet, it's best if they work in tandem with a travel agent," Doyle said.

Paul Verrochi is named entrepreneur of the year

Paul Verrochi of Cohasset, chairman of the Board of American Medical Response, Inc., the nation's leading provider of ambulance services, has been named the 1995 Entrepreneur of the Year for Emerging Growth Companies.

The award is given to individuals who exemplify the start-up process at its best. Verrochi was selected from 18 national finalists. The award recognizes outstanding entrepreneurs whose ingenuity, hard work and perseverance have created and sustained successful, growing business ventures. The program is sponsored nationally by Ernst & Young, Inc. magazine and Merrill Lynch.



PAUL VERROCHI
Cohasset resident.

Under Verrochi's direction, AMR has successfully acquired more than 50 ambulance companies in three years. He spent his career prior to the formation of AMR starting, building and managing American Environmental Group, Inc. and s Building Services, a janitorial services firm.

Photos with Santa offered

The South Shore Community Center will take part in a business/community partnership Saturday, Dec. 9, and Sunday, Dec. 10, from 1 to 6 p.m. Stop & Shop Video in Cohasset Plaza will provide the place for children to have their photos taken with Santa, and Konica Quality Photo will donate the film and processing. All proceeds will benefit the center.

Photos will be ready the following Monday and Tuesday and may be picked up at the Stop & Shop Video or can be mailed for a minimal charge of 50 cents. The pictures will be packaged in a handsome folder.

Consignment Shop has expanded

The new, enlarged Cohasset Consignment Shop, managed by the Cohasset Social Service League, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza, is offering an eclectic array of clothing, including sweaters, a mink coat, a black tuxedo, designer dresses and handmade wool ski sweaters from Tibet, as well as toys, antique gold-rim glasses, a wooden rocking horse, a signed, original framed pen and ink drawing of Nantucket Harbor, holiday wicker baskets and glass and silver bowls.

The shop is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Proceeds benefit the town's many counseling services, Meals on Wheels, Keep Well, services for seniors and resource information and referral assistance. The League serves residents of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Norwell and Scituate.

Andy Merrill, manager of the shop, welcomes volunteers and invites interested individuals to call 383-0687. For assistance from the League, call 383-0771.

Cohasset Business

Unemployment rate stays the same

In Cohasset, the October unemployment rate was 3 percent (3,794 employed and 119 unemployed.)

A month earlier, the Cohasset jobless rate had also been 3 percent. In October, 1994, it was 3.1 percent.

Overall, the Massachusetts unemployment rate for October remained unchanged for the third consecutive month at 5.3 percent.

Meanwhile, the national rate of 5.5 percent dropped slightly from 5.6 percent in September.

"Our three-month average for August, September, and October is 5.3 percent, compared to the three-month U.S. average of 5.6 percent," said Commissioner Nils L. Nordberg of the state Department of Employment and Training.

Nordberg added, "This monthly survey, conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau, shows 44,000 more people working than there were last month, and 36,000 fewer unemployed than there were one year ago."

The October rates for the other 10 large states were California (7.8 percent), New York (6.3 percent), Pennsylvania (5.1 percent), Texas (6.2 percent), New Jersey (5.8 percent), Florida (6.7 percent), Illinois (4.8 percent), Ohio (4.7 percent), Michigan (4.4 percent), and North Carolina (3.9 percent.)

Nordberg noted that the payroll survey of Massachusetts jobs in September showed an estimated total of 2,971,800 jobs. This represents 35,700 more than in September of 1994, or a 1.2 percent growth.

In Norfolk County, the October unemployment rate was 4.1 percent (324,298 employed and 14,038 unemployed.)

The unemployment rate a month earlier was 4.5 percent (317,198 employed and 15,074 unemployed.)

This had represented an increase from the August rate of 4.3 percent and a decrease from the October, 1994 rate of 5.2 percent.

In Plymouth County, the October unemployment rate was 5.2 percent (215,860 employed and 11,758 unemployed.)

The unemployment rate a month earlier was 5.7 percent (211,452 employed and 12,784 unemployed.)

This had represented an increase from the August rate of 5.6 percent and a decrease from the October, 1994 rate of 6 percent.

Jack Conway honors Belanger

O. Frank Belanger was the recipient of Jack Conway and Co.'s annual "Thanksgiving Award" for the Cohasset sales office.

Company chairman Jack Conway and vice president Denis Lilla presented the award at the company's Thanksgiving breakfast, held annually at Plimoth Plantation to thank employees for their efforts throughout the year.

Each Conway office sales team selects the person they feel best represents the Conway spirit of cooperation, helpfulness and good will.

Local hospital earns award

The National Association of Women's Health Professionals has awarded South Shore Hospital a certificate of recognition for outstanding achievement in women's health education in 1994-95.

The association singled out "Time for a Change," a daylong program of events focusing on physical and psychological issues affecting women at menopause, as a South Shore program worthy of distinction. The group also honored the hospital's programs for women over 40, its new breast cancer support group and a discussion group for women of all ages.

South Shore Hospital is a not-for-profit, tax-exempt, regional provider of acute, outpatient home health and hospice care. For more information on women's services at South Shore Hospital, call (617) 340-8554.

Lobster Lab proposed for town-owned Hagerty house

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Special to the Mariner

There have been numerous proposals for the two-acre harborfront Hagerty property, which used to house the Cohasset Colonials' showroom, but none quite so unique as the Cohasset Lobster Lab.

The lobster lab, a brainchild of Kevin Ulmer, a Cohasset biotechnical businessman who holds a doctorate in biological oceanography, would be a place where students from all grade levels would gain valuable hands-on experience in science.

A lab "not staffed by people in white coats, but by students," said Ulmer.

Ulmer has been before several groups, including the selectmen and the Hagerty committee, with his proposal, which he said is still in the "embryonic stage."

The proposal hinges on whether or not the selectmen decide to make the Victorian house available for the lab to lease for a token fee of $1 a year. In the past the town has leased property to non-profit organizations for a nominal fee.

Ulmer said that if the selectmen opt to sell the building, the lab idea would have to be scrapped.

"It is a unique opportunity because of the site's proximity to the harbor," said Ulmer. "It must be built here because aquariums and aquaculture facilities require circulating sea water."

He added, that assuming the building is leased for $1, the lab will be self-supporting. Ulmer plans to enlist corporate sponsorships and grant funding for what he calls "a miniaturized version of Woods Hole."

Ulmer has already sent out feelers to some of his contacts in the biotech industry and said it may be possible to acquire used equipment from companies which wish to donate machinery they have updated.

In addition the lab may receive a substantial endowment from a charitable trust organization with ties to Cohasset. Ulmer also suggested that his company rent out the top of the building to help offset cost. The students would have his extensive library of journals and high-speed internet connection at their disposal. He added that he could act as a volunteer director until the lab was self-sufficient enough to hire permanent staff.

Ulmer has also approached the Cohasset Educational Foundation, of which he is a member. The foundation, which is in the midst of funding other projects, could possibly provide seed money for the lab.

"The education foundation is interested in it because it is an outstanding example of what we are trying to foster – a public/private partnership which furthers excellence in the schools, " said Rick Shea, the president of the foundation's board of directors.

When Ulmer spoke to the science faculty at the high school Sept. 25 and to school committee members Nov. 16 his idea was also met with enthusiasm.

"(The lab) is real science, not something we are fabricating," said Dave Magnussen, chairman of the math and science department. "Often kids leave school without the opportunity to participate in real science."

School committee member Jim Kirk hailed the idea as "wonderfully creative" and "very exciting." The committee has endorsed the project.

Ulmer said the lab offers more than numerous research projects and laboratory experience.

"It will give (students) the tools and the understanding to answer: 'Why is the sky blue?' type of questions," he said. Now "we don't give them much opportunity to roll up their shirt sleeves and go into the lab and do science."

Ulmer stressed that the lobster lab was also very much dependent on the level of student interest. He said athletic fields were provided for students interested in athletic endeavors and stages were available for those interested in the performing arts.

He asked," Where is the opportunity for kids to pursue scientific things?"

In the future Ulmer sees an increasing need for a science-literate society, not only to train the next generation of scientists and engineers, but to prepare the citizens living in the next millennium for society's technological advances.

In the lab older students would work on research projects. One idea Ulmer has is the Lobster Genome Project, which would provide a genetic understanding of the lobster and its role as both a commercial species and an inhabitant of the marine ecosystem.

Ulmer added students could study lobsters by conducting their own research as well as examining previously published studies. As of now lobsters can not be "farmed" because they are cannibalistic; however, when lobsters mate the female releases pheromones which suppresses the lobsters' urge to eat one another.

As a very ambitious plan, said Ulmer, students can research the pheromone. The project would be ongoing and the data gathered by students one year would be built upon the next.

"Students are a lot more capable of doing science than we give them credit for," added Ulmer.

Ulmer said he has talked to a couple of lobstermen who would be willing to bring in unusual, or mutant, lobsters for study, a three-clawed one for example.

Magnussen added that faculty saw several opportunities for high school students in the proposed laboratory setting. He said that students are now being taught about DNA and genetics. The lobster lab would fit in very well with these classes.

For younger students Ulmer envisions a set up similar to the New England Aquarium, but much smaller. Students would learn about local flora and fauna and about the marine world.

As the lobster lab grows, surrounding communities may want to get involved in the program, said Ulmer.

Open house at the lightkeepers

The Cohasset Lightkeepers will open Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' House on Government Island for a Christmas Open House from 2 to 6 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 10. Everyone is welcome to enjoy hot cider, coffee, hot cocoa and homemade holiday treats. Holiday music and caroling will fill Bancroft Hall. Contributions to the Council on Aging Medical Access program are welcome at the door.

The Council on Aging has been working to develop a comprehensive program of transportation for clients who have scheduled medical appointments. Contributions made to the Medical Access program will help to fill these gaps and provide for full-time transportation availability for Cohasset residents. Checks payable to COA (MAP) will be graciously received at the door.

Bancroft Hall is the first floor of the old lightkeepers' residence on Government Island, which has been renovated through the efforts of community volunteers and donors.

Wondering what to give for the holidays this year?

If Santa needs a little help, may we suggest sending a gift subscription to everyone on your shopping list. Your friends will thank you all year long.

Education foundation kicks off school year with fund-raiser

By JIM KINCH
Special to the Mariner

Sunday, Oct. 1, the Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) hosted a successful fundraiser at the South Shore Art Center. The occasion was hosted by the CEF as a kickoff for the new school year and the introduction of a new goal for the Foundation, the underwriting of modern equipment for the high school language laboratory. The evening also served as a showcase for CEF funded projects both completed and under development. More than 200 persons took the opportunity to support the CEF program and hear more on plans for the future.

The afternoon social also offered an opportunity for the attendees to converse with the principals of the elementary and middle school. Donna Hartlege, the new Deer Hill principal, and Linda Whitney, the Osgood principal, discussed their vision for the schools and new programs. (The new high school principal, Curt Collins, was unable to attend since he was receiving an award in Washington, D.C. that afternoon as Massachusetts Principal of the Year.)

The gathering was entertained by members of the high school orchestra providing background music for the party. Jean Hansen, the Osgood computer instructor, had third-grader Zack Etkind demonstrating his proficiency with the technology that the CEF computer lab has provided elementary students.

"It is both gratifying and exciting to watch the children's enthusiasm as they discover the wonderful capabilities of these computers," said Hansen. Another exhibit focused on the recently initiated Naturalist in Residence Program, another CEF-funded project.

"This program will become a cornerstone to the natural science curricula of both the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools, it will open up the classroom horizons," noted Ruth Fennessy, Cohasset's curriculum development coordinator.

Representatives from a local distributor of Sony Corporation's language training equipment brought a complete working module of one system under consideration and provided an explanation of its features and flexibility.

"With this level of technology each student can work at his or her own level of proficiency, while the instructor can assist each individually and stress areas for improvement," Stephen Hart, Cohasset school superintendent, remarked.

"The level of sophistication and durability of the new systems now available will revolutionize our teaching of languages. A system's flexibility and adaptability will be important features in our selection. We need to be sure of a long service life for our equipment. After all, the existing lab has been in continuous use for more than 20 years," he added.

In keeping with the international theme of the event, celebrants were treated with pastries and dishes from a variety of ethnic origins prepared by members of the PSO Diversity Committee. Rick Shea, CEF President, introduced and thanked the key organizers for the event, Rick Flynn and Kevin O'Donnell. Shea also thanked the members of the community who graciously donated their time and support to this event and the Foundation. He briefly described the programs and charter of the CEF to the assemblage and called out the winning raffle ticket holders for the door prizes.

The event raised nearly $10,000, to provide a base for this year's fundraising effort to replace the obsolete equipment presently in the high school.

The CEF is an independent non-profit organization focused on developing new and non-traditional sources of support for the Cohasset public school system. People interested in learning more about the mission of the CEF and its activities are encouraged to call 383-2833 or to write to the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 for a copy of our brochure and additional information on our programs. As a registered non-profit organization all donations to our project fund are completely tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment for Cohasset public school students.

Unicorn Singers at First Parish

This season's annual Christmas Concert at First Parish on Saturday, Dec. 9, at 4:30 p.m. will again feature the talented Unicorn Singers creatively directed by Margo Euler. Respighi's "Laud to the Nativity" will be performed with chorus, soloists and chamber orchestrato. It is said to be one of choral literature's most gorgeous Christmas cantatas. This poignant telling of the angel's visit to the shepherds and their joyous journey to Bethlehem, includes sublime moments for men's chorus a cappella; rhythmic jubilation for full chorus, woodwinds, and piano four-hands and intimate moments of duet for solo soprano with English horn, as Mary and the angel sing their part of the familiar complements the arrangement.

As always, festive carol arrangements for all to sing together will be included with an exciting adaptation of Vaughan Williams' beautiful "Fantasia on Christmas Carols." The concert will benefit Father Bill's Place in Quincy, a transitional and emergency shelter for homeless men and women.

Patrons are welcome. A $40 contribution includes two tickets by return mail. Five dollar tickets will go on sale at the church office December 1. The church office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. to answer questions and sign up patrons for the concert. Call 383-1100 for further information.

Computer Kids Session II for ages three to 13 will begin the week of Dec. 11. The cost for 10 weeks is $85 for members and $95 for non-members.

Art exhibit is a hit!

The Contexture IV: Art to Wear Exhibition will continue at the South Shore Art Center through Dec. 21. A dynamic collection of original clothing designed from unique fibers and fabrics by more than 27 New England artists is on display.

The exhibition opened in November with "Inspirations," a fashion show that was very successful. Thanks goes to the committee that planned the event: Holly Holway, Mary Ellen Maich, Sandy Keating, Lesley Grilli, Chris Rifkin and Mary Ann Chase.

Local businesses, including the Borrowed Butler, Village Gourmet, Strawberry Parfait, Arthur Roebuck and the Petit Paris Bistro donated food, and Macy's Liquor provided wine. Jo Anne Ilacqua of Rudolph Adamo offered her expertise with make-up.

The one-of-a-kind clothing in the Contexture IV exhibit includes vests, coats, sweaters, mittens, ties, dresses and accessories. Most items are for sale, with prices ranging from $40 to $2,000.

The exhibition is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. Call 383-ARTS for further information.

Sewer plant did not cause recent flooding, officials say

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

'I have been convinced, the sewer plant is not the problem.'
— Selectman Jane Goedecke

In a show of strength, all three sewer commissioners and three engineers appeared before selectmen Monday night to state emphatically that the sewer plant operates normally and did not cause massive flooding during last month's rain storm.

Sewer commissioner Edward "Ted" Guild stated that the plant is one of the most efficient in the state, consistently releasing treated water that surpasses state and federal environmental regulations.

"That's one of the better operating plants in the Commonwealth," he said, urging anyone who disagrees to review the facility's records.

"It's gotten cleaner and cleaner, any sewage odors have to come from another source," Guild said.

Selectmen appeared relieved that the plant is apparently not the culprit.

"I have been convinced, the sewer plant is not the problem," said selectman Jane Goedecke.

Furthermore, Guild stated that altering sewage plant records is a criminal offense and that neither he nor the others involved would risk jail by false reporting.

Guild was supported in his comments by both of the other two sewer commissioners and by three engineers, who appeared to rebut charges made two weeks ago by Summer Street residents who claimed that the plant was not operating effectively and contributed to the heavy flooding in the area.

The residents also stated that the flooding swept sewage into their basements.

Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering explained when heavy rains increase the volume at the sewer plant, the solids are allowed to remain at the bottom of the tanks while the plant processes the streaming water.

The plant handled 500,000 gallons the day of the recent storm, while the plant is designed to treat 72,000 gallons per day.

Even if the entire sewer plant output were released onto the marsh, it would only have raised the water levels by a small amount, officials said.

"All flow passes through the plant," regardless of its source, Coughlin said. "The plant continues to chlorinate in any storm event. No raw sewage was ever discharged from the plant."

Coughlin said that sewage from private septic systems or from animals could have washed into the cellars of Summer Streeet residents Carolyn Sammon and Jack Noble during the storm. He also reported that marsh sludge often smells like sewage.

Sammon and Noble rebutted that suggestion.

"Had you been in my basement the next day, the odor was of human waste," Sammon said.

Noble, who said that his property has not flooded in many recent storms, said his basement was saturated with "the smell of raw sewage. It's not the swamp odor. I have spent time in Third World countries."

In response to residents' complaints that the tidal gates at the mouth of James Brook are not operating properly, selectmen agreed to seek request for proposals from engineering firms to repair the gates. The October town meeting appropriated $25,000 for that purpose.

The conservation commission has given sewer commissioners the right to open the tidal gates for one 24-hour period each month for the next couple of months to test the effects of discharging clean water into the salt water marsh. Residents have stated that the procedure will increase flooding.

Guild has said that the gates will not be opened during a storm and will not accerbate the flooding.

Selectmen also stated that the flooding in the November storm was caused by the heavy runoff from James Brook heading toward the ocean.

Seahawks well represented with locals

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

With 60 to 70 players in the league, the South Shore Seahawks have a good-sized contingent from Cohasset playing hockey from late August right on up to the playoffs in April.

Squirt B coach John Durkin has been involved in the league, which includes Marshfield, Norwell, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate, for the past five years. Durkin says the number of Cohasset players in the 300- to 400-player organization is strong, especially when one considers the size of the town.

"There are enough kids where Cohasset could have a program of its own," Durkin said.

The local players on his squad include his son, John, Henry Roth, Matt Corry, Barry Tufts and John Dwyer.

The kids, Durkin says, not only get their fill of hockey for nearly a year, but also improve their skills through clinics, powerskating sessions and regularly scheduled practices.

"They get better every year," Durkin said. "Their skills are developed in powerskating and practice. They can get into a game and never touch the puck."

A Learn to Skate program, sponsored by the Seahawks, gets under way on Thursday at the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke. The program, designed for 3 and 4 year olds, gives kids interested in youth hockey the ins and outs of the most fundamental area of the game.

From there the kids move on to the Instructional League (5-6 year olds), Mites (7-8 year olds), Squirts (9-10 year olds), Pee Wees (11-12 year olds), Bantams (13-14 year olds) and Midgets (15-17 year olds).

Each level is divided into A, B and C squads. C teams automatically reach the playoffs while A and B clubs must qualify based on their records.

Several players are on high school squads once they reach the Bantam division and have even more games than the Seahawks' 28-game season, which doesn't include the playoffs.

Although many of the players are on the rink year-round, they still find the time to play other sports. On Durkin's team alone, four players were members of the Cohasset/Scituate football squad. Others compete on soccer and baseball teams.

"You're changing uniforms in the car," Durkin said in describing just how tight many of the players' sched-

Cohasset football players Andrew Flynn, Drew Musto, Eric Belz Andrew Busk, Ryan Ofsthun, Chris Ofsthun (front) and coach Dan Belz (top), were part of the Pop Warner All-Star team which garnered a trophy by winning three of four games in a round-robin tournament in Stamford, CT., the day after Thanksgiving.

Tampa should beat New England winter

There was only one day Matt Collins didn't make it out in the cold weather last week. That was on Saturday. The rest of the week, however, Collins' crew workouts came complete with icy-cold knuckles, whipping winds and generally miserable conditions.

"The cold weather has become kind of a drag because there is ice on the water," Collins said.

Training conditions should vastly improve when Collins, who is prepping for April's Olympic Trials, heads down to Tampa, Florida in January.

Collins tested himself on the inside rowing machine, the ergometer, on Monday and was a bit disappointed with his performance over the 6,000-meter workout. He says his fatigue level during the workout could have been attributed to some tough training over the past week. But just the same, Collins wants to add more afternoon workouts, as well more time on the ergometer.

On Wednesday and every Wednesday from now until the trials, Collins will run through a four-man boat-rowing session with another craft. After every race one rower would switch boats. Collins explained the workout was designed to measure an individual's rowing ability under racing conditions.

Hardwick leads Skippers' hoopsters

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers, captained by senior forward Jared Hardwick, are looking forward to another outstanding basketball season. Coming off a spectacular season which saw head coach Ron Ford's boys march to the Boston Garden and bear the title of South Sectional champions, the Skippers have high hopes for this year. While a young team, comprised mainly of juniors, Cohasset has all the parts necessary to form a winning team.

Hardwick, in his second varsity season, is touted as one of the best players in New England. The 16-year-old's thundering dunks ignited the Skippers several times last year and also served to excite the crowd. His shot-blocking and rebounding are also superior and Hardwick's finishing capabilities on the fast break are at another level from his opponents'. Providing leadership on and off the court, Hardick should post some excellent numbers this year.

Fred Howard, Cohasset's starting point guard this year, is an electrifying addition to the team. Howard's "Showtime" style of play, including flashy assists, long range three pointers, and great fast-break moves, are reminiscent of Magic Johnson's play with the Lakers. The senior's long arms and superior jumping ability allow him to grab boards most guards couldn't dream of.

Matt Belson, a defensive force who is also capable of scoring, is another component of the Skippers' versatile squad. His defensive skills were never displayed better than in last year's game against Carver when he came off the bench in the second half to spark the team and lead it to victory. Belson, president of the junior class along with playing lacrosse and soccer, possesses an all-out hustle and competitiveness that will help the Skippers gut out some tight games.

Junior center Ryan Bishop, who stands 6-foot-8, is also entering his second year on varsity and should dominate this winter. Another leader for Cohasset, Bishop's hard work and dedication have earned him his spot and should result in a monster year. While towering over opponents, Bishop has also developed excellent low post moves and a good jump shot. His tutelage under Ford has lasted several years. Bishop should start reaping the benefits this year.

Burke Davis, Cohasset's starter at shooting guard this year, is another junior who should dazzle the crowds this season. Davis' three-point prowess and tenacious defense will allow him to step into the starting role without a problem. Burke hit a game-winning, off-balance shot at the buzzer last year against archrival Hull. Also a lacrosse player, Davis should further develop as the season continues and should be a definite factor come tournament time.

Grant Emde will see action at both guard positions this year, a result of his blazing speed, suffocating defense and marksmanship last year on junior varsity and in the preseason. His tight defensive pressure often leads to steals, which lead to fast breaks. And Emde's speed in the open court is astounding, letting him outdistance opponents for the easy layup.

Brian Kilroy is still another first-year varsity player; and another junior. Kilroy plays the forward spot and has a knack for pulling down offensive rebounds and following with a layup. Kilroy's versatility was showcased last year in a JV game when he drilled several three pointers and long-range jumpers in a row. He then crashed the boards, collecting rebounds left and right. Kilroy will be a welcome and vital addition to the Skippers' front court this year.

Justin McNamara, a sophomore point guard, is also in his maiden season as a varsity player. Jumping right from freshman to varsity, McNamara's dribbling and passing skills are only half the story. Playing in an exhibition game against an excellent New Hampshire squad, McNamara penetrated the lane,

Experience fuels grapplers' tourney quest

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Fielding just five upperclassmen, at first glance the Cohasset High wrestling team looks as though it is a bit lean on experience.

But head coach Torin Sweeney also has a crop of freshmen who are very much aware of what it takes to wrestle in the varsity trenches. Sweeney is confident the combination, added to the team's no-nonsense work ethic will extend the Skippers' impressive four-year streak of placing in the Division 3 State tourney.

"I would have to say experience is our strength," Sweeney said. "We have seven freshmen who will be starting, but they all have varsity experience under their belt.

"They'll keep us rolling because they're so competitive."

Sweeney says he is "cautiously optimistic" after last year's solid 10-7 campaign. Spreading out the wrestlers among the different weight classes has been "somewhat of a problem," but there's no doubt Sweeney has the grapplers willing to do what is needed to get to a certain weight.

And no matter what weight they wrestle at, the Skippers will be wearing their emotion and desire on their sleeves.

"The whole team is working real hard without me having to push them," Sweeney said. "They're a real motivated group."

Cohasset will be without three-time state finalist Ryan Freeman, the squad's top wrestler last season. Sweeney knows his squad will have to somehow come up with the points Freeman earned in past seasons.

There is no shortage of talent among the older wrestlers, each of whom has been impressive during the preseason workouts.

Captain Nate Caldwell, who has been wrestling for the Skippers since the seventh grade, will be the squad's heavyweight grappler. Registering in at a husky 6-foot-5, 260-pounds, Caldwell is one of the biggest wrestlers in his division on the South Shore.

The sixth-place finisher in last season's Division 3 South Sectionals, John Whitehouse is "ready to roll," according to Sweeney. Whitehouse's training for this winter's schedule actually began in the fall. He attended clinics and worked out hard in the weight room. Sweeney said Whitehouse will be Cohasset's man in the 145-pound class.

"He's strong, fit and ready to roll," Sweeney said.

The team's other captain, Kevin Duffy, has moved up two weights to the 135-pound division. Fifth in the Division 3 State meet last year, Duffy's strong performance was a definite confidence booster and should go a long way when he takes to the mats in a tough weight class.

"He should have his way with most guys," Sweeney said. "Once you've placed in the states the confidence level is unmatched."

Junior Justin Buckley put in a "tremendous amount of lifting and has looked very good in the preseason," Sweeney said. Look for Buckley in the 171-pound results.

Cohasset has added Scituate-transfer Doug Sheerin to its roster and will bring that much more experience to the Skippers.

And while several wrestlers have worked for several seasons to reap the benefits this year, rookie grappler Eric Snow has the look and attitude of a seasoned grappler. Snow possesses a great deal of strength with a blend of quickness, making him a welcomed addition to the team.

Sweeney says Snow should have no problem making the transition into the sport.

"He'll adapt nicely," Sweeney said. "He's new this year, but is not wrestling like a first-time wrestler."

But while the potential for a strong winter season is definitely possible, Sweeney is "most excited" about the eight seventh graders who are wrestling for the first time. They practice with the varsity squad two days per week and will compete in tournaments in December, January and March.

"That's a good sized-group to come out," Sweeney said.

Cohasset will take part in a "controlled practice" with Weymouth High on Friday in preparation for its season-opening meet next Thursday against Canton.

Sweeney is a big believer in the practice scrimmages because they give his wrestlers the opportunity to work out with someone different and a mutual respect is built between the athletes.

Hardwick leads Skippers' hoopsters

jumped, and then adjusted in the air, finally sinking a left-handed layup to cap a gorgeous move and show his potential for three seasons of court generalship for the Skippers.

Paul-Michael Quintin, another sophomore phenom, will be the Skippers' sixth man this year. Quintin can play either the small forward or shooting-guard spot. He fills both roles perfectly. A shade under six feet, Quintin's jump shot is beautiful and he is also an excellent penetrator. While McNamara skipped JV, Quintin skipped freshman and played JV last year. The two form a tandem which should be the backbone of the Skippers' lineup next year and the year after.

J.L. Williams is the sixth of the juniors on the team. Williams, who played on the Cohasset tournament team last season, is the Skippers' starter at the other forward position, playing opposite Hardwick. While good on both ends of the floor, Williams is particularly adept, like Kilroy, at cleaning the offensive boards. Another of Williams' strong points is his long-range shooting. On Cohasset's road trip to New Hampshire last weekend, Williams tossed up a three pointer over the fingertips of a leaping defender. The shot, taken from somewhere along the Canadian border, tickled the twine and showed Ford just how good Williams is from the outside.

The Skippers' secret weapon this year will be Lutz Grunwald, a German exchange student who will be with the squad until February, when he returns home. Lutz, a forward, shows skill at both passing and shooting, although basketball is not as popular in Germany as in the United States. Lutz will provide the Skippers with depth off the bench and a little communication skill should the Skippers travel overseas.

The Skippers, who have Ford, Coach Hall, and Coach Coehn all manning the helm, are about to embark on another season which should see them go deep into the state tournament and, hopefully, pick up where last year's team left off.

Baseball club expands

The South Shore Baseball Club has announced plans to expand its AAU Traveling Baseball Program from two to six teams beginning in 1996, according to an announcement by Steve Almonte, director of the newly formed Seadogs program at the Hingham-based baseball training facility.

In order to screen candidates for the various age groups, the SSBC will hold a series of try-out clinics one weekend a month beginning in January and continuing through May, at which time the traveling teams will be selected. Each player is eligible to attend 16 instructional sessions conducted by SSBC's staff of high school and college coaches prior to the final selection of the teams in May. Players can attend any or all of the clinics for the single tuition of $100 for SSBC members or $125 for non-club members.

For more information and registration forms, please call the South Shore Baseball Club at 55 Recreation Road in Hingham, or call 617-740-2240 or 1-800-GO-4-HITS.

Hoop shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting registration applications for a basketball shooting clinic for girls and boys, grades four through eight.

Head Cohasset basketball coaches Ron Ford and Cori Hughes will co-direct this three-day clinic to be held Tuesday, Dec. 26, through Thursday, Dec. 28.

Shooting clinic will be held at the Sullivan Gym, CHS, from 9 a.m to noon. The fee is $60. The three day program is designed to help younger players develop correct fundamentals involved with shooting the basketball. Students will receive individual instruction, attend lectures and participate in shooting competitions.

To register, please complete forms available at the Cohasset Recreation Office, first floor, town hall.

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept late registrations for Blue Hills ski lessons for youngsters ages seven and over at the recreation office, town hall.

Wrestling lessons offered

The South Shore Community Center will be offering wrestling Monday, Dec. 11, from 4 to 5 p.m. and 5 to 6 p.m. for eight weeks under the direction of Peter Buckley. Students will learn the basic take-down moves, the three starting positions and live wrestle. (Come in sweats and sneakers.) Call 617-383-0088.

Youth coaches, we want to hear from you! Fax your team's results to Joe Reardon at (617) 837-4843.

School Notebook

Concert choir to perform

The Deer Hill School fifth- and sixth-grade concert choir, under the direction of music instructor Jack MacInnis, will perform at Faneuil Hall Marketplace, inside the upper rotunda, on Friday, Dec. 15, at noon.

Entrance exam at BC High

Boston College High School, located at 150 Morrissey Blvd., Boston, will administer its entrance examination Saturday, Dec. 9, at 8:30 a.m. Registration for the exam may be made by calling the school to request materials. For further information call Richard Gill in the admissions office at 436-3900.

Book Angel program returns

In the spirit of sharing holiday happiness, Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cohasset, and Buttonwood for Kids, Hingham, is again holding a Book Angel program. From now through Dec. 18, a 15 percent discount on books purchased through the program will be given to children and adults served by Wellspring in Hull and as gifts to children served by the Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Mary Martha Learning Center and the South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program.

For further information call 383-2665 or 749-2665. Both children and adults are invited to participate in the program.

Students earn new computers

Cohasset schools are again participating in the Bank of Boston Investment in Education program. Last year through community support, the schools were able to earn a color printer and an Apple Quick Take camera.

Participants are asked to collect investment points issued by the Bank of Boston from now until April 30. Anyone can do this by stopping by any Bank of Boston branch and completing a bonus certificate. There is no obligation. Further details are available at the bank. This year's goal is to accumulate enough points to obtain another color printer.

Financial aid workshop tonight

With college costs more than $25,000 at some private schools, nearly all families share a growing anxiety about how to pay for college. Those worrying about college costs should consider attending the Financial Aid Night to be held at Norwell High School Thursday, Dec. 7, beginning at 7 p.m.

Parents of college-bound seniors are encouraged to bring the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, the New College Scholarship Service Profile, #2 pencils, and their questions to the workshop. Forms and financial aid pamphlets will be available at the workshop.

This timely program, featuring Eileen O'Leary, director of Financial Aid at Stonehill College, is being sponsored by Lighthouse Area Guidance Directors. All South Shore area parents are welcome.

For additional information or directions call the Norwell High School guidance office at (617) 659-8806 during school hours.

Hire a student!

The Social Service League of Cohasset has compiled a list of Cohasset High School students who are ready, willing and able to do odd jobs around residents' homes, including yard clean up, snow shoveling, pet sitting, plant watering, babysitting and car care. To obtain the names and phone numbers of these helpful students, call 383-0771. The rates are reasonable.

Volunteers needed at CHS

Cohasset Junior-Senior High School is seeking volunteers to help with cataloguing and typing in the school's library. Anyone interested in donating their time is asked to call Susan McFadd at 383-6100.

Teen center news notes

The Cohasset Teen Center has announced there will be a dance for grades 7-9 to benefit the center held at Cohasset High School, Friday night, Dec. 8, from 7:30 to 10 p.m. There will be music, a DJ, prize winning raffles and dance contests. Admission is $5.

The Teen Center will be open this weekend Friday and Saturday nights, 7 to 10 p.m. The center will be closed Friday, Dec. 8, because of the dance, and open Saturday, Dec. 9. Cohasset youth and their parents are encouraged to call the center anytime with questions and ideas and speak to the center's new director, John Getgey. The number is 383-2492.

One-way traffic at Osgood

To better ensure the safety of students and their families, the selectmen have approved the Cohasset Police Department's request to authorize Ripley Road as a one-way street during key times Monday through Friday.

Ripley Road is one-way northbound during Osgood school arrival and dismissal times (8:45 to 9:15 a.m. and 2:45 to 3:15 p.m.)

BC High scholarships

Inquiries about the Mary E. Fleming and John J. Fleming Scholarships, awarded annually to students from Cohasset who are enrolled at Boston College High School, should be directed to Richard D. Gill, director of admissions at BC High School, at (617) 436-3900.

Go to college and get a break

Massachusetts college students who study certain majors at out-of-state public colleges could be eligible for tuition reductions under the Regional Student Program. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray encouraged students attending public colleges and universities in the New England area to look into the program.

According to the New England Board of Higher Education, the average student participating in the program this year is saving $3,800 on tuition.

Students in majors such as health systems, ocean engineering and tourism are among those eligible.

For more information, Rep. Murray recommends students look in "The Apple Book," which lists all the reduced tuition programs. The book is in most high school guidance offices, public libraries and college admissions offices.

Students can also get a copy by writing to the New England Board of Higher Education, 45 Temple Place, Boston, 02111.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

I hope you won't mind as winter approaches if we take a brief summer break! It seems like yesterday that this pristine white fence bordering the yard at 50 Summer Street was draped with tiny cream colored Clematis blooms. Dark fuchsia impatiens bordered the base of the fence while bright yellow mums sat in containers on the front stoop. Aren't we lucky in Cohasset to have so many residents caring enough to create these special touches making our streets and neighborhoods a feast for the eyes? Be sure to call me with news of those unique details that catch your eye around town!

Workshop to tackle transportation issues

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

In light of the state's recent decision to restore the Old Colony Railroad Greenbush line, the timing of next week's Transportation Workshop sponsored by the Plymouth County Development Council (PCDC) and Citizens Bank couldn't be better.

The forum will bring together public officials, business leaders, and residents to discuss the region's transportation needs into the next century and develop a strategy for handling those concerns.

With the Greenbush controversy coming to a head, spokesperson Dave Kindy said this was a good opportunity to reinvigorate the workshop, to bring in key people, and get input on the areas transportation needs.

"This is a key problem down here," Kindy said, noting that without an adequate transportation network it will be very difficult for the region to grow.

Two panels will be included in the three–hour workshop; one on "Highways and Skyways," and the other on "Trains and Buses."

Topics of interest in the first panel will include current highway projects including the new Central Artery and its impact on southeastern Massachusetts and a project Governor Weld alluded to in his speech to the South Shore Chamber of Commerce last week regarding the widening of Route 3 from Weymouth to the Sagamore Rotary.

State Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield) who will serve as moderator for the the second panel on trains and buses said that while Greenbush will be part of the discussions it will be only a small part.

"The timing of the workshop is coincidental to the decision to restore the Greenbush line," said Hynes, who asserted that the forum will give people an opportunity to understand what the decision means and what the process will be for other projects.

Train expansion throughout Plymouth County – why it's necessary, what it adds to the region and how buses play a role – will all be part of the discussion, Hynes said.

Panelists for the discussion on trains and buses include Robert Egan, project manager for the Old Colony Rail line; Veronika Thiebach, a staff attorney to the Conservation Law Foundation; and John Greene, chief transportation officer of the Plymouth and Brockton St. Railway Company.

Kindy said PCDC, which is presenting the transportation workshop in cooperation with the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, Old Colony Planning Council, Southeastern Regional Planning and Economic Development District, Massasoit Community College and the Metro South, Cranberry Area, Plymouth Area, South Shore and Cape Cod Canal Chambers of Commerce, is expecting a crowd of more than 100. The workshop is open to the general public.

"We want to get input from people so we can help the region grow, " Kindy sa[illegible]

"What do people [illegible] around here? We know [illegible] have transportation ne[illegible] that are not being addressed," he added.

Kindy said he was not sure how the recent decision to restore the Greenbush line would affect the turn out at the workshop but noted that there is still room to make suggestions on how to improve on it and make it a better deal for the people and businesses that will benefit from it.

The workshop will take place from 11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 14 at the Ridder Country Club, Route 14, in Whitman. Tickets are $20 per person and include lunch. For more information contact Brooks Kelly at 617-826-3136 or Dave Kindy at 508-747-1832.

Fund-raiser to help Travis Roy, injured B.U. ice hockey player

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Steve Ritts has made a vow, not only to himself but for a person he has never met.

Ritts plans to ride out a cold winter to help a former Boston University hockey player who is lying paralyzed in a Boston hospital.

The 24-year-old Ritts has set his sights on raising money to help pay for 19-year-old Travis Roy's hospital bills by wearing shorts every day until March 20, the first day of spring.

Roy, a promising Terrier freshman player, was paralyzed just 11 seconds into his first shift of the defending NCAA Division 1 champions' season opener when he crashed head first into the boards after checking an opposing player.

Ritts, a former Cohasset High hockey player, read about Roy's tragic accident and decided he wanted to help the player in any way he could.

Ritts almost passed on the shorts idea, but then had second thoughts and made the commitment.

"I just thought of it," he said. "It was one of those things that popped into my head. At first I thought it was ridiculous, but then the next day I said 'why not'."

Ritts' initial goal was to raise $300 for the winter by taking pledges for every day he wore the shorts. After reaching the $300 mark in a matter of days, Ritts set the revised goal at $1,000. The response was incredible. Just one week after he started donning shorts, Ritts had already raised an amazing $1,300.

Most of the pledges have come from fellow employees of Ahern Communications where Ritts works as a customer service representative. He said they fully support what he is trying to do.

> 'I'm not hiding in the office. It's really not much of a sacrifice. At least I can feel my legs'
> —Steve Ritts.

"All the people here have been supportive and so have all the other people who have pledged," Ritts said. "I never expected it to go this far."

Once again, Ritts has adjusted his goal. By March 20 he would like to have raised $2,000.

Ironically, Ritts started wearing shorts at just about the same time temperatures began to drop significantly in the Boston area. Ritts' moment of truth in the real cold came on the morning of Dec. 11 when he left for work with the thermometer hovering at 18 degrees.

"That morning was tough," Ritts said. "But it's not going to kill me. I'm going to make it. It's not going to get much colder than that."

Ritts doesn't plan to alter his lifestyle in any way because of the cold. He still goes into Boston with friends and wears his shorts to work.

"I get out," he said. "I'm not hiding in the Owner says tobacco rules made profits go up in smoke

By DAVID JOHNSON

They listened sympathetically, but health board members did not grant a waiver to the new anti-smoking regulations, even though one store owner charged the situation could force her out of business.

Board members said that the precedent would prompt other stores to seek waivers and that allowing cigarettes to be displayed in reach of children defeated the purpose of the rules in the first place.

During the health board's Tuesday night meeting, Josie Bowles, who bought the Cohasset Food Mart on Rte. 3A five months ago, requested a waiver in order to install two self-service tobacco displays at the cash registers in her store.

She explained that the displays would allow customers to pick up cigarettes themselves and place them on the counter.

Regulations currently require tobacco products to be out of reach, so customers will have to ask clerks for them.

Bowles said her sales have plummeted, some 25 to 30 cartons of cigarette per week, because cigarettes are an impulse purchase, just as many convenience items are.

Bowles said Philip Morris, makers of Marlboro cigarettes, will pay the store $927 per quarter for the displays to be erected at the cash register.

Combined with other tobacco displays, Bowles said that means some $4,400 a year in badly needed revenue. "It's two months free rent for me," she stated.

Questions prompt review of fire department budget

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Fire chief Roger Lincoln felt the heat Monday night as selectmen questioned several items in the fire department budget, eventually postponing the debate until Lincoln returns with more information and labor counsel is consulted.

Lincoln presented a budget request of nearly $1,222,000, which increased 1.75 percent over the current figure of just over $1,201,000.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan questioned the policy of calling back men, at over-time pay, to cover for the ambulance. He also asked about plans to buy 12 radios. Selectmen Jane Goedecke questioned the training budget.

Lincoln explained that the use of call backs has increased 60 percent because the shift in staffing in July left the station uncovered when all four fire department personnel were at the scene of an accident.

Previously, a fire fighter served as dispatcher, but now a civilian dispatcher is being used.

Lincoln said that when the ambulance goes to the hospital, two personnel are unavailable for as long as two hours.

He therefore calls in two staffers, who are paid over-time, at time and a half.

Lincoln requested nearly $40,000 for call back, estimating 1584 hours at a fraction more than $25 per hour.

The total over-time budget request is $132,000.

Sullivan said it is not necessary to call in personnel every time the ambulance leaves town.

He said additional personnel should be called in only when there is another call for help, which might

MISSING DOG

Bubba, our year-old Chow, broke his collar and ran off on Cedar Street in Cohasset near the golf course. He is medium sized (about 50 pounds), wish a bushy black coat, a short muzzle, and a broad head. He is friendly, especially with children, but may be wary of adults.

He has been seen in the area bounded by Jerusalem Road, Forest Avenue, Route 3A, and Route 228 near the Cohasset/Hingham line.

We miss Bubba very much and need your help if we're ever going to see him again. There will be a reward for anyone who can get him back to us. If you've seen him or have any other information, please call us or one of the animal control people below.

Cohasset's Week

Harbor testing is costly

The news on the proposed dredging of Cohasset Harbor seems perennially bleak: town administrator Gregory Doyon announced this week that the cost of harbor pollution testing is likely to be at least twice original estimates.

Doyon said each pollution test may cost from $30,000 to $40,000, versus the $15,000 originally estimated.

Selectman Michael Sullivan suggested soliciting bids on the project in an attempt to reduce costs.

The other selectmen agreed, saying they were disappointed at the escalating price tag. Doyon said he will look into the matter.

The testing is necessary because high pollution levels have been discovered in some areas of the harbor. If further testing supports those findings, then the dredged material will have to be dumped on land, not in the ocean, bringing the cost of the project to $800,000 from $500,000 if ocean dumping is possible.

Doyon contract renewed

Without discussion Monday night, selectmen approved a new one-year contract for town administrator Gregory Doyon.

The seven-page contract spells out Doyon's duties, but it does not give him a raise.

Doyon's salary will remain $56,482 through December, 1996.

Budget review flying along

As they requested earlier this year, selectmen are receiving town department budgets earlier than usual in order to provide adequate review prior to town meeting.

At this week's meeting, the board approved a number of small budgets, most of which showed only minimal increases. Several departments are actually requesting less money.

Budget requests approved were: veteran's affairs, $6,800, unchanged over the current figure; committee on disabilities, $100, unchanged; the Common historical committee,$200, unchanged; the historical commission, $200, double the current budget, an increase caused by the cost of listing some properties in the National Registry of Historic Places; the celebrations budget, which includes the Memorial Day activities, $1,700, unchanged; street lights, $2,000, unchanged; shellfish, $720, unchanged.

Vocational ed is popular

Cohasset's assessment for the South Shore Vocational Technical Regional High School has doubled over the current figure.

For the coming fiscal year, Cohasset will be asked to pay $50,000 to the school, up from the current $25,786.

Gregory Doyon, town administrator, told selectmen Monday night that there are eight Cohasset students currently enrolled at the technical school, opposed to three students a year ago.

Gjesteby is named VP

Selectman Martha Gjesteby, an active participant in several state-wide organizations, has been nominated as second vice president of the Massachusetts Selectman's Association.

Gjesteby said such organizations are a valuable way to learn how other communities have handled problems similar to those faced by Cohasset.

"We all don't want to reinvent the wheel," she said.

Insurance budgets down

The success of the Mass. Interlocal Insurance Association, reform of the state's worker's compensation laws and the town's good record have combined to reduce insurance costs, town administrator Gregory Doyon explained during Monday night's selectman's meeting.

Doyon is requesting $134,000 for personal and liability insurance for the upcoming fiscal year, down from the current $141,000.

Worker's compensation is down to $95,000, from $100,000.

Election workers appointed

At their Monday night meeting, selectmen approved Democratic election workers, as listed in a letter from Democratic Town Committee chairman, Roseanne McMorris.

The workers are: Janice Rosano, Jean Salvador, Linda Nash, Susan Kent, Patricia Walsh, Fred Koed, Ron Goodwin, Debbie Protulis, Barbara Valovic, Anthony Finnegan, Patricia Laugelle and Dan Kearny.

Cohasset's Week

Olde Salt House is for sale

A for sale sign now hangs on the Olde Salt House seafood restaurant, selectman Jane Goedecke reported during this week's meeting.

She recommended that the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission, ABCC, be told of the sale.

The restaurant has appealed the selectman's decision not issue an alcoholic beverage license.

Goedecke said that during the hearing, selectmen were told the business would not be for sale.

Businesses with alcoholic beverage licenses can be worth more than those without.

Students named committee

Cohasset High School students Alex Creighton and Elisabeth Kidder were named to the drug and alcohol committee during Monday night's selectman's meeting.

Harbor, building inspector budgets win approval

Selectmen this week accepted the following budget requests for the upcoming fiscal year: the building inspector, $46,368, up $320; the harbormaster, $45,605, down $769; town reports, $7,750, up $250; parking clerk, $2,000, up $200; civil defense, $300, up $50; and the following unchanged budgets: shellfish, $720; weights and measures, $1,650; and the personnel committee, $250; and town buildings, $600.

The advisory committee must now review the budgets and make a recommendation to town meeting.

Clerical costs down slightly

There has been a three percent decrease in town hall clerical costs, according to the town administrator.

The requested town hall clerical pool budget is $267,074, down from $276,815.

The fiscal year 1997 budget request for town hall is $325,191, down from $334,932.

Clean catch basin covers

All Cohasset residents are encouraged to clean off any catch basin covers near their homes to prevent flooding and subsequent damage to their properties.

The Highway Department cleans these covers as often as possible, but during this time of year with leaves falling quickly and the current rainfall, the Highway Department cannot continually clean off the basin covers, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Planting trees is encouraged

The Norfolk County Conservation District has compiled a free 23-page brochure, "Conservation Trees," to encourage planting, preserving and managing of trees to conserve soil, energy, water and wildlife. It also briefly explains the proper way to plant and prune trees.

In February, a list of popular plants suitable for spring planting (burning bush, lilac, forsythia, mock orange, pink almond, red barberry, dogwood, pussy willow, sedum, bleeding heart and aster and evergreens, fruits and vegetables) will be published.

To request a free brochure and to be added to the group's mailing list, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Norfolk County Conservation District, 400 Main St., Walpole 02081, Attn: Trees.

Drug, alcohol policy okay'ed

After a brief discussion Monday evening, selectmen adopted a drug and alcohol testing program required by the Federal Highway Administration.

The policy will apply to all drivers of commercial vehicles, including school buses and highway department trucks.

The policy will go into affect Jan. 1.

Gregory Doyon, town administrator, said the school bus supervisor, himself, and a highway employee have all been trained in detecting substance abuse problems.

DEPRESSION

My roommate was depressed. More than the blues. I mean seriously depressed.
She always looked sad. Cried a lot. She couldn't sleep, eat, or do any of her work.
Treat it! Defeat it!
I figured she needed to get professional help, before her pain got worse. So I checked it out.
I was amazed. Once her depression was diagnosed, treatment was effective and began to work within a few weeks.

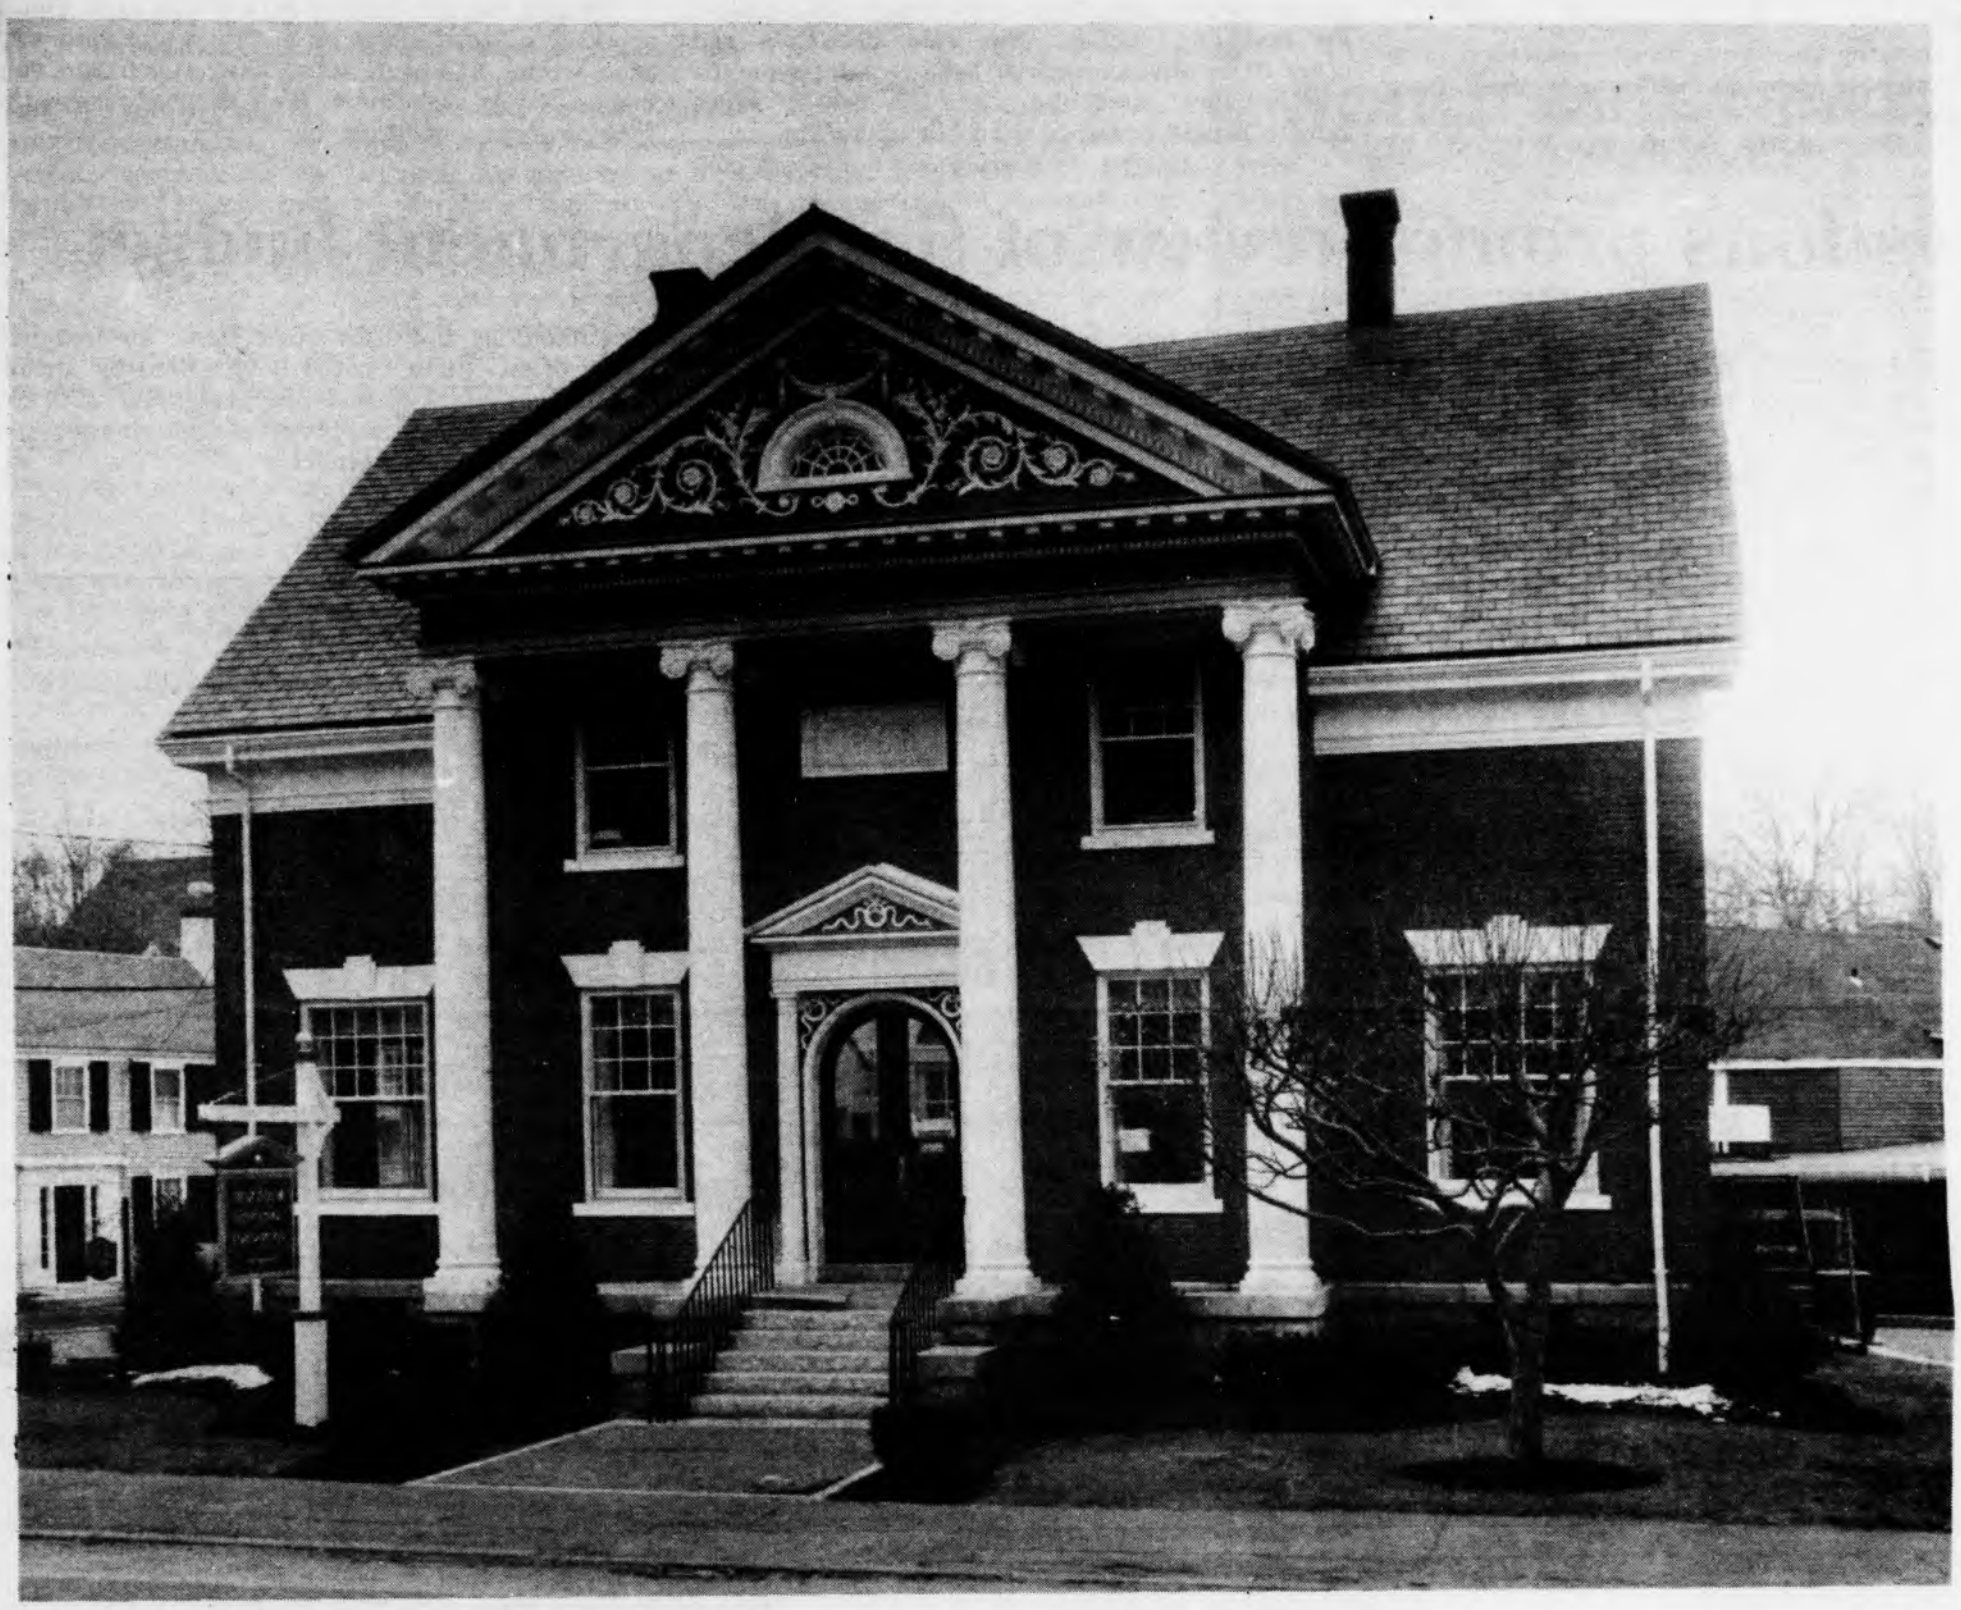
This Was Cohasset's Bank for 100 Years!



Now, It Is Again!

We've been helping South Shore residents with their banking needs since 1834. As of Monday, December 11, 1995, we have a new home in Cohasset. We're located at 13 Elm Street in Cohasset Village, the site of the former Cohasset Savings Bank.

If you step inside, you'll see that extensive renovations have restored this building to its original character and charm; you'll find friendly, helpful people and personal service. This is the kind of service you just don't get from those big regional banks.

You'll also find a 24-hour ATM and a night depository.

If you step inside soon, you'll find out about our free offer for stadium blankets and canvas tote bags for qualified depositors.

As a locally owned and managed community bank, it's our goal to provide you with quality financial products and superior service. Your deposits help us provide loans for families and businesses right here in Cohasset.

Owner says tobacco rules made profits go up in smoke

If the displays are not permitted, Bowles said she will have to lay off two part-time employees.

She said she is trying to make up revenue lost when she was told customers playing Keno, a game sponsored by the state lottery, could not smoke in her store.

The smoking ban drove away customers, causing her sales to drop to $2,300 per week from $7,000 per week.

Dawn Sibor of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, which promoted the regulations, said that since 1986 state law has forbidden smoking in retail stores. She said that customers should not have been smoking and playing Keno.

Under questioning from health board member Robert Davenport, Bowles said that tobacco companies are the only businesses which pay retailers for installing displays. She said Coca-Cola and other firms offer incentives, but no cash payments.

Davenport said the store is cleaner since Bowles bought it and praised her operation.

Sibor suggested that Bowles get help from convenience store associations on ways to make up the lost revenue and also suggested working with the cigarette companies on ways to make displays which would comply with regulations.

Bowles said that the firms will pay smaller amounts for displays customers can not touch.

Health board member Alix White said that a smoke-free store could be an asset and said that Stop & Shop had been selling cigarettes from a central display in violation of the rules, but turned the space over to something else.

Questions prompt review of fire department budget

happen once or twice a year.

"This should not be voted for," Sullivan said. "It's poor management. It directly goes against the intent," of the new agreement.

Pratt stated that Sullivan should not have voted for the new agreement if he didn't like it.

Both Sullivan and Goedecke replied they had not expected the call back procedure to be used so much.

Lincoln said that labor counsel should be asked if the policy can be changed. He said the fire fighter's contract spells out the call back procedure.

Sullivan also questioned Lincoln's plan to spend $10,000 on 12 radios, so each fire fighter would have his own.

Lincoln said the radios would improve communication and standardized equipment. They would not be taken home, but would remain part of the fire fighter's equipment, therefore be better cared for and would last longer.

However, Sullivan said that the department bought ten new radios last year.

Lincoln said those radios were necessary to replace equipment which did not function well.

Selectman Merle Brown wanted to know how often the radios purchased last year were in repair and Lincoln said they had all worked fine.

"It (more radios) is nice to have, but nice to haves are not necessary," Sullivan said, suggesting that Lincoln might buy a couple of radios.

In response to Goedecke's questions about training, Lincoln explained that training is not mandated by law and is therefore often cut in favor of other things.

However, Lincoln said it is his goal that every fire fighter be trained in all aspects of the job, so requests for inspections, for instance, could be handled by anyone and not postponed until the appropriate personnel are available.

Health board seeks secretary

Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik told the board of health Tuesday night that secretary Carol Oteri-Puffer will probably not be returning to work.

He said Oteri-Puffer returned from her leave of absence for illness on Nov. 30, but "left in a poor state of health" six hours into the day.

According to Godzik, Oteri-Puffer later went to her doctor, who told her "she shouldn't come back."

Board members agreed to write to town administrator Gregory Doyon to clarify the situation and said they need a permanent employee as soon as possible.

The health board now has a full-time temporary employee in addition to Godzik.

Health board member Robert Davenport suggested sending Oteri-Puffer a letter thanking her for her long, dedicated service, if in fact she is not returning.

Other board members, Alix White and Thomas Cook, agreed.

Davenport abstention sought

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Health Board member Robert Davenport said Tuesday night that he has not yet heard from town counsel Richard Henderson or the state ethics commission on whether or not he may participate in the discussion of Cohasset Heights Landfill, CHL.

In the meantime, Davenport said he will continue to discuss CHL matters.

In a Dec. 11 letter, SAFE activist John McNabb wrote the ethics commission asking them to rule that Davenport should not consider the CHL expansion request since he owns land across Rte. 3A from the landfill.

McNabb cited previous cases in which the ethics commission has determined that officials may not discuss the future of land which abuts their own personal property.

During Tuesday night's health board meeting, Davenport said he has not received any opinion on his participation.

He asked McNabb why he waited so long in the process to make his complaint.

McNabb replied that if the state's Department of Environmental Protection, DEP, had ruled against the landfill's expansion, the issue would have become a moot point.

Landfill owner Paul Barry, who was also at the meeting, said he had not seen McNabb's letter until Tuesday night and therefore he would not comment on it.

In his complaint to the commission, McNabb enclosed its own fact sheet #6, "Don't Vote on Matters Affecting Abutting or Nearby Property."

He also enclosed a Sept. 29, 1995 abutters' list, listing Davenport.

The board of health must begin hearings on the CHL expansion no later than Jan. 2.

Meanwhile, a two-year moratorium on landfill proposals will not affect CHL, selectmen said Monday night after meeting in executive session for nearly two hours with special counsel Michael Leon and the conservation commission.

The moratorium was announced a week after DEP determined that CHL was a suitable location for dumping construction and demolition debris. McNabb has said that if the moratorium had been announced a week earlier, it would have stopped the DEP consideration.

Also Tuesday night, selectman Peter Pratt criticized the Weld administration for its handling of the issue.

HAPPY HOLIDAYS

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Village shops are all dressed up for the holidays

Candice Buckley, daughter of Lynn and Gerald Buckley of 6 Hugh Strain Road, has enrolled as a member of the class of 1999 at Dartmouth College.

Candice is a graduate of Cohasset High School.

Jennifer Noon, a Dartmouth College junior from Cohasset, is studying Spanish in Barcelona, Spain this fall as part of the college's foreign study program there. She is the daughter of Nicholas and Constance Noon of Cohasset. Jennifer must be due home soon. Hopefully she will give us a full report upon her return!

Nov. 22, 1995 was a special day in the family of Roger and Ann Pompeo. That's the day Alexia Nicole Ritz was born! Alexia is the daughter of Laura (Pompeo) and Jeff Ritz, and right now they live in Chicago (Dad and Mom are both attending graduate classes). She was seven pounds, one ounce at birth and 20 inches long.

After all of the exams and "heavy duty" term papers, they will be in Cohasset for the holidays – everyone is so excited? Of course, we don't have to tell you that Roger and Ann have already seen Alexia. They flew right out there and celebrated Thanksgiving with them! From all reports, she is a real gem!

We really do have some wonderful, thoughtful students at Cohasset High School. Did you hear what Patricia Bull, Holly Brennock, Ryan Goff, Amber Hopeman, Caitlin Connolly, Tobey Horn, Nicole Peterson, Alli Ritts and Ryan Sawchuk did recently? They all participated in the AIDS Dance-a-thon at the Hynes Convention Center in Boston. They earned more than $735 from donations by CHS students and teachers and pledges from community and family members. The next time you see any one of these kids, tell them how great they are, because they are!

With gifts to be purchased, parties to attend and holiday functions galore, most of us are hoping for warm weather with little snow – but not Steve Ritts! Steve is in the process of raising funds to aid paralyzed Boston University hockey player Travis Roy by wearing shorts every day throughout the winter! He would love it if all of us could pledge a daily amount, then watch to see how long he will last! As Steve said, "Be forewarned – I don't freeze easily!"

And when Steve thought of the idea, it was still a mild winter. Whew! – last weekend was a tough one! The fundraiser will end March 20, the first day of spring. For more info call 471-1100, ext. 239 or 383-1422 (fax: (617) 383-9070). This is a wonderful idea for a most worthy cause. Give what you can to help Travis Roy!

Had a lovely chat with Libby Pompeo, who informed me that the Class of 1937, CHS, had their annual Christmas lunch last week at the Red Lion Inn. Sixteen people attended, and all had a great time. One member, Frank "Ducky" Meally, was not there, as he was undergoing surgery. All those present signed on of the Red Lion Inn's placemats to sent to him. That should really cheer him up! Everyone is sure he will be there next year and can't wait to hold their 59th reunion!

Last weekend was a lovely reminder that we are indeed lucky to live in Cohasset. What a nice job all the merchants have done to make a festive, yet quaint, setting for the holiday season! Santa was at Zinnia's having breakfast with the kiddos and having a special time listening to their requests – looking across at Cohasset Hardware with its holiday windows looking spectacular (don't you love Tina's gourd Santas?)

M.J. Bird's owner, Madonna, was out there with her husband, making sure that the lamp post and signs looked perfect. (Have you seen her marvelous twig trees? They are definitely going to be all the rage this year.) We could go on and on, but you get the drift – why not do your shopping locally? Meet your pals and cross people off your Christmas list and have fun!

Mercersburg Academy, located in Mercerberg, Penn., sent us word that Elizabeth M. Hills, who is in the 10th grade, made the high honor roll (90-100 grade-point average) for the first marking period of the fall 1995 term. Elizabeth is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David W. Hills.

❑

Happy birthday greetings to to Dr. Roger Pompeo. We hope your day is an especially happy one!

Congratulations go to Heather Brennock of Doane Street, who was the producer of "Bye, Bye Birdie," presented by the Westfield State College Musical Theatre Guild. The show was staged with a 43-member cast and ran from Nov. 30 to Dec. 2 in Dever Auditorium on the Westfield State College campus. The cast and crew dedicated the entire performance in loving memory of student Amy Rebecca Gerry, and the proceeds from opening night went to the Amy Rebecca Gerry Scholarship Fund. All reports tell us that the show was a smashing success. Good work, Heather!

Received a nice note from Jeff Nothnagle last week. He is running once again on behalf of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's research through the 1996 Marathon Challenge. Jeff tells us that more than half of all people with cancer have been cured, and two out of every three children have been cured through Dana Farber's basic and clinical research.

Last year Jeff ran in memory of three people close to him who had died of cancer just 3-1/2 months before the marathon: Tim Myers, Bill McKenna and his aunt, Esther Nothnagle. That's why he is committed to run again. Last year Jeff raised $4,440 (up from $2,400 in 1994, his first year).

1995 was his fifth marathon, and a personal-best time. So far this year he has run more than 1,000 miles and plans another 600 before April 15, the 100th running of the Boston Marathon! Jeff's goal is to raise more than $4,500 this year, and he is hoping while he is completing his training you will show your support to the crucial research by sending him a check in any amount you can! Give him a call (383-0895).

Ran into Maura Ditmar the other day, and she told me that the Community Garden Club's House Tour was a super success! Hundreds of people went on the tour (we spotted several men, too – it's so nice to see them show such a real interest) and she wanted to thank all of you for making it such a huge success.

That's the news from here. Please put me on your list of "things to do" this week – call with your news!

Tie one on

While you go about your Christmas preparations and merrymaking this holiday season, don't forget to tie one on.

That's right, go ahead and tie one on – a red ribbon on your car, that is, as a reminder to yourself and others to refrain from drinking and driving as the holiday round of office and family parties gets into full swing.

The Plymouth County Chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving held its annual candlelight vigil recently in memory of those who have been killed or injured in drunk driving accidents.

The numbers are truly staggering if not sobering for those who would willfully get behind the wheel of a vehicle after having had too much to drink.

Approximately 16,589 innocent people across the country were killed last year in alcohol related crashes. Another 297,000 were injured, causing emotional trauma to their famililies if they were behind the wheel, and a mountain of debt in hospital costs for the victims of drunk driving accidents.

During the holiday season, accidents on our roads and highways involving alcohol and other drugs typically increase, according to MADD. Which isn't surprising since almost every billboard and magazine ad pitches a bottle of booze as the perfect holiday gift to put under the tree or present to the host of a party.

Despite tougher drunk driving laws implemented over the last ten years and a heightened public awareness of the insanity of letting drunk drivers off the hook too easily, there are still plenty of people who get in their cars when their judgment is impaired from having one too many.

And thanks to the efforts of groups like MADD, people are starting to realize that when it comes to operating a vehicle, even one drink is one too many.

The horrible tragedy that occurred just last week in Whitman drives home the senseless loss of life that comes from just one driver getting behind the wheel drunk. A 37-year-old man, newly married, was struck by an allegedly drunk driver and killed on impact while walking his dog on a sidwalk close to his home.

The man was minding his own business, out for a walk on a brisk fall morning – enjoying the day. He literally did not know what hit him in the words of one reporter on the scene.

The 57-year-old driver, a Brockton woman, reportedly had two prior convictions for drunk driving and her license had been revoked. She will likely face charges of vehicular homicide but, as fate would have it, only walked away with facial and chest injuries.

No words can comfort the loved ones of the victim of this senseless waste of life and no amount of punishment handed down by the courts can reverse the heart-breaking chain of events that took place in Whitman the other morning.

It all comes down to a sense of personal responsibility for our own actions. Have a good time this holiday season, but please don't drink and drive.

New school is not justified

To the Editor:

I read your article in the Nov. 30 Mariner, "New School Construction Tops Option List to...Solve Overcrowding." I have lived in Cohasset since 1968 and I have had five children go through the Cohasset schools from K through 12. One of my children is still a student in the system.

The school committee and the superintendent are trying to make a case that we need more space in our schools. When I first heard this, I did some research of the school populations from 1968 through 1995. I was able to look up school data in the Annual Town Reports from 1968 through 1977. I had to request information from the school department for the years 1978 through 1995. The following is the breakdown (see chart below)

It is evident from the projected enrollment of 480, for the year 2005, that we would maximize the capacity of the Osgood School. This would include space for the pre-kindergarten which is a class that we did not have in the 60s, 70s or 80s. However, we would have plenty of room in the Deer Hill and excess space in the Jr./Sr. high school. We must also ask the question, where are these students coming from? Would they all be residents of Cohasset?

From the information supplied it does not appear that we need to spend approximately $10 million for a new school. The bond could only be for 20 years, I am told. The first five years' costs would have to be paid 100 percent by the town with no state participation. I have been told that the state's participation would commence in the sixth year. This burden of debt is not necessary. Combined with future projections of costs for the sewer system and the amortization of our current debt this town will have serious problems with its bond rating because our debt level will be enormous.

In my opinion we have plenty of space in our schools. The problem we face is effective use of the space. It appears that the school committee and the superintendent will only consider spending our money. There is no justification for the expenditure. I would urge everyone to attend the town meeting and to defeat this article. It will not enhance the education of our children. It will increase the debt burden on the taxpayers by a project that cannot be justified with these projected school census numbers.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Town will defend its interests

To the Editor:

Citizens of Cohasset should feel outrage at the machinations of the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) during the past two weeks.

Friday, Dec. 1, the DEP determined that the Area V expansion of the Cohasset Heights landfill was a suitable site for depositing construction and demolition (C/D) waste and that the proposed site of the Materials Recycling Facility (MRF) was also suitable for a solid waste handling facility.

Then, Dec. 7, the DEP initiated a moratorium on the review of permits for any Municipal Solid Waste (MSW) landfill until 1998 and for C/D landfills until 1997.

If the moratorium had been declared before the DEP approved the Cohasset Heights site for a C/D landfill, CHL would have had to compete with other more suitable sites in the permitting process. As it is, however, with the site already approved by the DEP, CHL will be first in line for a permit when the moratorium is lifted. Thus the Dec. 1 decision actually works to CHL's advantage and specifically victimizes the Town of Cohasset, while the Dec. 7 decision gives the general public the impression that the DEP is fulfilling its lofty mission of protecting the environment.

Our taxes support this agency. Supposedly, it exists to maintain a safe environment for Massachusetts citizens. Its shameful capitulation to the lobbying efforts of the waste handling industry is a betrayal of its public trust.

Now the burden of safeguarding our water supply, keeping our wetlands habitable for wildlife, and defending our town against the intolerable noise, dirt, and traffic of a waste handling facility has been shifted from a powerful state agency to the citizens of this little town. Between Jan. 2 and Feb. 15, a series of hearings will be held by our Board of Health to decide whether a site assignment for the CHL expansion will be granted. In effect, the well-funded and powerful DEP shrugged off its responsibility, cavalierly ignored its own criteria for site suitability, and said loftily to little Cohasset, "Defend yourselves."

Our answer to that agency is a grim and resolute, "We will!"

Teen Center dance a hit!

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset Teen Center, I would like to thank the 120 seventh-, eighth- and ninth-grade students who attended the Holiday Dance last Friday evening at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School. They acted responsibly and had a great time. The chaperones all agreed that we are lucky to have such a terrific group of kids here.

During the evening, prizes were awarded in various dance categories. We would like to thank Good Sport and Victoria's Pizza for providing gift certificates for this event and for supporting the Teen Center. Jim O'Sullivan and Mark Equi were outstanding DJs. They really kept the kids dancing. We also appreciate the commitment the school administration has toward providing opportunities for the students to socialize in a safe environment.

Happy Holidays!

Rabid possum sent to Hingham

Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik reported this week that the town has had its first case of rabies in months.

A possum, which turned out to be rabid, bit a dog and was taken to the Hingham animal clinic.

The dog, which had not been immunized, is now being treated.

Health officials urged residents to immunize their pets in the event of contact with a rabid wild animal.

Godzik said there has been "a large die off of raccoons," due to the rabies epidemic of several years ago.

Buccaneers, warships once disturbed

History of Gulf detailed at meeting

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

A swooping gull, a splashing deer, the rippling of a canoeists' paddle – today even the disturbances of the pacific waters of the Gulf River can be called serene.

But those historic waters which divide Scituate and Cohasset have not always been so peaceful.

Up the Gulf River have sailed buccaneers who plundered the Spanish Main; Colonists who quarrelled bitterly over land and political loyalty; marauding British warships; industrialists whose mills and shipyards provided jobs for hundreds; and mysterious Indians who have left only scattered clues as to their identity.

In fact, the history of the river is every bit as lively as the history of the communities around it, according to prominent Cohasset historian David Wadsworth.

During a slide presentation at the annual meeting of the Gulf Association, held last week at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage, Wadsworth told a crowd of some 50 people that the Gulf River has a rich past.

PERHAPS ONE of the most the colorful incidents Wadsworth related was the tale of "The Three Sisters," a sloop, or one masted sailing vessel, built in 1750 at the Briggs shipyard along the Gulf.

Cohasset's Aaron Pratt and two partners commissioned the ship, which sailed from the Gulf River for the Caribbean under the command of Captain Zebulon Wade of Scituate.

At North Carolina's treacherous Cape Hateras, "The Three Sisters" discovered a Spanish vessel which had run aground and was sinking. The vessel was loaded with silver from the Americas bound for Spain.

According to Wadsworth, another ship arrived and Wade and the other captain agreed to transport the silver to Spain in return for a share.

However, once his ship was loaded, Wade made for the Caribbean. His crew was in the process of burying the silver on the beach at St. Eustacia island, when they were interrupted by the captain of the vessel which had floundered at Cape Hateras, who had arrived on a Spanish war ship.

Wade was taken to Spain and thrown into prison. He later resurfaced in another Caribbean port, but "The Three Sisters" was never seen again.

"What I'm saying is piracy, right here in Cohasset," Wadsworth told his attentive audience.

DURING THE WAR of 1812, British warships marauded the Massachusetts coast, demanding tribute or threatening to burn down coastal communities.

Wadsworth recounted the famous story of Scituate's army of two who saved that town from disaster.

A British frigate sailed toward Scituate Harbor one day. Knowing that the militia was away and the town was defenseless, Abigail and Rebecca Bates, daughters of the lighthouse keeper, grabbed a fife and drum and marched along the dunes on the inner side of Lighthouse Point. Although they could not see the Bates girls, the British could hear them and assumed the militia was arriving and departed for Cohasset.

Wadsworth said the British sailed into the Gulf River, where the fishing fleet had taken refuge. But once the British saw the fortifications along what is now the Glades, the British again assumed the area was heavily defended and departed.

"The Gulf played a role in saving the fishing fleet of Cohasset," the historian explained.

Not all of the river's drama is as easily understood. He said that thousands of years before Europeans arrived in the area, unknown Indians lived on its banks in the summer, retreating inland during the winter.

In 1614, Captain Smith became the first European reported to have seen the Gulf.

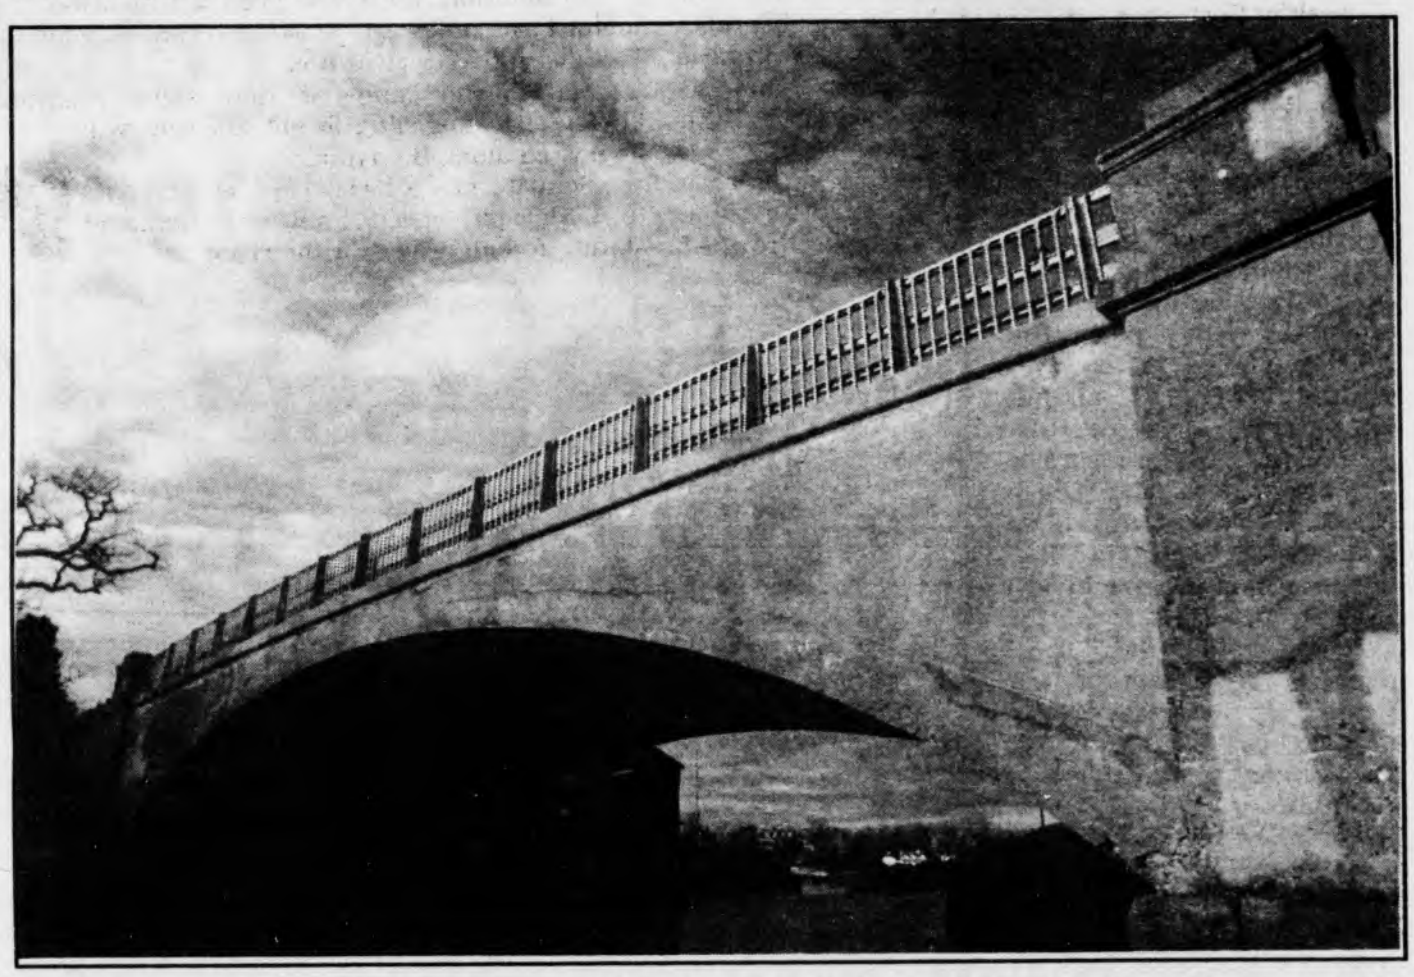
Later in the Seventeenth Century, the river served as the frontier between the Plymouth Bay and Massachusetts Bay Colonies, with settlers from each group pushing toward the other.

"They literally bumped into each other down here," Wadsworth stated.

The lush banks of the Gulf became the subject of many a legal dispute because a colony had the right to award land grants within its territory. Some parcels were awarded twice, with owners from each colony appearing to take possession.

Wadsworth explained that hay was an important commodity in that agricultural economy.

In the early days Cohasset was used as a pas-



The Gulf River, looking peaceful today as it flows under the bridge at Border Street, has a rich history, recently related by town historian David Wadsworth.

'Coffee hour' for tots

St. Anthony's Parish will host a Moms, Pops and Tots "Coffee Hour" on Fridays, from 10:30 to noon, in the Desmond Room.

Moms and Dads, along with their young children, ages newborn to kindergarten, are invited to take a break from the daily routine to meet and socialize with other parishioners and friends. Toys and light refreshments will be available. For further information call Ginny at 383-0282.

peaceful Cohasset river, historian says

ture for horses from Hingham.

The Eighteenth Century brought not only independence to the Commonwealth, it brought industrialization to the Gulf River.

Showing slides of the remains of several sites, Wadsworth explained that grist mills and shipyards dotted the banks of the river. There were mills off Beechwood St. at Turtle Island, off Rte. 3A, at Mill Pond and off Country Way.

An iron foundry, tannery and lumber mill were also important early industrial operations along the Gulf.

WADSWORTH PRESENTED slides of a number of Cohasset and North Scituate houses, explaining how architectural styles in the area changed, from the early salt boxes, to the larger Georgian Colonial and later Federal houses.

Many of those houses lined Country Way, as North and South Main Streets were then called.

As Cohasset became a summer retreat for wealthy Bostonians, the houses became truly grand. Wadsworth mentioned Captain Arbury, whose Crocker House is now the Hagerty show room facing the harbor, was a renowned yachtsman who won the America's Cup race in 1885.

The picturesque waters of the Gulf River have also seen their share of tragedy. He cited the three young members of the Snow family who drowned after falling through the ice during a winter skating party.

Suggesting that winters were more severe one hundred years ago, Wadsworth pointed out that the river regularly froze. This comment prompted considerable speculation among his listeners, several of whom cited the winter of two years ago.

The group enjoyed the presentation.

"Thank you for your splendid historical tour," Gulf Association president John Hartshorne told Wadsworth. "It was extremely interesting and informative."

HARTSHORNE, who is stepping down after six years as association president, told the members that the river is now cleaner than it was when he took office.

"There is no question," he said. "The river is in much better shape than it was six years ago."

The cleaner water has resulted in an increase in the fish population.

In addition, there has been a shift away from motor boats in favor of kyaks and canoes, which are less disruptive to river life.

Hartshorne reported that signs reminding boaters that speeding is not allowed, will be posted along the river.

Scituate has a by-law restricting boats to a 6 mph. speed limit and Cohasset statute forbids wakes in the river.

New officers for the Gulf Association will be: Eleanor Bleakie, president; James Spelman, vice president; Connie Tolman, secretary; Carleton Richmond, treasurer. In addition to the above, directors will be: Jack Barnard, Michael Bleakie, Drexel Gibson, Jack Hubbard, John Hartshorne, Lynne Maloney, Donna O'Connor, Patsy Rabstejnek and Gilman Wilder.

For membership information, call Hartshorne at 383-0317, Spelman, 545-2029 or write P.O. Box 140, North Scituate, 02060.

Home delivery is as easy as a phone call.

Pre-K to grade 3

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Special to the Mariner

School committee members unanimously voted to approve one of the three options suggested to alleviate overcrowding and improve the educational quality in Cohasset schools at their Dec. 7 meeting.

The committee selected Option 2, which includes a new pre-kindergarten to third-grade school most likely to be built on the easily accessible 77-acre site between Osgood and Deer Hill, and renovations to the Deer Hill School, which will house grades four through six. The option also makes allowances for a sewage treatment plant, which may or may not be necessary.

"We've gone through a great deal of information," said John Calabro, chairman of the school facilities committee. "We focused on the need for classroom space, not only additional, but improved. There is no perfect solution, but there is a pretty, pretty good solution," he said of Option 2.

The town's price tag for the option is $5.594 million. The project's total cost is $13.985 million, but under a state-sponsored program, Cohasset will spend only 40 cents for every dollar spent. The state will pay for 60 percent of the project, including both capital and interest costs.

Broken down into its three components, the town's cost for the option encompasses $3.956 million for the new school, $1.42 million in renovations to Deer Hill and $210,000 for the possible sewage plant.

The junior and senior high school would structurally remain the same. Principal Curtis Collins said he is researching middle schools, which follow a different educational format than a junior high. Collins and others are looking to change to a middle school format, which includes "teams." Groups of teachers work with the same students and have the same free period in which to plan curriculum and discuss student progress.

Option 2 was also the choice of the Deer Hill School Council and by informal vote the choice of the Cohasset Teacher's Association. The school committee encouraged comments and suggestions from the audience of about 25 citizens and school-related staff.

One of the questions asked was why a kindergarten-through-grade-five option was not on the list. A kindergarten-through-grade-four option was discussed at an earlier date, but the principals of both the Osgood and Deer Hill schools said that an elementary school with more than 500 students was not viable.

Jim Kirk, school committee secretary, added that if a new K-5 school was built, Deer Hill would house grades six-through-eight. The high school would then be emptied of two grades, and Deer Hill would have to be expanded. Emptying a satisfactory building of two grades and adding them somewhere else without a valid educational reason is a bad investment, Kirk said.

The deadline for submission of applications to the state is June 1. Earl R. Flansburgh & Associates, the architectural firm hired by the town, needs to begin work on the plans by Feb. 15 in order to submit them by the deadline.

will be held Jan. 22 and, assuming a positive vote of two-thirds is garnered, there will be an override vote scheduled for Feb. 10.

At the Town Meeting, tax numbers will be available for citizens to see how the project cost will affect the tax base.

Cohasset will not immediately be reimbursed for 60 percent of the project. There are a number of other cities' and towns' school projects on the state's list which are before Cohasset. Committee members said it may be from two to five years before the state funding kicks in.

The town does have the option of waiting until the state funding begins; however, the money saved in borrowing costs has to be compared with the inflationary costs two to five years up, said committee members.

Superintendent Stephen Hart said next year Cohasset will be short two classrooms at the elementary level. The shortage might be solved by portable classrooms or by moving two grade-three classes up from the Osgood School to the Deer Hill School.

According to projection numbers, Cohasset will need an additional 14 classrooms by the year 2005.

School committee and school facility committee members stressed that the need was not only for additional classroom space. They wanted to make sure the public did not lose sight of the problems at Osgood, including safety and space issues as well as lack of a cafeteria and inadequate handicapped access.

The options not chosen were Option 1, which would cost the town $6.41 million. The state would pay the remainder of the $11.525 million price tag. Broken down, the option consists of renovating the Osgood School for $3 million; renovations to Deer Hill School for $3.2 million and a sewage plant, which may not be necessary, for $210,000.

The state will not fund any work done on the Osgood School because the school falls short of the state's educational standards.

And Option 3, which includes building a new pre-kindergarten to third-grade school for $3.956 million, renovating the Deer Hill School, which would house grades four through seven, for $2.2652 and a possible sewage plant for $210,000. The town would pay $6.4312 million for the project, with the state paying the remainder of the $16.078 million total.

Police use discretion with youths and alcohol

Sometimes arrest is the only option

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Although the legal "drinking" age is 21 in Massachusetts, local police say they exercise their own discretion when dealing with teenagers found with alcohol.

Sgt. Robert Jackson in Cohasset said that officers try to "give kids a break," but sometimes an arrest is the only option.

Similarly, in Hingham, Capt. Joseph McCracken said the officers are allowed a great deal of discretion in handling teenagers with beer or alcohol, and an arrest is the last resort.

"Sometimes, it's the best way to avoid a tragedy," Jackson said.

In most small towns, the police often know the teenagers, Jackson explained. Eighty per cent of the time, an encounter with the officers who confiscate the beer or liquor may be sufficient to avoid further police action.

"They learn their lesson," he said.

In 10 per cent of the cases, the teenagers need to be taken into protective custody or actually arrested to "wake them up," he added.

As for the remainder, Jackson noted, "We spend 90 per cent of our time dealing with 10 per cent of the people."

Jackson supports allowing the police discretion in these matters involving teenagers.

"We're dealing with young people," he said, noting teenagers can make a mistake and never repeat it.

Depending on the circumstances, officers in both towns said they may drive the teenagers to their homes, and explain the situation to the parents. If the teenager is intoxicated or if the parents cannot be located, police may take a youth into protective custody at the police station until the parents can be contacted. Protective custody is not an arrest.

During the "Christmas in the Square" event last Friday in Hingham, police responded to a report of an intoxicated 15-year-old girl. Officers drove her to her home, but when the parents were not there, they took the girl to into protective custody at the police station until the parents could be notified. The girl was vomiting severely, and Hingham fire department emergency medical technicians transported her to South Shore Hospital.

Sometimes police action depends on the age of the teenager; other times the behavior of the youth is a factor.

A younger teenager is more likely to be taken home, while a belligerent teenager stands a greater chance of being arrested, McCracken said, particularly if he has been given "breaks" in the past.

On occasion, officers find parked cars, and a large quantity of beer in a wooded or isolated part of town. But the teenagers have scattered upon the approach of the police car, McCracken said. Hingham police use the license plate numbers to find the addresses and phone numbers of the cars' owners, usually the parents of teens who are using the family car for the evening.

The parents are contacted that their car has been "abandoned" and they are asked to pick it up. This alerts the parents to the suspicious activity and allows them to handle the situation themselves, McCracken said.

While parents are usually very embarrassed when they are contacted by the police, McCracken noted that most appreciate the potential danger of the situation. Few are angry at the police.

If a teenager is arrested, he is "booked" and his name, address, and age is entered into the police log. If the teenager is under 17 years of age, his name can be withheld from the public, but over 17, he is considered an adult, and the name is a matter of public record.

"We're required to put arrests in the log. The log is public information," Jackson said, adding that anyone can look at it, or have a copy of for payment of 50 cents per page.

A person under the age of 17 is not held in the police station lock-up, he said, and is released to his parents' custody. The parents must agree to take their son or daughter to court in response to the arrest.

Hingham police prosecutor Gerard Travers said that a first offense arrest for being a minor in possession of alcohol usually results in a dismissal and payment of $50 court costs.

There are exceptions, he noted. If the juvenile has been arrested for other reasons, then the consequences may be harsher.

Some courts employ a "diversion" or "community service" program for teenagers who have been arrested for alcohol-related offenses.

McCracken said one local teenager was ordered to work a number of hours at the Hingham landfill.

But the belief that the dismissal of charges means the teenager has no record is incorrect.

"They have a record, even if it's dismissed," he said. "It follows them for the rest of their lives. Anytime anyone goes through the criminal justice system, there's a record."

However, if a person is questioned years later, on a job application for example, about a conviction, the truthful answer is no. Travers explained that the record of an arrest remains, even when the charges are dismissed. A juvenile record is sealed by the court, he added. If there are any further arrests, the prosecutor will only know that there is a juvenile record, but not the nature of it.

Volunteers needed at CHS

Cohasset Junior-Senior High School is seeking volunteers to help with cataloguing and typing in the school's library. Anyone interested in donating their time is asked to call Susan McFadd at 383-6100.

Students earn new computers

Cohasset schools are again participating in the Bank of Boston Investment in Education program. Last year through community support, the schools were able to earn a color printer and an Apple Quick Take camera.

Participants are asked to collect investment points issued by the Bank of Boston from now until April 30. Anyone can do this by stopping by any Bank of Boston branch and completing a bonus certificate. There is no obligation. Further details are available at the bank. This year's goal is to accumulate enough points to obtain another color printer.

What to do about youth alcohol abuse

Tone of press reports questioned

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The topic of teen-age drinking by Cohasset school students dominated the first hour of the Dec. 11 meeting of the town health advisory committee. With members of the drug and alcohol committee present at the request of the HAC to discuss future goals for both committees, conversation immediately focused on recent incidents involving local school students as well as area press coverage of the events.

Concern focused on newspaper articles in both The Boston Globe and the Cohasset Mariner. While both committees agreed the publicity served a purpose in bringing to light the problem of teen-age alcohol abuse, the tone of both newspapers' accounts was brought into question.

HAC member Donna O'Donnell stressed that alcohol abuse was only one of a number of risks faced by school students which the committee is concerned about.

Both boards were in agreement that the education of parents towards the behavior of their teen-agers and reaching a common goal to attain that education should be of paramount importance. To this end, a proposed public forum for Cohasset parents will be announced for early in the new year, possibly sometime in February.

Eleanor Waal, speaking for the drug and alcohol committee, said her board felt the recent publicity was very realistic and the biggest obstacle she saw was in the denial attitude adopted by many parents. She added that she believes some parents have literally given control of their children over to the police and the schools as caretakers and babysitters.

Saying he "didn't want to get into the business of sensationalizing for the wrong reasons," Cohasset high school Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill wanted it understood that "kids aren't doing anything they haven't been taught to do." Gill felt that today's media images which bombard youths on a daily basis, plus ambivalent attitudes of parents, are primary factors in the actions of certain school students.

Both committees were unanimous in praise for Police Chief Brian Noonan's get-tough policy concerning underage alcohol consumption.

"Parents have to realize how big the problem is," voiced one parent in attendance.

To the suggestion by another parent of setting down guidelines for adults with regards to eliminating potential risks to teens, Waal stated that parents needed only observe two simple rules to be effective: promise not to serve alcoholic beverages to underage kids and allow no unsupervised parties.

Cohasset high school Health Adviser Angi Walsh told members that her discussions with junior high school students revealed that they are very concerned about the tobacco and alcohol abuse they witness in older siblings every day.

In speaking to this, Gill stated that he feels total education of the dangers of teenage alcohol abuse may still be a generation away. He explained by reason of example the 1964 Surgeon General's report on the dangers of cigarette smoking and the length of time it has taken for widespread acceptance of the report.

The hour concluded with both boards committed to formulating a plan of attack. The concept of a support group for students caught drinking was one suggestion. The idea of bringing these young offenders back into normal school life and not ostracizing them for their actions merited strong support.

Equally, the recognition of those students who are responsible and have shown self-control with regards to alcohol and drugs was agreed upon.

Teen Center is selling Entertainment '96 books

The Cohasset Teen Center is raising funds by selling Entertainment '96 books, which contain hundreds of "two-for-one" and 50 percent off discounts on local fine dining, family dining, fast food, movies, sports activities, special attractions and hotels.

The books cost $30, with a portion of the proceeds benefitting the Cohasset Teen Center. The books will be sold until Dec. 20. To order call Betsy Connolly at 383-1248.

BU holds math field day

More than 900 students from Massachusetts and 20 students from Cohasset High School participated in the fourth annual Mathematics Field Day held at Boston University, sponsored by the Office of the Provost, the department of mathematics and the Science and Mathematics Education Center at the school. Students learned about the latest developments in contemporary mathematics during the event.

The field day featured discussions on chaos, fractals and dynamics, as well as interactive computer demonstrations and videos of intricate graphic images depicting the complexity and harmony of mathematics. Experts in the field led the discussions.

The field day was planned to generate high school students' interest in mathematics, and the demonstrations were intended to expose students to "cutting edge" concepts and get them excited about contemporary mathematics.

Appalachia Service Project of Cohasset receives $600 grant

The American Express Foundation has announced that the Appalachia Service Project of Cohasset has received a $600 grant as one of 150 organizations selected to receive a total of $130,000 from the Volunteer Action Fund. Established in April, 1994, the fund awards grants to eligible organizations in which American Express U.S. employees volunteer on a regular basis.

The grant will be applied towards ASP's costs for supplies this summer when 84 Cohasset high school students and adult advisers work for a week repairing homes for needy families in Appalachia. Rev. Gary Ritts, minister of Second Congregational Church and director of the ASP in Cohasset, said, "Every contribution that is made for the Appalachia Service Project is critical to its existence. The need for this service project, creating safer, drier, warmer shelter for families, is especially important when one considers the unrelenting poverty of Appalachia.

"The review committee, comprised of a cross-section of representatives of all American Express business units, was extremely impressed by the dedication of so many employee volunteers and by the diverse nature of organizations and issues with which they are involved," said Mary Beth Salerno, president of the American Express Foundation. "We are very pleased that the Appalachia Service Project of Cohasset was chosen as one of the organizations to be funded."

Robin Suhrbier, an American Express employee and ASP adviser, said, "I am proud that American Express established this fund to support the organization for which employees volunteer. At American Express, we believe that corporate citizenship has two elements: the behavior of the corporation as an entity and the behavior of individuals within that entity. With the fund, American Express provides as much support as possible to those of us who are involved in our communities."

The Volunteer Action Fund, a program of the American Express Foundation, was instituted to recognize employees who volunteer in their communities.

Christmas gifts sent to families

Cohasset's Appalachia Service Project volunteers sent boxes of Christmas gifts to each of the 12 families in Appalachia whose homes they repaired last summer. Cohasset High School students and their adult advisers gathered Dec. 10 to wrap the gifts and send warm Christmas greetings to all the parents and children.

ASP thanks those who bought ASP's Thanksgiving pies or had their child's photograph taken with Santa at the Village Fair. Proceeds from both activities will benefit ASP's June, 1996 service project.

ASP will prepare Super Subs and Greek salads for Super Bowl Sunday for their next fundraiser. Orders will be taken in January.

Register for classes at SSAC

Registration for winter classes and workshops at the South Shore Art Center will continue through Jan. 7. (The SSAC will be closed Dec. 22 through Jan. 2).

Day and evening classes are offered for all ages and abilities, with a variety of holiday workshops available. Courses include: clay, pottery, watercolor, oil and acrylics, cartooning, calligraphy, photography and darkroom and drawing. School vacation camps are also being offered, along with one- and two-day workshops.

To request a brochure or to register for a class, call 383-ARTS. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. Gift certificates are available for the holidays.

Selectmen query MBTA costs

Will lobby legislature for change in way assessments are levied

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

At the recommendation of the town's MBTA advisory board member, Louis Eaton, selectmen this week voted to support an effort pending in the legislature which would alter the way assessments are levied.

It has long irritated Cohasset officials that although the town receives no direct service, Cohasset is nonetheless required to pay more than $150,000 each year to the MBTA.

Cohasset receives minimal service through "The Ride" commuter bus.

Eaton, told selectmen it is unlikely the legislature will approve changes in the MBTA assessment formula, which heavily favors the 14 communities which receive the most service. These include Boston, Cambridge, Somerville, Brookline, Newton, Arlington and Watertown, whose representatives control the legislature.

"The complexity of the assessment is heavily written to favor the 14 inner communities," Eaton said, adding that anyone expecting change "is whistling up the chimney. It is broke, but they can't fix it."

And although a fare increase is one of the items under consideration by the legislative commission, Eaton said there is absolutely no chance that Boston representatives will support it.

With the restoration of the Greenbush train, Cohasset will receive service.

In response to a question from selectman Peter Pratt, Eaton explained that under the current formula, the town's assessment would not change if the train arrives.

However, he predicted that the assessment area could be extended because commuter rail will soon serve communities now outside the MBTA district, such as Plymouth and Kingston.

At the suggestion of selectman Jane Goedecke, selectmen unanimously supported the following recommendations now under consideration by the legislative commission:

• remove commuter rail assessments from communities within the MBTA districts. Cohasset now pays some $117,000 as part of its T assessment, but receives no commuter rail service.

• take communities which receive no service out of the MBTA district. The T is now reviewing which communities are not being served.

• add a surcharge at T parking lots which would be returned to the host communities to compensate for costs related to the parking facilities.

• increase fares to pay for 42 percent of the T budget, which is the average for the 30 largest urban transport system. Fares currently cover only 33 percent of MBTA costs.

Eaton also pointed out that Gov. William Weld has proposed abolishing the T advisory board and making some of its operations private.

Citizen of the Year nominations are open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual "Citizen of the Year" Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Joseph D. Buckley for, among other contributions, his work behind the scenes helping the town's senior citizens wade through the paper work to access health insurance benefits.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1995 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 29. Please see nomination form on page 11.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1995 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1996.

A message from Ginger....

Thanks to Edward Long our mystery has been solved. Mr. Long was kind enough to call me and give me the names of the floral artists who diligently plant and tend to the two veterans' memorial planters in town that were featured in The Grand Tour, Nov. 9. Our sincere appreciation and gratitude goes to June Hubbard, Patsy Leggat, Mitzy Railsback, Carmen Schramm and Jane Shockman, who tend to the planter at Perry Higginson Johnson Square at the intersection of Beach Street and Atlantic Avenue; and to Mr. and Mrs. David Whipple who care for the Herman E. Daley Square planter at the intersection of Jerusalem Road and N. Main Street.

Once again, thank you for the beauty you give to all of us in Cohasset, and the honor you bestow our veterans.

Again this year, I am willing to be a drop off point for any gifts you may have for homeless veterans. My husband and I will take the items to the shelter. Please call me at 383-2863 for more information; items may be dropped off at One Windy Hill Road.

Concert set for Dec. 17

The Second Congregational Church Choir will present "Sounds of Christmas" Sunday, Dec. 17, at 4 p.m. in the church sanctuary, 43 Highland Ave.

The choir will perform traditional music of the holiday season. The audience will be invited to join in a choral sing-a-long.

A free-will offering will be collected to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry and the Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project.

Author signing at Buttonwood

Richard Brassey, author of "How to Speak Chimpanzee," will sign his book and share his belief that humans can learn to "speak" chimpanzee, at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset Dec. 23 at 10:30 a.m. According to Brassey, chimpanzee is a language of facial expressions and various noises. Call 383-2665 for more information or to order a signed copy.

Consignment shop lists hours

To accommodate holiday shoppers from South Shore towns, volunteers will staff the newly enlarged Cohasset Consignment Shop, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza, Sunday, Dec. 16, from noon to 4:30 p.m.

The shop will be open its regular hours, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday, including Dec. 23. It will be closed from Dec. 25 through Dec. 31 and will reopen January 2.

Manager Andy Merrill said there is a wide selection of "gently worn" fur coats, ski jackets, hand-knit gloves, ski gloves, wool men's and women's sweaters, holiday dresses, tweed jackets and suits, as well as jewelry, glass and silver bowls, trays and stuffed animals.

Proceeds from the shop benefit the Social Service League Counseling Services, Meals on Wheels, a Keep Well Program, the New Friends Visitors Program, services for seniors and referral assistance for South Shore residents. For further information about the League, call 383-0771, or call 383-0687 to volunteer at the consignment shop.

Babysitting course offered

Those who successfully complete the 10-hour course will receive a Red Cross certificate. Training will include: emergency actions, supervising children, accident prevention and basic care of children. The cost is $25.

To register, call 770-2600 or visit the Quincy office of the Red Cross. The deadline is Dec. 23.

New classes at the Center

The South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., is offering several classes and activities during December.

Adult Computer Classes with one-on-one training are available.

The center also hosts Birthday Parties featuring a child's favorite activity, including crafts, bowling and gymnastics. Parents provide cake and snacks. Parties must be booked in advance.

On-going pre-school computer, gymnastics and craft classes are held Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9 to 11:30 a.m. ($150/members, $160/non-members).

Registration for Session II Dance Classes is being accepted. The cost for the 10-week program is $67.50 for members ($77.50/non-members). Offerings include creative movement, creative dance, Grove Group, ballet, jazz, tap, street dance and modern dance.

Holiday Fun for children ages 3-5, Dec. 18-21 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., will feature holiday crafts, cooking and singing. The cost is $18 for the first day. Each additional day is $15. Children should bring lunch and a snack. Pre-registration is required.

Newcomers' fun offered

In addition to Newcomers Club monthly meetings and special parties the club offers members a variety of social activities including book, bridge, gourmet dinner, Sip 'n' Stitch, lunch bunch and tot's play groups.

All new residents of Scituate and Cohasset or residents experiencing a change in life style are invited to join.

Greenbush rail advisory group plugs along

Coastal Coalition wants seat at table

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

As the restoration of rail service to Greenbush moves closer to reality, the citizens' group studying environmental effects of the project expects to take another look at a tunnel under Hingham Square.

A meeting held last week in Braintree, members of the Citizens' Advisory Committee, CAC, reorganized and agreed to examine ways to reduce the impact rail service will have on the areas is passes through.

A tunnel under the densely settled and heavily traveled Hingham Square business district is likely to be at the top of the list of mitigating factors under consideration.

Hingham selectmen earlier this year approved the train provided a tunnel were built. However, after Hingham town meeting voted to oppose the railroad altogether, selectmen voted against the train.

"Rail on the surface is the worst possible choice," said Katherine Reardon, chairman of Hingham selectman, who attended last week's meeting.

"A tunnel is better than rail on the surface, but a tunnel is a poor second choice to no train," she stated.

The MBTA estimates that a tunnel might add another $60 million to the cost of the $215 million project.

In a 32-page report studying transportation alternatives to the Greenbush corridor, which was passed out at the meeting, the MBTA agreed that Hingham Square will be the area most affected by the train.

"Tunneling under Hingham Square would alleviate the impact of train operations, but only in this immediate area," the report stated.

In its conclusion, the document reported that a tunnel one or two miles long would provide "increased levels of avoidance of sensitive areas, but at increasing greater capital costs."

In addition, a tunnel would reduce the number of grade crossings along the rail line, eliminating from five to all eight of the crossings planned for Hingham Square, depending on the tunnel's length.

Despite Gov. William Weld's recent endorsement of the Greenbush project, the battle over the train continued during the nearly three-hour long meeting.

The anti-train Coastal Coalition may receive a seat on the organization. Members agreed that it would be up to Trudy Coxe, secretary of environmental affairs, who convened the committee, to determine which groups or communities are entitled to representation.

'We are supposed to be non-partisan.'

—Selectman Martha Gjesteby.

However, members also stressed that the CAC was not created to propose alternatives to the train, but rather to ensure that environmental issues have been adequately considered by policy makers. The advisory group is expected to report its findings to Coxe.

A final environmental impact report is likely to be issued this summer and the CAC will likely comment on that.

Construction on the line is not expected to start until sometime in 1997.

Some members of the CAC appeared concerned that the presence of the vocal Coastal Coalition could alter the way the committee operates.

"We are supposed to be non-partisan," said Martha Gjesteby, a Cohasset selectman who has spent ten years on the CAC.

Terry Fancher, general manager of the pro-train South Shore Chamber of Commerce was elected chairman of the CAC, while Alexander Macmillan, chairman of the Hingham Historical Commission, was elected vice chairman of the CAC.

MacMillan favors a tunnel under Hingham Square.

Fancher and Macmillan had been co-chairmen of the CAC since the resignation of Scituate selectman Joseph Norton last February. The CAC has not met since February.

Norton has since decided to remain on the committee, but was not at the meeting.

There are at least two other openings on the CAC and there was some discussion about who should fill these.

Jan Reitsma, assistant environmental affairs secretary, told the group that the selectmen in the communities with vacancies would be contacted about making replacements.

In response to criticism from some members that the MBTA may not be consulting with the CAC about decisions, Andrew Brennan, manager of environmental affairs, said the CAC is welcome to meet as often as members feel the need.

He pledged that MBTA officials will be on hand at every meeting to answer questions and support the process.

"It's not my job to call CAC meetings," he stated. "But the T will come and answer questions."

Brennan also said that the MBTA does not have to present every aspect of the project for CAC discussion. He said that much of the work does not involve the environmental impacts.

He spoke in response to concerns of some CAC members said they were disturbed to read about MBTA action on Greenbush which the committee was unaware of.

One committee member agreed with Brennan, pointing out that they are to advise Coxe, not the MBTA.

Brennan also said that the decision to pay for the project entirely with state, rather than using some federal money, was not designed to circumvent federal environmental review.

He said the state review closely follows the federal. The financial decision would allow the project to proceed more quickly and not wait for federal funding approval.

In addition, federal money would be freed up for use on other transportation projects.

The committee's next meeting is Jan. 24.

Hardwick's 35 leads Skippers to season-opening win

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers began this season Tuesday night, triumphing over the Norwell Clippers 72-63. Senior forward Jared Hardwick led the squad, pouring in 25 points by halftime and finishing with 35. While Cohasset only has two players returning from last year's varsity, the team played well, kicking off the season with a win at home.

Cohasset's Ryan Bishop won the tip and Hardwick posted his first two less than 10 seconds into the game, slashing to the hole and scoring. Bishop, a 6-foot 8-inch junior center, took the pass from Burke Davis, but was fouled. Bishop nailed a free throw and, on the next possession, Hardwick drove and scored again.

Paul-Michael Quintin, a sophomore guard, picked up his first varsity points by knocking down a three-pointer. Quintin would go on to score 18 points. Davis hit Hardwick with a nice pass and he picked up his sixth point. Norwell freshman Nick Hajjar, also playing in his first varsity game, hit a jumper after Quintin blew by his defender for another bucket.

Hardwick's dish to Bishop made the score 11-6. Then, the Skippers went into a bit of a dry spell, which lasted until Hardwick pulled up and sunk a three of his own. He then netted two free throws, making the score 19-15 in Cohasset's favor. Senior point guard Fred Howard stole the ball and coasted in for the breakaway layup. Clipper guard Bill Lynch, who would finish with 23 points, also hit a three, pulling Norwell to within three points, 21-18.

Junior forward Brian Kilroy answered by tearing down an offensive board and putting it back up for two points. Cohasset fell behind 24-23 but Hardwick's four free throws put them ahead to stay. Jared's scoring rampage continued, as he took the assist from Howard to the hoop, getting the lay-up and the free throw. Hardwick would pop two more three-pointers before halftime and pick up another layup as well. Quintin also hit another trey and Cohasset led 43-34.

The second half began with a defensive struggle as neither team seemed to be able to score. However, the Skippers did have a nice fastbreak

Reynolds' night to shine

Gymnast's huge meet seals win over Carver

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The Cohasset High gymnastics team not only showed why it has won the past two South Shore League titles in Monday night's easy 120.8 — 98.85 but also, through the performance of one gymnast, gave fans a peek at what can be accomplished with a tunnelvision-like determination.

Kristen Reynolds set a personal best with her first-place finish on the balance beam (8.0) and led one of two sweeps by taking the vault (7.75). Jodi Colwill finished second followed by Tara Hettstrom in third (7.50).

Erica Hettstrom was Cohasset's other big winner, taking the all-around (30.40) and leading sister Tara (8.20) and Lauren Genovese (7.7) with her 8.25 showing. Erica was also second to Reynolds on the beam at 7.95. Jodi Colwill placed third (7.65)

Tara Hettstrom and Colwill were both exceptional on the uneven bars. Hettstrom wound up with the win (7.45) and Colwill set a personal best (7.15) in nailing down second.

But on a night where the Skippers reached the 120-point mark four meets earlier than last season against Scituate, it was Reynolds who stole the show.

"Both judges raved about her," said head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni. "The judges couldn't believe how much she has improved.

"Kristen took gymnastics over the summer and was in the gym twice a week when she came back (to school in Sept.)."

Reynolds looked a different gymnast as she worked her way through the events. Ardizzoni said she has smoothed out her technique and is more graceful than last season.

> 'The judges couldn't believe how much she has improved.'

"Kristen has developed grace and poise," Ardizzoni said. "She has got some great poise. The judges used to really kill her on execution."

Ardizzoni was pleased with the score and believes it is good, psychologically, heading into Thursday night's meet against a tough Hanover squad.

"I'm kind of happy they scored in the 120s," Ardizzoni said. "Now Hanover may not think we're as good as we are. We were pushing for a 122. I think on their best night they can score from 125 to 127."

Seahawks well represented with local talent

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

(Editor's Note: This article was not run in its entirety in last week's issue)

With 60 to 70 players in the league, the South Shore Seahawks have a good-sized contingent from Cohasset playing hockey from late August right on up to the playoffs in April.

Squirt B coach John Durkin has been involved in the league, which includes Marshfield, Norwell, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate, for the past five years. Durkin says the number of Cohasset players in the 300- to 400-player organization is strong, especially when one considers the size of the town.

"There are enough kids where Cohasset could have a program of its own," Durkin said.

The local players on his squad include his son, John, Henry Roth, Matt Corry, Barry Tufts and John Dwyer.

The kids, Durkin says, not only get their fill of hockey for nearly a year, but also improve their skills through clinics, powerskating sessions and regularly scheduled practices.

"They get better every year," Durkin said. "Their skills are developed in powerskating and practice. They can get into a game and never touch the puck."

A Learn to Skate program, sponsored by the Seahawks, gets under way on Thursday at the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke. The program, designed for 3 and 4 year olds, gives kids interested in youth hockey the ins and outs of the most fundamental area of the game.

From there the kids move on to the office. It's really not much of a sacrifice. At least I can feel my legs."

Ritts seriously injured his right knee playing hockey and football in high school. He sustained cartilage damage and underwent reconstructive surgery in May of 1991.

But as frustrated as he was about the injury, Ritts can't begin to comprehend what Roy must be going through.

"There's no comparison," Ritts said. "I just can't imagine how devastating that would be. It was his dream come true playing hockey."

Roy's accident reaffirmed to Ritts that the masks on hockey helmets should be replaced with face shields. The shields, he explained, would make players use their protective reflexes more, thus, keeping their heads up.

"I heard a report that there hadn't been any of these injuries until masks were implemented," Ritts said.

When asked what he would say to Roy if the pair ever had the chance to meet, Ritts admitted he wasn't entirely sure.

"It's hard to think what I'd say to him," Ritts said. "I just hope he pulls out of this. I really don't know. He just has to hang in there and fight this thing out."

Ritts doesn't admit to have the perfect advice for Roy, but who would? Ritts' actions in helping the fallen player speak louder than any words ever could.

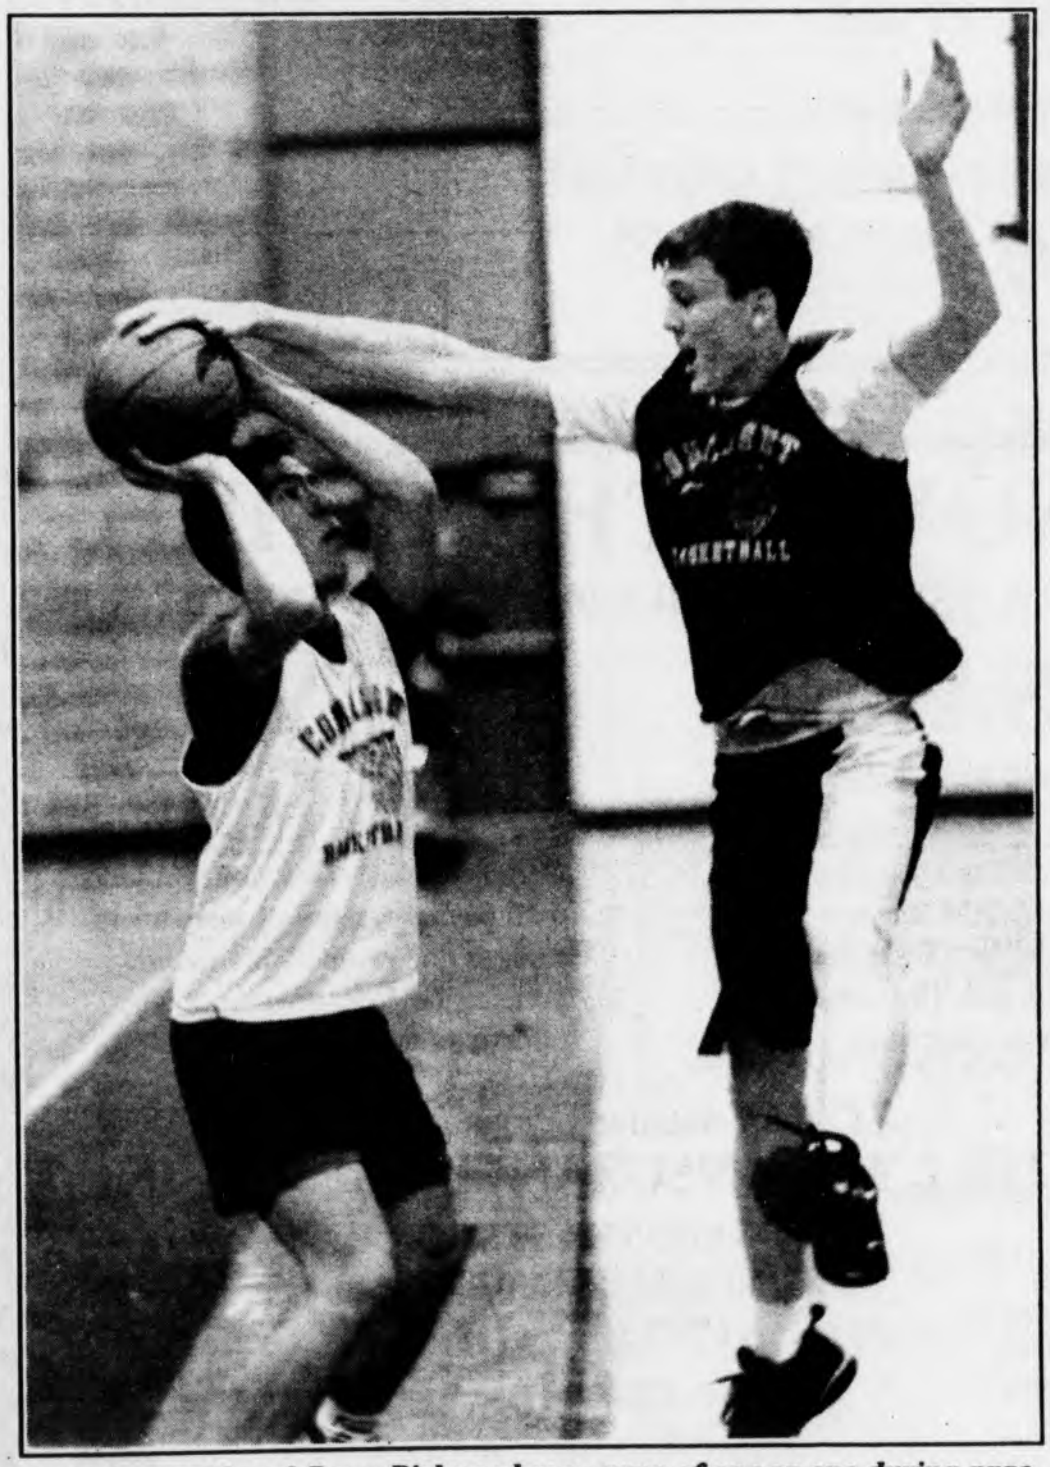
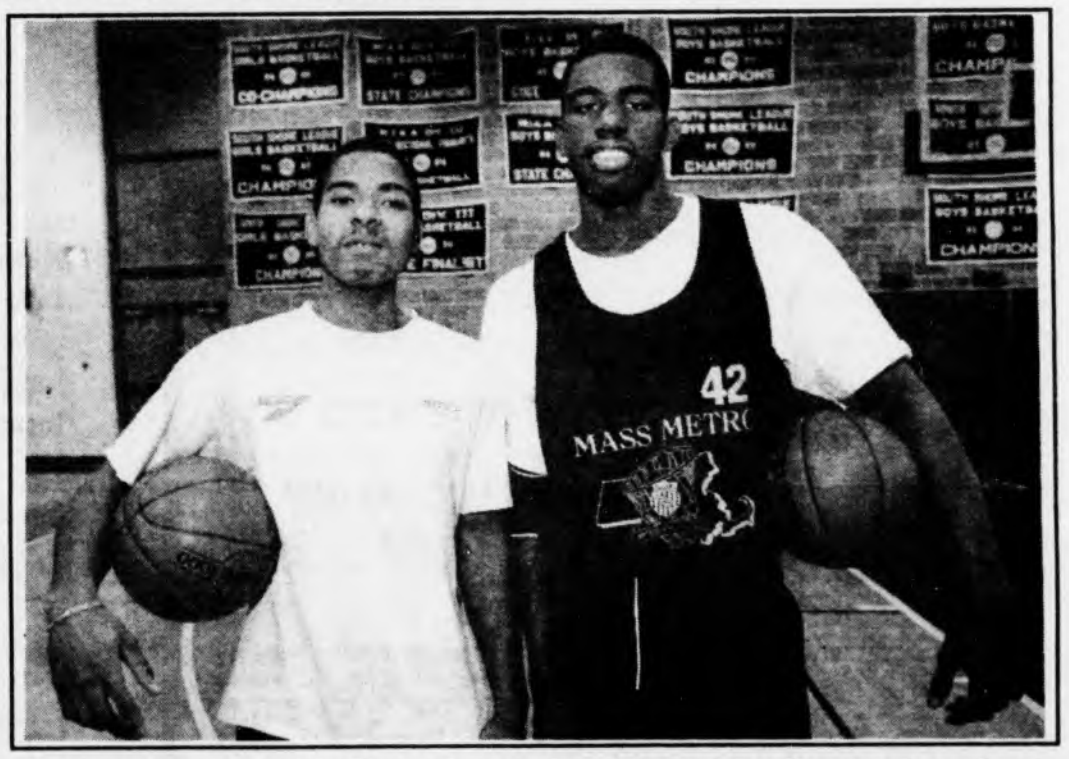
Hoopsters set for title run

The Cohasset High basketball team includes: (Front) Burke Davis, Jared Harwick, Ryan Bishop, John Williams and Frederick Howard.

Cohasset High basketball coaches Mike Cohen, Ron Ford and Mark Hall prepare for a Skipper practice.



Lutz Grunwald and Ryan Bishop play a game of one-on-one during practice.



Co-Captains Frederick Howard and Jared Harwick will play be roles in Cohasset's run for another South Shore League title.

Instructional League (5-6 year olds), Mites (7-8 year olds), Squirts (9-10 year olds), Pee Wees (11-12 year olds), Bantams (13-14 year olds) and Midgets (15-17 year olds).

Each level is divided into A, B and C squads. C teams automatically reach the playoffs while A and B clubs must qualify based on their records.

Several players are on high school squads once they reach the Bantam division and have even more games than the Seahawks' 28-game season, which doesn't include the playoffs.

Although many of the players are on the rink year-round, they still find the time to play other sports. On Durkin's team alone, four players were members of the Cohasset/Scituate football squad. Others compete on soccer and baseball teams.

"You're changing uniforms in the car," Durkin said in describing just how tight many of the players' schedules are.

Hockey boosters seek support

Dear Friends of Cohasset Hockey:

Thanskgiving and fall sports are behind us and the Cohasset High School hockey team is already practicing for the coming season.

Coach Dennis Walsh, whose tenure as Cohasset's hockey coach spans almost 20 years, is particularly optimistic about this year's team. There are ten lettermen returning, including last year's co-captains, Nevin Bunstein and Pat Reynolds.

The Cohasset Hockey Boosters support our players with an annual team dinner and attendance at a college hockey tournament game. We also provide trophies for outstanding performances by individual players and gift watches for the seniors on the team.

The Hockey Boosters are again asking for the support of local businesses, professionals and individuals to help us pay for these items.

We and the players would appreciate any amount you can contribute. Please make your check payable to Cohasset Hockey Boosters and mail it to Cohasset Hockey Boosters, P.O. Box 853, Cohasset 02025. Your contribution is tax deductible. The names of all contributors will be acknowledged in the Cohasset Mariner, unless otherwise requested.

We also invite you to support the team by attending home games at the Pilgrim Rink in Hingham.

Thanks very much for your help.

Sincerely,
Dick Bunstein
Bob Riley

when Bishop blocked a Norwell shot with authority. Quintin picked up the remains and tossed it to Davis, who laid it in for two points. Hardwick drove the lane for two more and Quintin swished two free throws, putting the Skippers up 49-38.

Quintin's three pointer, coupled with Howard's layup, helped keep the visitors at bay. Bishop had a nice play when he hit the layup and the ensuing foul shot. Howard rejected his first victim of the night, which led to a pair of free throws netted by Bishop.

Howard drove baseline and pulled up to swish the jumper. Hardwick knocked down two from the charity stripe, making it 63-50. Davis hit Paul-Michael with a nice pass and Quintin capitalized. Jared hit four more free throws, upping the score to 68-56. Davis and Quintin each nailed a foul shot and Quintin took a nice pass from Bishop after a strong rebound by Hardwick. Howard picked up his second rejection of the evening and Norwell's Matt Lewis, who picked up 20 points, banked one at the buzzer to make the final score 72-63, in Cohasset's favor.

Coach Ron Ford was impressed by his squad after its opener. "We had a good start," Ford said, "but we have a long way to go.

"We're a young, inexperienced team, and that showed a little bit in the second half. But we're moving in the right direction, we made our free throws and I think we played well.

"Jared Hardwick, in particular, played an excellent game. He showed leadership, he had an unbelievable first half; he dominated every facet of that basketball game."

Hardwick seemed less impressed by his own play, but stressed the team's strong performance.

"It was definitely a good way for us to start the season," he said. "I thought we played really well for a team with only two returning varsity players. We will only get better."

Cohasset will travel to East Bridgewater Friday to take on the Vikings. Off to a 1-0 start, the Skippers are looking for another strong game.

Hoop shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting registration applications for a basketball shooting clinic for girls and boys, grades four through eight.

Head Cohasset basketball coaches Ron Ford and Cori Hughes will co-direct this three-day clinic to be held Tuesday, Dec. 26, through Thursday, Dec. 28.

Shooting clinic will be held at the Sullivan Gym, CHS, from 9 a.m to noon. The fee is $60.

The three day program is designed to help younger players develop correct fundamentals involved with shooting the basketball. Students will receive individual instruction, attend lectures and participate in shooting competitions.

To register, please complete forms available at the Cohasset Recreation Office, first floor, town hall.

COMMUNITY SERVICE AT C.H.S. /Ron Ford

As you are preparing for the holiday season, there are a few projects that our students at CHS have been working on that we would like you to know about and that may help bring out the spirit of giving in all of us.

Thanksgiving at the Cohasset Food Pantry

I would like to thank Cohasset seniors Nevin Bunstein, Toby Horn and Jared Hardwick for volunteering their time at the Cohasset Food Pantry, located at First Congregational Church on the day before Thanksgiving. The young men carried boxes of food and turkeys to the cars of those whom the food pantry helps. We would also like to thank Margie Steele, who does a great job of running the show at the food pantry.

C.V.S. notes, by Jane Flaherty (Grade 10)

All the members of C.V.S. would like to thank everyone who contributed to the annual Thanksgiving Food Drive. We delivered a record three carloads of food to teh Wellspring food drive in Hull. The folks over at Wellspring wanted us to let everyone know how much they appreciate the support of Cohasset.

Twenty-three students from Cohasset High School attended the Team Harmony II "A World of Difference" conference at the Fleet Center Nov. 28. CHS students joined 10,000 other young people from all over Massachusetts to pledge to end all forms of racism. Several schools received awards for the efforts to create an environment that encourages diversity.

Currently C.V.S. is conducting a toy drive for the Toys for Tots program. The toys collected will be delivered to the South Weymouth Naval Air Station Friday, Dec. 15. We appreciate the support of students and their families. If anyone would like to make a contribution, contact Mrs. Duffy at CHS (383-6103) or drop it off this Thursday or Friday.

Holiday concerts planned

The Deer Hill School fifth- and sixth-grade concert choir, under the direction of music teacher Jack MacInnis, will perform at Faneuil Hall Marketplace in Boston Friday, Dec. 15, inside the upper rotunda at noon.

The Deer Hill Winter Concert will take place Thursday, Dec. 14, at 7 p.m. at the high school.

On Tuesday, Dec. 19, the Osgood School Holiday Concert will begin at 9 a.m.

The Cohasset Junior/Senior High School Holiday Concert will be held Tuesday, Dec. 19, at 7:30 p.m.

Student art is exhibited

Cohasset public school students are presenting a special art exhibit, "Cohasset Faces," in conjunction with this year's holiday concerts. The showing is a collaboration between the three public schools in Cohasset, featuring nearly 500 self-portraits by students in grades kindergarten through 12. The art will be on display in the high school.

The show is hung at the entrance to the theater and can be viewed throughout the new year. The public is invited to view the work during regular school hours or on the evenings of the concerts.

Hire a student!

The Social Service League of Cohasset has compiled a list of Cohasset High School students who are ready, willing and able to do odd jobs around residents' homes, including yard clean up, snow shoveling, pet sitting, plant watering, babysitting and car care. To obtain the names and phone numbers of these helpful students, call 383-0771.

Go to college and get a break

Massachusetts college students who study certain majors at out-of-state public colleges could be eligible for tuition reductions under the Regional Student Program. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray encouraged students attending public colleges and universities in the New England area to look into the program.

According to the New England Board of Higher Education, the average student participating in the program this year is saving $3,800 on tuition.

Students in majors such as health systems, ocean engineering and tourism are among those eligible.

Students can also get a copy by writing to the New England Board of Higher Education, 45 Temple Place, Boston, 02111.

Aquaknot wins design award

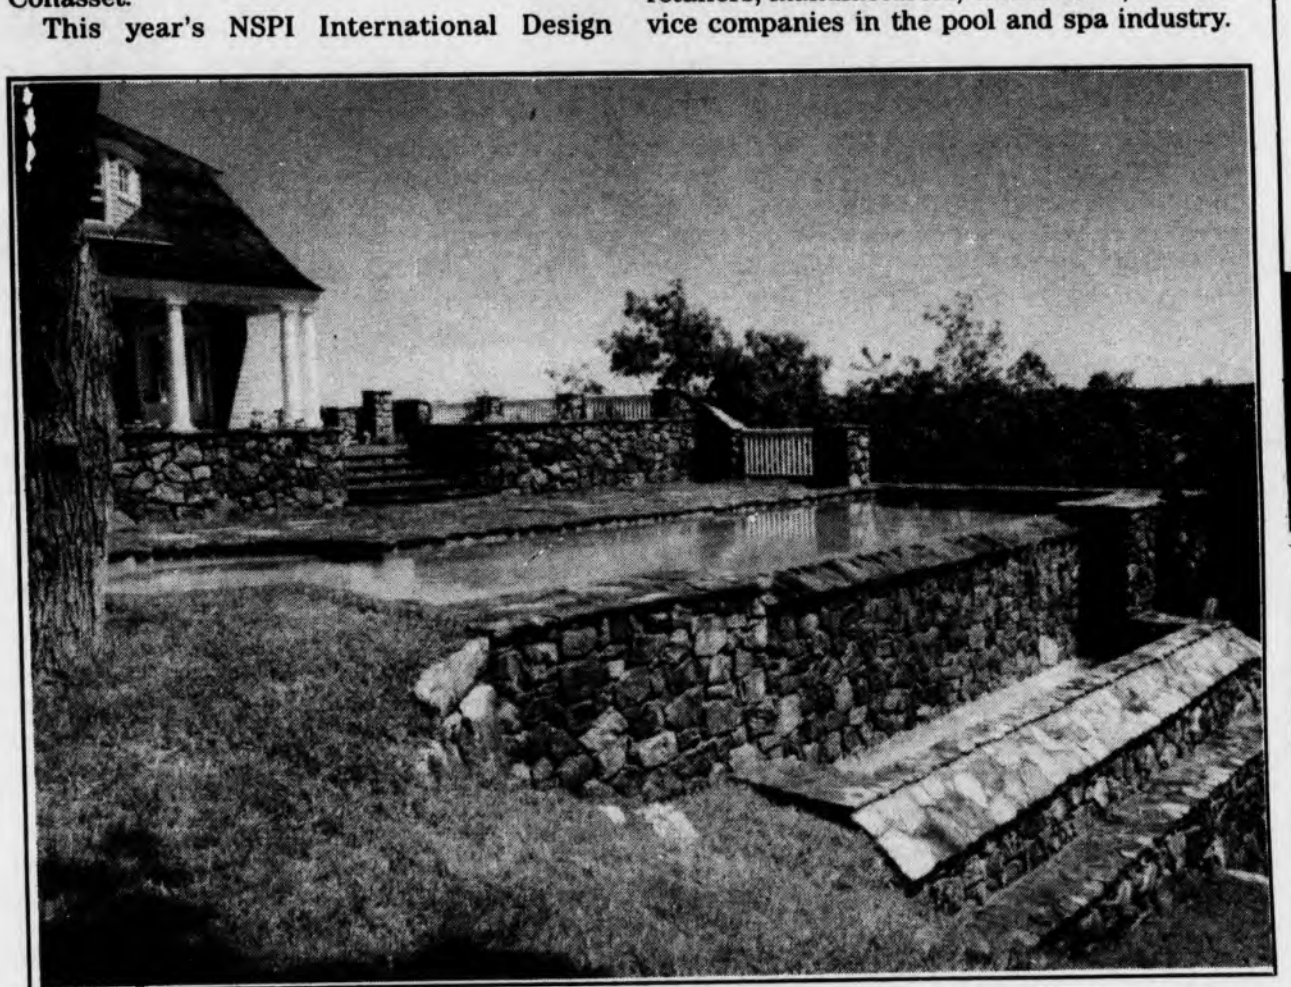
Aquaknot Pools, Weymouth, has won a bronze medal in the 1995 International Design Awards Competition sponsored by the National Spa and Pool Institute.

Aquaknot Pools won in the category of "Traditional Residential Concrete Pools 600 square feet/less".

Awards were presented at a ceremony during NSPI's International Expo in Atlanta, Oct. 18-20. The prize-winning pool was built in Cohasset.

This year's NSPI International Design Awards Competition featured 712 entries from all regions of the United States as well as six different countries around the world competing in 52 categories. Winners were determined by a panel of 11 judges, made up of pool and spa industry professionals and representatives from related fields.

The National Spa and Pool Institute is an international trade association in Alexandria, Va., representing more than 5,000 builders, retailers, manufacturers, distributors, and service companies in the pool and spa industry.



Aquaknot Pools of Weymouth won a bronze medal in the 1995 International Design Awards Competition for this Cohasset pool.

Cohasset seniors catch the holiday spirit

At annual lunch with Santa at Kimball's

At the annual Cohasset Elder Affairs luncheon, seniors perform the 12 days of Christmas with Santa at Kimball's by the Sea.

Jean Bailey gets excited about her gift from Santa.

Al Odermatt (and wife, Marion) applaud the band.

Nancy O'Toole sings 'Jingle Bells.'

Margaret Carey and Kathy Bryanton welcome Cohasset senior citizens to the annual party sponsored by Cohasset Elder Affairs (formerly called the Council on Aging).

Senior Scene

What's happening at the Council on Elder Affairs

The Council of Elder Affairs, 3 North Main St., has announced its storm policy. In the event of inclement weather, it may be necessary to take the senior van off the road. As in the past, Senior Center closings will be given over WJDA radio. When schools are closed, all rides, classes and activities at the center will be canceled.

A Caregivers Support Group meets on the second Friday of each month at the Senior Center CEA from 10 a.m. to noon. The purpose of the meeting is to provide support, information and education for individuals caring for family members. The next meeting is Friday, Dec. 8.

The group is led by Marla Kaplan of the Hingham Visiting Nurse Association. For further information, call the center.

Woodworking classes for seniors are held at Cohasset High School, with instructor Ray Thompson, Mondays at 2:30 p.m. (note change of time). The fee for the classes is $40.

Senior Computer Classes are also being offered. Spreadsheets and word processing are included in the lessons.

A new Book Discussion Group is meeting on Mondays at 10 a.m. with Sandra Kent.

Medical access program available

The Medical Access Program focuses on last-resort and out-of-town medical transportation. The Council of Elder Affairs has been working to develop a comprehensive program of transportation for clients who have scheduled medical appointments out of town and have no other means of getting to their apartments.

By combining a variety of available services, their goal has been nearly met, but there are still needs. Contributions may be made to the MAP to help defray the cost of these trips.

Both ambulatory and disabled Cohasset seniors are eligible for the service. Participants must be 60 years of age or older. Transportation is in a specialized medical van and is available Monday through Friday from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m

The suggested donation per trip is $15. Checks should be made payable to: Cohasset Elder Affairs, 3 North Main St., Cohasset 02025.

You'd Better Watch Out!

Services for seniors are listed

SERVICES FOR SENIORS JOB REGISTRY: Services for Seniors is a job registry that maintains a list of private pay workers offering in-home support services to seniors. Workers' names are provided free of charge to elders or family members caring for elders at home. Rates are directly negotiable by the client with the workers. Workers include homemakers, home health aides, and private duty nurses. Their services include assistance with personal care, meal preparation, light housekeeping, companionship and/or respite care. To learn more about the program, call 383-9116.

VISION FOUNDATION INC.: Are you experiencing problems with your vision that make it difficult for you to read your mail, cook your meals, or perform other tasks? If so, a rehabilitation teacher from Vision Foundation can visit with you to help you make the most of your usable sight. This help is for seniors 60 years or older. Vision Foundation is a nonprofit United Way Agency. For further information please call 1-926-4232.

FOR YOUR INFORMATION: The Council on Aging provides transportation to the Senior Center for lunch Tuesdays and Thursdays. A hot, nutritious meal will be served to senior citizens for a donation of $1.50. Lunch reservations must be made before noon the preceding day. Those in need of transportation should notify the Center. To make lunch reservations, call the center at 383-9112.

Volunteers are needed to help in the kitchen on Thursdays. If you can spare a few hours, please call 383-9112.

FOR YOUR INFORMATION: The Homestead Exemption for those under 65 years of age and not disabled is $125,000. For anyone over 65 or disabled, it is $200,000. If you want to learn more about this act, please call the Council on Aging at 383-9116.

HEALTH CARE PROXY FORMS:

These forms are also available at the center. A Health Care Proxy is a legally recognized document which allows you to appoint someone you trust to make medical treatment decisions for you if you lose the ability to decide for yourself. There are many interesting points to this law, so call Kathy Glenzel at 383-9116.

November was quiet, chief says

In his monthly status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said November was quiet compared to the past few months.

"There were a total of 12 arrests: eight for minors in possession of alcohol, two for operating under the influence, one for possession of a Class D substance (illegal drug), and one for motor vehicle violations," he reported. Police also took two individuals in protective custody.

Noonan said two "breaking and enterings" were reported during the month, one at a residence and one at a business.

In November, the emergency dispatch center received 111 E-911 calls. Two dispatchers received one week of training on a range of issues from basic telephone communications to dispatch techniques and radio communications.

During the month, PALS officer Lisa Matos attended a four-day workshop on teen dating and domestic violence produced by the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council, Noonan said. PALS is a cooperative education program between the police and Cohasset schools.

"The program involves the use of a curriculum for teaching adolescents about domestic violence," he explained. "The sessions were developed through the Dating Violence Intervention Project. The DVIP is a collaboration of Transition House (a battered women's shelter) and EMERGE, a male batterer's counseling program.

"DVIP also provided her with selected readings about domestic violence and officer's guide to classroom instruction on these issues," Noonan said.

Public Notice

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS THE TRIAL COURT PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT
Norfolk Division
Docket No. 152658
NOTICE OF FIDUCIARY'S ACCOUNT

To all persons interested in the estate of Alice K. Prescott Low late of Cohasset, Ma. in the County of Norfolk.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the 27th through 34th account(s) of State Street Bank and Trust Company as Trustee – (the fiduciary) of the will of said deceased for the benefit of Seth Low and others have been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account(s), you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the 10th day of January, 1996, the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account(s). If you desire to object to any item of said account(s), you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this 28th day of November, 1995.

Use of Cohasset lawyer as new town counsel argued for Former town counsel Louis Eaton, urged selectmen Monday night to pick a local attorney, as opposed to a law firm, to handle the town's legal business.

Current counsel Richard Henderson has said he will step down once a replacement is found.

Eaton, who appeared to discuss the MBTA (see story), briefly told selectmen that a local lawyer will likely do a better job.

"I feel strongly that the town is best served by having a local attorney who is available and responsible," he stated.

Eaton was town counsel in 1955 while Fred Thayer was ill. After Thayer stepped down, a committee searched for an attorney living and practicing in Cohasset.

Eaton said there were 23 lawyers then living in town, but only three practiced here. Blake Thaxter, who served for some 20 years, was one of the three, according to Eaton.

"He (Thaxter) did a very fine job," Eaton said.

Meanwhile, selectmen are moving swiftly in their legal search.

Cohasset will run an ad in the January issue of The Beacon, the publication of the Mass. Municipal Association, inviting interested lawyers or law firms to obtain the request for proposal, RFP, which spells out in detail what the town is looking for.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said the RFP must be returned by Jan. 25. At which time selectmen will pick finalists to consider for the job.

Goedecke and selectman Merle Brown are serving on the legal search subcommittee.

In other business, selectmen paid a legal bill of $2,371.90 from Henderson.

Cohasset is primed for snowy nor'easter

Emergency services are ready for storm

'It's nature. There's nothing you can do about it.'

— Police Sgt. David Pomerico.

By CHARLENE VANDINI
The Cohasset Mariner

Anyone dreaming of a White Christmas is sure to see that dream come true as a major nor'easter plowed into the region late Tuesday.

Cohasset Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling reported that by 7 a.m. Wednesday, the weather station in nearby Hingham had recorded about 7 inches of snow – 4-1/2 inches had fallen by midnight. Temperatures on the South Shore warmed up to 35 degrees at about 2 a.m., allowing for some rain to mix in and keeping snow accumulations along the coast down overnight, Skilling said.

By 7:30 a.m. Wednesday temperatures dropped to 27 degrees allowing another change over to snow. Forecasters predicted that the snow would continue throughout yesterday evening (Wednesday) and into this morning (Thursday, Dec. 21) along the South Shore, with shifts in winds off the ocean bringing several more inches of snow to coastal communities.

At 10 a.m. Wednesday, Police Sgt. Robert Jackson reported there were "no disasters."

"There was localized flooding in the usual areas and some cars went off the road into snow banks," he said.

Jackson noted, however, that the storm wasn't over and Cohasset was prepared for the worst.

Highway department road crews worked throughout the night, plowing snow that accumulated at a rate of more than 1-1/2 inches per hour. Roadways were in good condition Wednesday morning thanks to the change over to rain and continual plowing and sanding.

Shortly after midnight, Police Sgt. David Pomerico reported no accidents and noted that the streets were free of private cars, which made snow plowing operations easier.

"It's nature," he said of the snow. "There's nothing you can do about it."

By 11 p.m. Tuesday, School Supt. Stephen Hart issued the "no school" announcement for Wednesday which was broadcast on Boston television stations.

For the second time in less than a week, Cohasset residents faced another snow-shovelling exercise, and all this before the official start of winter on Friday, Dec. 22.

Weather forecasters predicted up to 18 inches of snow, eclipsing the total snowfall of last winter. Snow flurries, reportedly unrelated to the storm,

Drama mess is booed

While they have usually given rave reviews to the plays being presented in the town hall auditorium, selectmen Monday night did not applaud upon learning that the most recent production has left the place a shambles.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon showed the board a letter he sent to the Cohasset Drama Club following the recent presentation of the "A Christmas Carol."

He said the area was messy following the production.

"For some of their plays they have young people," Doyon said.

Selectmen added that children need supervision and said they hoped the club will respond to his letter so the situation can be discussed further.

"The place was a disaster," said selectman chairman Merle Brown who inspected the auditorium and the bathrooms.

He said someone used a hole cutter, leaving a pile of tiny papers all over the auditorium floor, while the bathrooms were "a disastrous mess."

Gate plans proceed

Town administrator Gregory Doyon said during this week's selectman's meeting that the request for proposals for the repair of the James Meadow tidal gates is nearing completion.

He said a limited number of engineering firms will be asked to submit bids on the project.

Some residents have blamed the poor condition of the tidal gates for the recent flooding of Summer St. homes.

Exhaust bill okay'ed

Selectmen Monday night agreed to pay the final installment, $2,900, for the exhaust removal system at the fire station. The project cost about $29,000.

Financing is reviewed

School officials postponed their meeting with selectmen this week in order to develop a plan to finance the construction of a new school. (See related article.) Town administrator Gregory Doyon explained that the department has received some new financial information.

CHL meeting sought

Noting that Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) has received authorization from the state to operate in a larger area, selectman chairman Merle Brown said Monday night that the town must meet with state authorities to complain.

He suggested a meeting between selectmen and Trudy Coxe, secretary of environmental affairs.

Brown said the letters sent by the town's legal counsel and officials appear to have been ignored.

He urged the landfill's authorization to proceed should be held up until the questions about the facility's impact on wetlands can be resolved.

"The wetlands has to be stressed," agreed selectman Martha Gjesteby.

She also stated that no one from the state came and looked at the area.

After spending so many hours in Boston meetings, "they should at least have a little field trip," to view the wetlands, Gjesteby stated.

The board of health is also sending comments to the state.

This Was Cohasset's Bank for 100 Years!

Now, It Is Again!

We've been helping South Shore residents with their banking needs since 1834. As of Monday, December 11, 1995, we have a new home in Cohasset. We're located at 13 Elm Street in Cohasset Village, the site of the former Cohasset Savings Bank.

If you step inside, you'll see that extensive renovations have restored this building to its original character and charm; you'll find friendly, helpful people and personal service. This is the kind of service you just don't get from those big regional banks.

You'll also find a 24-hour ATM and a night depository.

If you step inside soon, you'll find out about our free offer for stadium blankets and canvas tote bags for qualified depositors.

As a locally owned and managed community bank, it's our goal to provide you with quality financial products and superior service. Your deposits help us provide loans for families and businesses right here in Cohasset.

Emergency services are ready for whatever filled air Tuesday afternoon, giving way to serious snowfall around 8 p.m.

For Cohasset, the snow accumulation was only part of the story, as residents faced a seasonal high tide exacerbated by the storm.

"We can take the snow," said Police Chief Brian Noonan. "You push it out of the way, you pile it up. It's the tides that worry us. The scary part is that it's a coastal storm."

Veteran lobsterman Herbert Jason said that with the moon, sun, and earth in alignment, the highest tides occur at this time of year, causing a "spring tide." With the storm's high on-shore winds during the Wednesday morning high tide, lobstermen and fishermen were worried about damage to their boats and equipment.

Cohasset civil defense director Arthur Lehr said some streets near the harbor and yacht club have been flooded during past storms, and could be under water when the tide comes in Wednesday morning around 9 o'clock.

National Guard trucks were on stand-by, and would be called in if needed for evacuations, Lehr said.

Lothrop Lane, Atlantic Avenue, Sandy Cove, Margin Street, and Bow Street at Jerusalem Road are all at risk of coastal flooding, according to Noonan.

"We expect them to be impassable," he said, adding that highway department crews are prepared with barricades to close the areas to traffic. He explained that those roads could not be closed earlier, as a precaution, because the markers were likely to be buried in the snow.

One additional police officer and a second dispatcher were called to duty by the police to handle any additional calls, he added.

Other than these precautions, Noonan said he had "stocked up on an extra bottle of Tylenol" to prepare for the storm.

Earlier in the day on Tuesday, the Massachusetts Bay Chapter of the American Red Cross announced it would open a regional emergency shelter at Cohasset High School, to serve evacuees from Cohasset, Scituate, and Hull. Along with a shelter at Revere High School, only two Red Cross shelters were designated in the state.

Lehr also said that Nelson Pratt was in contact by short wave radio with regional emergency management officials in Bridgewater and Framingham. If telephone communications are lost either by downed wired or over-burdened circuits, Cohasset can remain in contact through the radio.

Lehr and Noonan both said they had urged the Bible study to meet

It may be America's largest Protestant faith, but without a local congregation, the Baptist Church has hardly thrived in Cohasset in recent years.

The Rev. Robert Hurlbut hopes to change that.

He told selectman this week that he has been leading a new Baptist congregation, the Cohasset Community Church, since September.

There are three people in the Bible study group, which currently meets in a member's house. Rev. Hurlbut said they need a more public place to attract new members and requested a town hall location.

Town administrator Gregory Doyon recommended the first floor meeting room since the elevator will be turned off on weekends. The group will have to contact the police station to be let in.

The group will meet Friday from 7 to 8 p.m., starting Jan. 5.

The fee for the room will be $15.

Selectman Jane Goedecke suggested reviewing the arrangement in two months.

Alterations approved

During their meeting Monday night, selectmen gave the go ahead for Cohasset Plaza Liquors to be remodeled.

Manager Linda Berthold explained that because Papa Gino's is moving in next door, the liquor store will shrink to 3,625 square feet, from the current 4,165 square feet. In addition, a third exit will be created.

The store is owned by 380 Corporation, Donald Staszko, president, doing business as Cohasset Plaza Liquors.

school cancellation announcement earlier in the day on Tuesday, but Supt. Hart said he wanted to wait until evening.

"It's hard to call off school until the snow really starts," he said Tuesday afternoon, noting that the cancellation of Wednesday classes was a virtual certainty. At that time, he said he would notify Boston radio and television stations of the school closings in time for the late news reports.

Hart noted that waiting until 4 a.m. Wednesday could be a problem if telephone service is interrupted. Several Boston media stations have installed computerized telephone systems to handle school and other cancellations.

Cohasset businesses reported brisk sales as residents flocked to stores to stock up on essential supplies.

Area supermarkets were jammed with shoppers buying bread, milk, and cold cuts.

Phil Rose at Cohasset Hardware said there was heavy demand for snow shovels, ice-melting crystals, flashlights, and batteries.

Joe Gagne at Curtis Liquors said he had been busy all day, as his customers prepared for the storm. He pointed to the legendary Blizzard of 1978, when people were stranded in their homes for several days. Since that time, "it's like this every time we get a storm."

After snowstorms last Thursday that produced six inches of snow, followed by an additional two inches on Saturday, Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said the town's supply of 300 tons of sand-salt mix was depleted. In preparation of Tuesday's storm, Litchfield said his workers spent Monday hauling in more sand.

Some of his crew logged between 25 and 30 hours in overtime during those earlier storms, amounts that could be doubled by the time the nor'easter moves out late Wednesday.

"All I know is we've spent a lot of money," he said when asked the status of the snow removal budget.

Cohasset annually sets aside $45,000 for snow removal. When that amount is exhausted, the highway department is allowed to use deficit spending until the selectmen and advisory committee transfer funds into the account.

During the record-breaking winter of 1993-4, when 95 inches of snow fell, Cohasset spent $100,000 for snow removal. Conversely, last year, the department returned $5,000 to the town, when only 17 inches of snow fell during the season.

The Maree Family reunion celebrated at Kimball's

A Maree Family reunion was held Nov. 25 in the Presidential Suite at Kimball's By The Sea, hosted by Jessie Maree Moorehead of Sonoma, Calif.

The honored guests were Ed and Mary Maree and daughter, Linda, from Pembroke; their son, Dr. Terry Maree, his wife Ginny and their daughters Holly and Amy from Norwell; Betty Maree from Cohasset, her son Bob, his wife Dorrie and daughters Tracey and Kerri Ann from East Bridgewater; and daughter Ann Wheeler, her son Richie and daughter, Kerri from Scituate.

After the cocktail hour a delicious dinner was served and it was enjoyed by all! Imagine the tons of family memories that were shared!

There will certainly be a lot of Joy in the Porter household this Christmas, there is a brand new baby girl to help celebrate the festivities! Faith Elizabeth Porter is her name, and she was born Nov. 17 at 8:56 a.m. (she weighed 6 lbs. 12 ozs).

Faith's mom and dad are Sarah and Jim Porter of South Main Street, and she also has two big brothers, Nathan Riley Porter and Ian Matthew Porter. Her maternal grandparents are Carla and Thomas Borstel of Naples, Fla.; her grandparents (paternal) from Cohasset are Jane Porter and Roger Porter.

Have a wonderful holiday season, hope Santa is good to all of you!

Derby Academy sends us word that the honors lists for the first term of the 1995-96 academic year, and we have lots of Cohasset students to be proud of. Achieving Headmaster's List status were Charles Anderson, Kristen Deane, Kara Gaughen, Corinna Noering; second honors went to Carl Dean, Michael Fallon, Ashley Mihos, Carter Noon, Elliot Noon, Morgan Pierson, Kate Schroeder, Jamie Simons, and Wiley Wakeman. Congratulations to all of you!

Notre Dame Academy also sent their honor roll list, and here it is: Principal's List, Julie Cataleno, First Honors, Sally Hamill, second honors, Lauren Campbell, Jennifer Cellucci and Julie Smith.

While you are busy writing your last-minute cards, be sure to send a get well card to Shirley Laidlaw, one of the nicest, kindest people we know! Mrs. Laidlaw fell down last week and wound up shattering her kneecap, a very painful ordeal indeed! She is at South Shore Hospital, where she will have to remain for the holidays, so a card would be so nice!

Nina Belsan, director of the South Shore Community Center, and Ed Albert, manager of Stop & Shop Video get their picture taken with Santa during a business/community partnership event Dec. 9 & 10. Stop & Shop Video provided the place for children to have their photos taken with Santa and Konica Quality Photo donated the film and processing, all proceeds benefitted the Community Center. For all the latest business news, see page 25.

Shirley does have reason to celebrate though, and her name is Kayla Marie Dockendorff, her great-granddaughter. Kayla was born to Kelli (McAulliffe) and David Dockendorff Dec. 12 and weighed 9 pounds! She joins her brother, David, who will certainly be a big help to his mom! And, her Auntie Jen is so excited, she will undoubtedly spoil the daylights out of her!

Good news, Frank Wheelwright is home so Santa can visit him there instead of having to fly to South Shore Hospital. His goal for the New Year is to stay real healthy!

There is a real treat in store for us on Christmas Eve this year, something that you cannot miss! From Route 3A to Bound Brook Lane, all of the neighbors have decided to have luminaries lighting up the way! They will light them at five o'clock, with 25 homes participating. It promises to be a beautiful sight (especially with all of the snow as a backdrop). If it rains, it will be held Christmas night.

Last Saturday there was a ceremony at the Veteran's Memorial Park, in the harbor. They raised a Veteran's Flag for the late Ralph L. Smith of Beach Street; he was a member of the Massachusetts Maritime Academy. The ceremony was said to be a nice one, and our hearts go out to his friends and family.

Simeon Ketchum, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Ketchum and a student at Salisbury School (CT) earned a first honors average (85+) in the first trimester. Simeon is a senior.

During this season of love and joy, be sure to remember Scott Sandblom who passed away in California last week.

Scott was a wonderful guy – he always smiled that handsome grin at you, he was a star athlete and a stellar human being. His thoughts and deeds were always with the other guy, and most of us can relate some story about a deed or action that he took a great deal of pride in doing. He was handsome, smart, a good brother and a wonderful husband and dad — Scott was a source of pride for his parents and everyone who knew him.

Our hearts go out to the Sandblom family, now and forever.

Four-wheel drive(rs)

The months between spring and the start of the next winter season are enough for just about all of us to forget our winter driving skills.

But just like riding a bike, we don't forget completely and with a little practice, should be up to speed again.

As this winter begins and with several storms under our belts, by now we should all be driving more cautiously when the flakes begin to fly.

But there are drivers in Bronchos, Blazers and other four-wheel drive vehicles that think they own the road no matter what the conditions are. In fact, it seems to us that those drivers, showing off their extra traction, actually speed up and tailgate more in snow and ice.

This week Police Sgt. Robert Jackson pointed out that it takes four-wheel drive vehicles just as long to stop as any other car. Slipping and sliding apparently don't discriminate.

Unfortunately these drivers aren't just endangering themselves and their passengers but those in other cars as well.

We've found that few experiences are more frightening than trying to focus on staying on the road when four-wheel drive vehicles, headlights glaring into your car, put the pressure on with intimidating closeness and speed.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we wish everyone happy and safe holidays.

And we implore all drivers to be careful and considerate of others on the road. There can be nothing so pressing or so important as to risk life and limb to save a few minutes.

So slow down, you know who you are...or you may get (or inflict on others) the kind of traction you hadn't bargained for.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Christmas wish list

From the family and friends of 'PJ'

To the Editor:

Christmases past have been traditions of family gatherings and celebrations with friends and loved ones. This year the holiday season started early for us with the gathering of family and friends in Henniker, N.H. However, it's been one of pain, sorrow, loneliness and heartache. Our gathering is not complete. PJ is missing.

During the past few weeks, our family, friends and community, along with concerned and caring people who have never met PJ, have been on an emotional roller coaster ride. The love and support is overwhelmingly appreciated by those of us who are close to PJ. The unexplained disappearance of PJ has touched the hearts of many. He is a son, a brother, a teammate, a fellow student, a friend and a missing child.

Christmas is a time for giving and receiving. If there could be but one wish for this holiday season, it would be for PJ's safe return home. If that is not a possibility, information regarding his disappearance would be extremely helpful.

We would like to extend our heartfelt thanks and gratitude for all you have given us, be it a kind word, a warm hug, a helping hand, or an idea we may not have had. If we could for a moment, ask of you one more wish, it would be this. If anyone has the tiniest piece of information, however small or insignificant it may seem, please find it in your heart to call The Missing Children's Center at 1-800-999-9024.

Please help us make our wish come true. We hope your holidays are filled with tradition, family, love and peace.

PJ is a very important part of our lives. We will not give up hope!

Next selectmen's meeting is Jan. 8

With Jane Goedecke and Martha Gjesteby attired in festive shades of holiday red, (Goedecke sported a blood red jacket over a black sweater and Gjesteby wore a cherry red dress trimmed with black velvet,) selectmen concluded their final meeting of the year Monday night in good spirits and in near record time, finishing around 10 p.m.

Selectman chairman Merle Brown concluded the meeting by wishing everyone Merry Christmas.

Selectmen Peter Pratt and Michael Sullivan were absent. Pratt had to work late, while Sullivan was reportedly watching his children sing in a school Christmas concert.

The next meeting will be Monday, Jan. 8 at 7:30 p.m. at their office on the second floor of town hall.

A Christmas dream that came true 50 years ago

By JOEL PRATT
Special to the Mariner

I turned seven in March, 1945. It was wartime – an exciting time for a seven-year-old boy. I had models and pictures of planes, read war comics and listened to adults talking about it. In May, the war in Europe ended but my Pratt soldier and sailor uncles didn't come home.

One day in June, we were marched from the Ripley Road school to the Cohasset common to see a display of Army weapons. Wow! Was that exciting! There were tanks and Jeeps, big artillery pieces and trucks and army men dressed in combat clothing. I especially remember a winged remote-controlled bomb on a flatbed and a Jeep with a bazooka rocket launcher mounted on it. We had never seen rockets.

Then, in August, World War II ended. Once again, we went to the common. It seemed that the whole town was there. Cars circled the green, tooting their horns. People laughed and shouted and sang. My father (Pop to me and everyone else, young or old) brought three of his muzzle loaders down. Kids of all ages lined up to shoot them in the air. The older ones held the guns by themselves: Pop helped the younger ones. He loaded just powder and wadding – no bullets – they made a satisfying bang and no one could be hurt. Pop's face and hands were black with powder smudges when he came home.

BY CHRISTMAS most rationing had ended. Sugar was freely available without ration coupons, so an unaccustomed abundance of Christmas cakes and cookies appeared. Some things didn't change so quickly. It took time for factories to convert from war production, so bikes and trikes and sleds were in short supply. And so was the one thing I craved above all else – an A.C. Gilbert Erector Set. During the war Gilbert manufactured aircraft parts. Any Erector Sets that had been on store shelves at the start of the war had long since vanished. But the war was over and a kid could hope and dream, couldn't he?

Before Christmases and birthdays, kids' fantasies bloom and multiply: I was no exception. I longed for a rich uncle and daydreamed visions of him giving me all the things a kid could want – but mostly an Erector Set. A BIG one. A number 10 1/2 with the electric motor, whistle, little lighted building and electromagnet. Even though none were available, we knew that they had existed once. Some big kids had them. Old Sears catalogs and Gilbert's ads in prewar comics and magazines conveyed encyclopedic knowledge of the treasures which, thanks to the war, were not part of the experience of a seven-year-old in 1945.

As there were no rich uncles on either side of the family, I had only one hope left – Santa Claus. By the age of seven, my belief in Santa was shaky. Ever since I had been old enough to hold a telephone, Santa (in the person of my uncle Warren Pratt) had called a few days before each Christmas to be sure his list included my requests. I was pretty sure it was Warren, but hey! It couldn't hurt to play along! Again and again Mother and Pop assured me that Santa would do his best, but the big present I really wanted was not likely to appear.

SOMETHING ELSE had happened in 1945: New neighbors moved into the house next door. When we had moved into 41 Stevens Lane in November, 1941, the Edwards lived at 35. Their youngest son was just my age: Jared Edwards and I were best friends. They left the following year and the O'Malleys moved in. The five O'Malley kids included Owen – my age – and Charles – a year younger. Our fun together was amplified by Mr. O'Malley, who loved to entertain kids. He took us for rides in his Ford convertible and – wonder of wonders – had a movie projector and cartoons with sound! But then the O'Malleys moved away.

Boys still wore knickers back in 1945 as shown in this Christmas picture of Joel, 7-1/2, and his sister, Cindy, 11.

My sister and I watched anxiously as the moving vans arrived and the next owner of 35 Stevens Lane moved in. The Eatons looked old. And it was quickly evident that there were no Eaton children – just dogs. But we soon learned that they liked kids. I became the Eaton's Sunday paperboy. Every Sunday I would trudge down to the old Cohasset News store on Main Street between 7 and 8 a.m. to collect our Boston Herald and the Eaton's two papers – the Herald and the New York Times. Mr. Eaton would give me money to buy the following week's papers plus 11 cents for my efforts: 10 cents for delivering the paper and a penny "tax." They had a live-in handyman and gardener, an old Irishman named David Matheson. I loved to talk to David and play with the Golden Retrievers, Tuffy and Mike. The Eatons proved to be kindly neighbors. Just how kindly, I was soon to find out.

Christmas morning finally arrived – it always does, though to seven-year-olds it feels like it will never come. There was no Erector Set in sight under the tree. One large box was propped against the wall behind the tree, but it looked like Pop's annual gift to mother – a dress box hastily wrapped in white tissue paper without ribbons or card. Pop always waited until all the other presents had been opened before giving his to Mom, so I assumed this was for her.

POP PLAYED Santa and handed out the presents. Finally only the big box remained. As Pop reached to pull it out, it fell with a clank and a rattling noise. This was no dress box! He told me I could open it. The paper came off easily, and there was a red metal box. An Erector Set Box! A Number 9 1/2 Erector set with electric motor, whistle and electro-magnet. Before I could play with it, I was dispatched next door to the Eaton's to thank them for the most impossibly wonderful miracle of my young life.

Later on Christmas day the family gathered at Grandmother's house on Ripley Road. Uncles Burt and Jesse Lee had returned from the war and this was their first home-cooked Christmas dinner in years. Eddie was still in the Pacific and John was in California. So we did it all over again the following summer when all were back.

Years later, Mr. Eaton (whom everyone except me called Chuck: He asked me to call him 'Coach') would regale his friends with the story of how he had gotten the last new Erector Set on earth that Christmas. He was a stockbroker and often dealt with executives of various companies. In this way he had met and become friendly with the president of A. C. Gilbert. Months before Christmas, Chuck had called him to ask how he could get an Erector Set. The answer was, "You can't – we haven't made any for years." Chuck persisted, but the answer was the same each time he called. Just before Christmas, Chuck had a meeting at A. C. Gilbert in New York. When he arrived, there sat his friend the president with an Erector Set on his desk! The company had retained just one for a lobby display on the company's products – and now Chuck had it.

His persistence had paid off, but now he had to get it home to Cohasset from New York. It wasn't wrapped – so it was very obvious what it was. Checking it as baggage wouldn't work: It would never arrive at the other end. So he checked his suitcase and carried the Erector Set on the train with him. The other passengers kidded him for playing with toys – some even offered money – lots of money – to buy it. He didn't dare leave it alone, so it sat by his side on the seat and at dinner time, he took it to the dining car with him!

AT CHRISTMAS in 1973, when my oldest son was seven, I gave him and his younger brother Erector Sets of their own. I told them how I had been the only kid in the entire United States of America to get an Erector Set for Christmas in 1945. Then I gave them my old one too.

The old red Erector Set box is in my attic now: It is dented and scratched and many of the pieces it once held are missing. When I look at it, I am reminded of our wonderful neighbors on Stevens Lane. Years later I learned that Chuck and Charlotte Eaton had helped many Cohasset young people with college costs and in other ways. But for me they had made a Christmas dream come true.

Health board seeks more office clerical help

Title V adds to work load

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

After a lengthy discussion Monday night, selectmen agreed to postpone action on the board of health budget request in order to review the board's operations.

The department is requesting $40,947, an increase over the $26,797 currently.

Health board chairman Thomas Cook explained that the increase is due to testing of the landfill, after it has been closed.

The review was called for because the new DPW department, set to come on line next year, will take over operation of the transfer station.

Cook told selectmen that the state's stringent Title V regulations, governing septic systems (which have been a source of controversy since their inception last spring) and other health issues require an increase in secretarial help in the office.

The department has not had a full-time secretary since Carol Oteri-Puffer took a leave of absence due to illness several months ago.

Cook said that to reduce the back log of work, the health board wants a secretary to work an additional four hours each week. Currently, the position works 35 hours, including attendance at a night health board meeting every other week.

The employee traditionally left early on another day to compensate for the meeting.

Cook wants the employee to work 35 hours, plus a meeting,. something the advisory committee opposes on the grounds that the new town hall secretarial pool should be able to provide people to fill in.

Robert Davenport, another health board member, said it is inappropriate to have an employee simply take messages in the health office since public health issues are often being handled.

Selectman Chairman Merle Brown pointed out that the town hall will eventually be getting a voice mail system, which might make things easier.

Doyon said the conservation and building inspector's offices also close periodically because clerical help worked at night.

Civilian dispatcher budget is on hold

Selectmen agreed Monday night to discuss the budget for the civilian dispatcher when all selectmen (two were absent) can be present.

In presenting the budget, town administrator Gregory Doyon suggested a change in the scheduling for dispatchers, requiring them to work four days and have two days off, as the police and fire departments do now.

Doyon said the change would mean hiring an additional full-time dispatcher, for a total of four and relying less on part-time people.

He said full-time employees tend to become more involved with their jobs.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby didn't like the change, saying that the dispatcher system was supposed to save money, not cost more.

"I don't think there are problems (with the current system,)" she stated. "I've had no complaints."

Selectman Jane Goedecke said that although she has no opinion on the proposal, the fact that the committee overseeing the dispatchers recommended a change is not bad.

"The purpose of the committee is to manage and the fact that they're proposing a change" is not necessarily negative," Goedecke said.

Wondering what to give for the holidays this year?

If Santa needs a little help, may we suggest sending a gift subscription to everyone on your shopping list. Your friends will thank you all year long.

Inspect home valuations

The fiscal 1996 Real Estate Assessed Valuations have been completed and have been submitted for certification by the Massachusetts Department of Revenue.

The new values are available for public inspection at the Assessor's Office, Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., during regular business hours. Due to staffing limitations, telephone inquiries about valuations will not be accepted.

Additional copies of the value listings are available for inspection at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 106 South Main St. Any problems regarding valuation will be handled through the abatement process. Call the Assessor's Office staff for more information at 383-9900.

Elder budget jumps, most departments up slightly

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Various town department heads seem to be following the fiscal warning sounded last year by selectmen and the advisory committee: keep spending increases to the essential.

The department of elder affairs presented a budget request with an 8.5 percent increase, explaining that director Kathleen Bryanton will be increased to 40 hours from the current 35. Bryanton routinely works between 45 and 50 hours a week.

The total budget request is $63,096, up from $58,105 currently.

In addition, the department has seven part-time employees, six of whom are paid through grants, and some 150 volunteers.

Selectmen agreed that Bryanton is a valuable employee.

"She's really done a lot of work," Merle Brown, selectman chairman said.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said, "We have a lot of 35-hour employees who do an awful lot of work."

Martha Gjesteby, selectman, agreed, adding that volunteers also make a valuable contribution to the town.

Selectmen Monday night approved the highway department budget of $297,166, up from the $284,877 of the current fiscal year.

Highway surveyor Harold Litchfield explained that the increase is partly the result of cost of living increases for employees and price increases of supplies and for consolidating the new DPW. An additional ten hours of clerical help will be needed.

Litchfield also requested certain capital expenditures, including a new welder and a copy machine.

A sand spreader will be considered at the special fall town meeting instead.

Town administrator Gregory Doyon will look into the possibility that one of the current town hall copy machines, which is due to be replaced, could be used at the DPW office, which will not have as great a volume as town hall.

Peter Laugelle presented a budget for the tree, park and cemetery department with a one per cent increase for $159,483.

The discussion of the budgets included a general discussion of the consolidation to the new DPW.

The unemployment budget will hold steady at $5,000.

Fund-raising effort nets truckloads of toys for tots

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

At 81, Herbert Jason is as excited about toys and Christmas as those 1/10 his age.

Along with his grandsons, Greg and Jonathan Small, Jason has been hard at work again this season playing Santa Claus.

Although he doesn't wear a red suit and sit in a shopping mall – he does work the crowd at Bradlees in Hingham where he raises money for the U.S. Marine Reserves' "Toys for Tots" program, which is in its 48th year.

This year, the Smalls and Jason raised $3230 through donation cans in coffee shops in area towns and by asking Bradlees patrons for contributions at the door.

Thanks to a 10 percent discount at Bradlees where they shopped, the men were able to pack two truckloads of new toys for the program which helps needy families. The toys were delivered this week to the Marine Corps warehouse at the old Naval Annex in South Boston.

"The Marines handle the distribution end of it," Jason explained.

Jason's and Jon Small's involvement started a decade ago through an "old car" club they belonged to. A Marine reservist in the club got them involved, Jon Small recalled. This is the fourth year, the men, who are truck enthusiasts, have conducted the program through the South Shore Truckers.

"We start around Thanksgiving," Jason explained about their fund-raising effort.

All toys donated to the Toys for Tots program must be new ones. Jason explained that the Marines won't accept used toys because some donated items aren't in good repair.

Register for classes at SSAC

Registration for winter classes and workshops at the South Shore Art Center will continue through Jan. 7. (The SSAC will be closed Dec. 22 through Jan. 2).

Day and evening classes are offered for all ages and abilities, with a variety of holiday workshops available. Courses include: clay, pottery, watercolor, oil and acrylics, cartooning, calligraphy, photography and darkroom and drawing. School vacation camps are also being offered, along with one- and two-day workshops.

To request a brochure or to register for a class, call 383-ARTS. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. Gift certificates are available for the holidays.

Youngsters showing talent on the mats

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Motivation has not been a problem for the Cohasset High wrestling team this season. If you aren't convinced, all you need to do is take a look at what Adam Sasso did in his 215-pound match in the Skippers' 42–34 win over Canton to see Cohasset's grapplers are all business when they strap on the head gear and walk on the mats.

Sasso's match would ultimately decide which squad would come away with the victory. For much of the time he was wrestling, it looked as though Sasso wasn't going to leave any room for doubt, building an 11-4 lead.

But with 50 seconds left his Bulldog opponent pulled off a reverse and Sasso found himself on his back fighting off a pin, both teams shouting encouragement to their respective wrestlers.

In the end it was Sasso who proved to be too tenacious for his Canton opponent. The clock wound down, giving him the 15-9 win, and the Skippers', their first victory of the season.

"He did a good job building the lead and a great job fighting off the pin," said Cohasset head coach Torin Sweeney of Sasso's gritty performance.

"I don't have to push them. They're very motivated."

The Skippers had a number of strong outings from his grapplers in the Canton meet before splitting a tri meet against Lynnfield and Braintree. Cohasset dropped Lynnfield, 48-29, but wound up on the short end of a 44-31 decision against the 45-man Braintree squad, leaving the Skippers 2-1 on the season.

Cohasset won three of the final four bouts to ice the Canton meet.

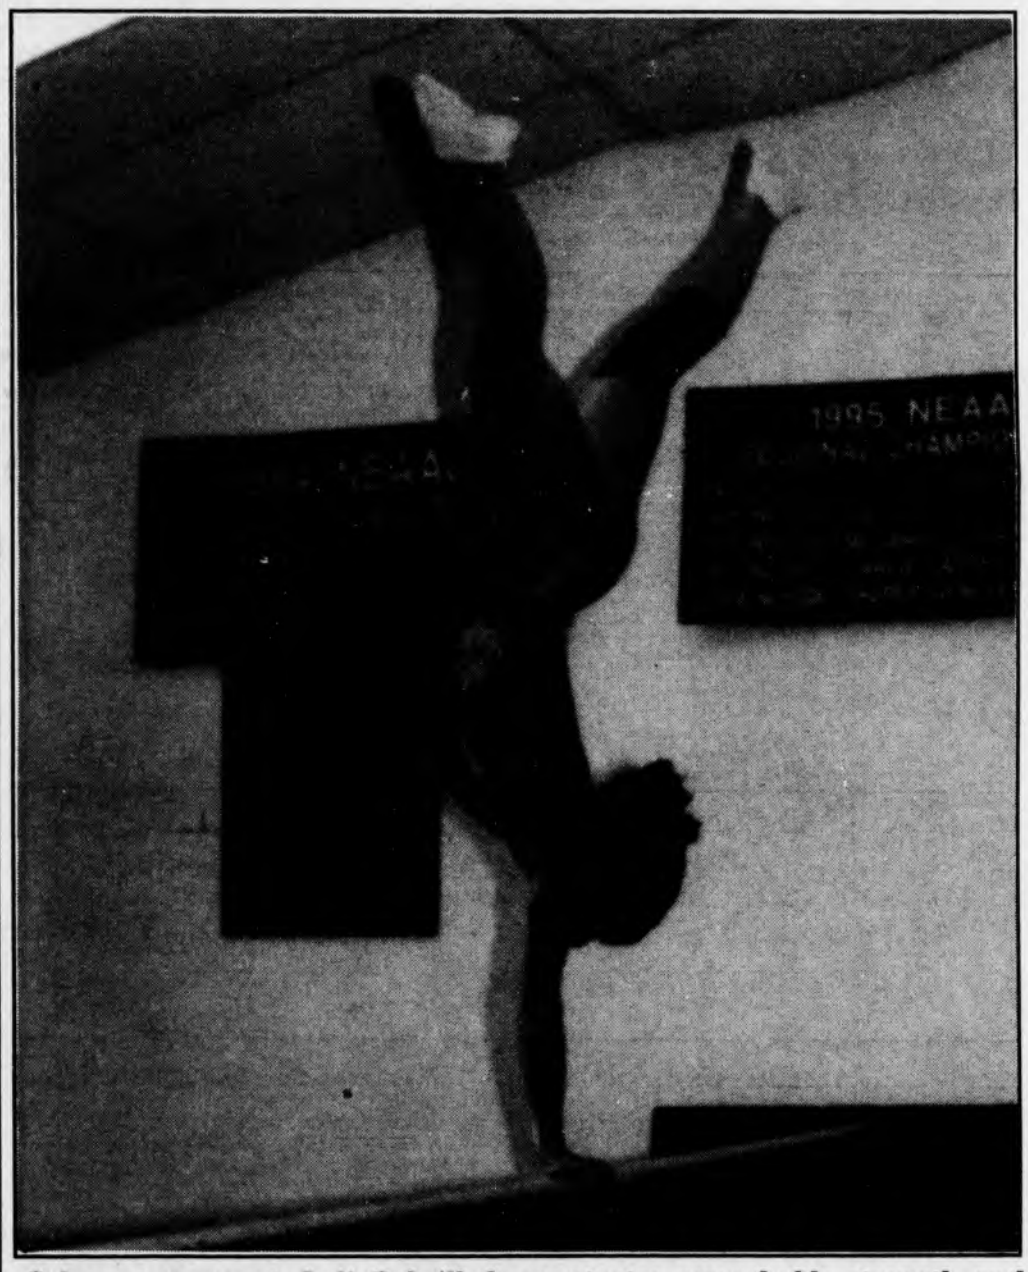
Gymnasts know the score



Cohasset gymnast Jodi Colwill demonstrates remarkable strength and balance as she performs a one arm handstand on the balance beam during a Skipper workout. Colwill finished second on the beam and set a personal best of 7.2 with a third-place finish on the bars in Cohasset's 124.2 – 102.8 victory over Norwell.

Meet total puts Cohasset among SSL's elite squad

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

It's scary to think what the Cohasset High gymnastics team could accomplish heading into a meet razor-sharp.

Last Thursday the girls' practice was wiped out because of snow. Then several of the crew accidentally missed a weekend workout when the usual day was changed.

That left Ruthann Ardizzoni's squad stale and lethargic heading into Monday's South Shore League meet against Norwell.

Yeah, right.

The Skippers did a classic imitation of the Romanian Olympic team, scoring a season-high 124.2 points and getting an electrifying 31.9 All-Around score from Erica Hettstrom to remain undefeated on the season with a 124.2 – 102.8 win.

"I was really shocked at how we did," said Ardizzoni. "I was really pleased with the girls' performances. I hope we can go in Thursday and not be intimidated by Scituate.

"The Scituate and Hanover meets will be really close."

The score should give the Skippers a huge boost heading into their meets against Scituate and Hanover. Scituate edged the Indians by less than a point in their Monday night meet.

Cohasset's total was 3 – 1/2 points higher than in its season opener. The squad hit a season-high of 125 last winter and didn't break the 120 barrier until the fourth meet of the year.

The Clippers proved to be no match for Cohasset as the Skippers swept every event except the All-Around, where Norwell netted a third-place finish behind Erica and Tara Hettstrom. Tara finished with a solid 30.6 score.

The Skippers' biggest improvement came on the Beam where they finished two-points higher in the event than in their previous win over Norton. Erica nailed an 8.45 in what Ardizzoni called, "a beautiful beam routine." Jodi Colwill and Tafana Fiore tied for second with an 8.2 score. Up-and-coming Kristen Reynolds' 7.9 garnered the third slot.

Reynolds' 8.0 led Colwill (7.9) and Tara Hettstrom's (7.7) Vault sweep. Colwill set a personal best with a 7.2 on the Bars to finish third behind Erica (7.5) and Tara (7.4).

The sisters finished in the same position on the Floor routine with scores of 8.2 and 8.1, respectively. Lauren Genovese completed the sweep, taking third in 7.6.

Ardizzoni said the key to Cohasset continuing putting out high-quality performances like Monday's is to rest any aches and pains, and avoid getting sick during the winter months. The loss of just one gymnast could make a huge difference as to how the Skippers fare against the SSL's tougher teams.

"We can't afford to lose one gymnast because we could lose the meet," she said.

Hoopsters too much for Vikings and Lancers

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers played their second and third games of the season against the East Bridgewater Vikings and the Norton Lancers. The Skippers came out on top in both games, due to excellent team and individual performances.

Playing the Vikings Friday, Cohasset was given a tough game. The Vikings played well and the Skippers had to come back from a deficit late in the contest. Coach Ron Ford pointed out excellent efforts by sophomore Paul-Michael Quintin, junior Ryan Bishop and senior Jared Hardwick.

Coming off the East Bridgewater game, the Skippers were 2-0 and travelled to Norton on Tuesday night to face the Lancers. The game started an hour late due to a stirring triple-overtime game played by the junior varsity. Heroics by Andy Hamilton, who sank a deep three pointer, Jamie Buick and other members of the JV could not salvage the game as the Skippers lost in dramatic fashion. However, the parent club came out on top, triumphing by a score of 74-54.

The game started slowly. Hardwick started the Skippers' scoring with a lay-up and free throw, and J.L. Williams scored in the same fashion. Williams sank a jumper to make the score 7-6. Hadwick knocked down a three pointer and jumper, and Bishop picked up a bucket on a lay-up. Burke Davis banked a lay-up and senior point guard Fred Howard nailed a free throw and a lay-up. Norton's Craig Wencis made a nice drive to the hole, getting the basket and making the score 18-17, in Norton's favor. Quintin tossed in a three pointer and Howard stuck another foul shot. Quintin's nice move on his defender resulted in an easy lay-up. Hardwick hauled down an offensive board and put it back for two points.

Bishop had a monstrous rejection and Quintin capitalized by netting his second three of the game. Howard took a nice pass from Davis to the hole for a bucket, but Norton's Mark packer had a three-point play on the other end. Bishop hit a jumper from junior Brian Kilroy. Howard picked Norton's Ed Wencis' pocket and dribbled in for a lay-up. At the half, the Skippers trailed 35-34.

Senior John Whitehouse (left) and Captains Nate Caldwell and Kevin Duffy are all expected to have strong seasons for the Skippers.

Tucker Gledhill went back and forth with his opponent before finally pinning him in the second period in the 119-pound division. Junior Captain Kevin Duffy went up against the Bulldogs' best wrestler and didn't give up a point, taking a 5-0 decision at 135.

In what Sweeney called one of the "matches of the night," Doug Sheerin traded points in the 140-pound class. He was leading 14-13 when he finally won on a pin in the final minute.

Tied in his 152-pound match, John Whitehouse's opponent was disqualified on penalty points, giving Whitehouse the victory. Justin Buckley (171) took his opponent to the mat for a pin win in the second period.

The tri meet at Cohasset saw all of the Skippers' double winners pinning at least one of their opponents. The freshmen especially stood out as several picked up wins.

Despite the youth of the team, it does have experienced wrestlers and they're not all upperclassmen.

Sweeney said he is "realistic but has high expectations," from his athletes, including the youngsters with the varsity experience.

He wasn't disappointed in the freshmen crew of Mike Baird (112), Dan Littauer (125), who won his only match against Lynnfield, Jordan Fiore (130), first-year wrestler Mike Rossi (145), who didn't win, but avoided being pinned in both his matches.

"For your first year, that's pretty impressive," Sweeney said.

Buckley swept his matches and heavyweight Nate Caldwell used a Duck-Under Cradle to pin his Wamp opponent after winning by forfeit in the Canton and Lynnfield meets.

Whitehouse was battling a heavy cold, but it didn't stop him from doubling up his Braintree opponent to take an 8-4 victory.

"I'm very pleased," said Sweeney. "It basically came down to depth versus Braintree.

"We're pretty much where I expected us to be for the experience of this group."

hitting a bucket after a nice pass by Quintin. Bishop took the dish from Williams for a pair. Cohasset broke the game open within the next 30 seconds when its fast-paced transition game went into effect. Hardwick broke away for two dunks and a lay-up, making the score 44-37 and setting the Skippers on a roll. Hardwick dished to Howard and Quintin, who both hit lay-ups. Quintin's free throw made the tally 51-38, in the Skippers' favor.

Hardwick's rejection kept Cohasset's momentum going, and his dish to Howard and his leaner put the Skippers out in front 55-48. Quintin swished a three pointer. Bishop sank a left-handed baby hook. Howard got his second steal of the game and finished it with a lay-up at the other end. His pull-up jumper went down, making it 64-48. Good ball movement by Bishop and Hardwick set up Quintin for a lay-up, and Bishop sunk a beautiful reverse lay-up.

Matt Belson, off the bench to spark the Skippers, hit a lay-up and had a nice dish, as did Lutz Grunwald, who hit Grant Emde with a pass. Emde sank the lay-up and Kilroy also hit a lay-up, bringing the final score to 74-54 in favor of the Skippers. The Skippers also have been getting an excellent effort off the bench from sophomore Justin McNamara.

Ford was pleased with his team's effort. "In the first half, we played very disorganized basketball," He said. "In the second half, we showed the potential to be a very, very good team. A guy like Jared can break a game open, like he did tonight. If we hit the three pointer, and consistently get better, we will be unstoppable."

The Skippers were scheduled to play Scituate Wednesday and take on Harwich Friday.

Area churches, temple report

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

All over the South Shore, religious leaders report their congregations and parishes are growing, spurred by baby-boomers, returning in droves, as the population across the area has grown.

Priests, rabbis and ministers, across all denominations, attribute the growth to young families seeking to fulfill a combination of spiritual and social needs.

"We're bursting at the seams," said the Rev. Francis Reagan of St. Christine's Roman Catholic Church, Marshfield.

Reagan reported that the parish now has 1,200 children enrolled in the parish Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (CCD) classes, with more than 130 teachers.

He sees a common thread running through the fabric of the growing parish. In many cases, parents of young children drifted away from church during their college years, but gradually came back to the church to be married, he said. While they may not have been actively involved with church as newlyweds – when they became parents, his parishioners looked to the church help them instill faith, values, ethics, and morals, in their children, Reagan said.

RABBI STEPHEN KAROL of Temple Sha-Aray Shalom in Hingham said slightly more than half of the congregation comes from outside the community. With a sizable number of members drawn from the nearby towns of Norwell, Scituate, Hull, Cohasset and Weymouth, other families also come from as far as Randolph, Whitman, Quincy, Pembroke, Duxbury and Chestnut Hill.

Few members of the congregation are life-long residents of the South Shore, he said. Most have located here as they married and established their homes.

Karol has seen Temple Sha-Aray Shalom more than double in membership 14 years. He described the synagogue as "Reformed, but very traditional congregation."

A synagogue has three functions, Karol said: as a house of prayer, a place for study, and a place of assembly.

For some members, attending services is a "proactive way to be Jewish," since the synagogue is the only Jewish organization south of Boston.

"People are looking for a way of connecting," he said.

Young people may lapse from or even reject regular religious participation during their college years, he said. But as they mature, with marriage followed by children, they begin to feel what Karol called "the pull of tradition and history."

THE REV. KEN READ-BROWN has seen this at the 300-year-old First Parish in Hingham, also known as The Old Ship Meeting House, where Sunday attendance at this Unitarian parish has increased by 100 in the last eight years, with a similar number of children enrolled in the church school.

This increase is due partly to demographics, Read-Brown said, pointing to the overall population increase on the South Shore, it can also be attributed to parents trying to impart values to their children.

Members have been drawn to the Old Ship parish, he said, because they want to be part of a community with greater diversity. In some cases, parents of mixed faiths find the Old Ship Parish a sort of neutral ground where they can worship, hold onto their beliefs, and "revel in these diverse relationships." He estimated that 15 to 20 members of the parish are inter-married Jewish and Christian couples.

Read-Brown noted that people find themselves living in neighborhoods with others just like themselves, and they may seek a church with a mix of young and old, couples and singles.

IN COHASSET, the Rev. Gary Ritts has seen a modest increase in membership of his congregation, but he noted that it seems to have become younger, but no less active. Founded in 1824, the Second Parish Church, has a membership of 280 families, with a "bulging" church nursery of 70 or more children and expanded church school. The number of children has doubled in 10 years.

With a church as old as Second Parish, Ritts said the records show an ebb and low in the congregation.

This Congregational church is affiliated with the United Church of Christ, explained Ritts, who has served the Second Parish in Cohasset for eight-and-one-half years.

He has see many members of the congregation return to church seeking spirituality, but Ritts also noted what he sees as people's "frustration with the monetary and material importance in society."

Church has become "a time for families without distractions."

He has seen young parents with children in tow, embracing the Second Parish which they see as "a melting pot, a compromise."

Ritts said the minority of the church's members was brought up with the United Church of Christ. The new members, many with roots in the Roman Catholic Church or other Protestant denominations, have joined because they see it as, he said, "in between: not as strict as Catholics, and not as liberal as Unitarians."

BUT WHILE MOST suburban priests, ministers, and rabbis talk of growth of their congregations and parishes, the 207-year-old First Baptist Church in Marshfield can boast no population explosion. The Rev. Irving Beveridge said he is conducting a "hand-holding ministry" for the aging congregation of 58 members, and 20 who regularly attend Sunday services.

The First Baptist Church has a rich history, known to some as the Old Skunk Church. At some time in the 1800s, Beveridge explained, a skunk walked into the church during Sunday services. The congregation held its breath until the skunk turned around and walked back out. The incident found its way into the local newspapers, and the nickname stuck, with great affection. Today, a display case at the church contains two ceramic skunks– representing the 200 years of the church–with seven small skunks, one added each year on the church's anniversary.

A fire in the 1950s damaged the church, but the pulpit was rescued, and is in place at the repaired church.

The church sold its parsonage several years ago, and in time, the remaining church property will revert to the Baptist Conference, Beveridge explained, which will sell it and distribute the proceeds to various missionary groups. But, there is always a chance that the resurgence in religion will spread to the Old Skunk Church.

Beveridge said from time to time, a young family, looking for a church to join, will attend Sunday services for two or three weeks. He, and other church members, will invite them to join, hoping that one young family will attract more.

"We explain they can be the start of our Sunday School and fellowship programs," he said. "But, it's a 'Catch-22.'" The families are looking to join a church with programs and activities for children, but the First Baptist Church cannot have such programs and activities without young families.

"No one seems to want to be the first," he said, adding, "Miracles do happen."

Candlelight worship at St. Stephen's

Christmas candlelight worship at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., begins at 5 p.m., Sunday, Dec. 24 with a Family Holy Communion service. Families include all, whether single or with immediate family members present, and of course lots of children. The sermon will be a story told by Lynne Phipps, assistant for Youth and Families. The Cherub and Saint Gregory Children's Choirs will sing.

The Festal Holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m., preceded by a special program of Christmas music to start at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's Adult Choir with music director Fredick Guzasky will offer music such as the 16th century French carol, "Ding Dong! Merrily on High," and other works including "All My Heart This Night Rejoices," by Johann Ebeling. The festal worship is a service of great beauty and joy. The traditional gospel is read from the King James Bible. Candlelight illumines the singing of "Silent Night." The beautiful bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the starry night sky.

Normal Sunday morning worship will be held commemorating the fourth Sunday of Advent on the 24th at 8 and 10 a.m. There will be no church school. Worship on Monday, Christmas Day will be at 10 a.m.

Alexandria Donovan

Lifelong resident

Alexandria R. "Allie" (DeMello) Donovan of Cohasset, a cafeteria manager in the Cohasset school system more than 20 years, died Dec. 16 at home after a brief illness.

Mrs. Donovan was born in Cohasset and was a lifelong resident. She was educated in the Cohasset schools. She retired in 1976.

She was a member of St. Anthony's Church and the Cohasset Senior Citizens.

Wife of the late Robert E. Donovan, she leaves two sons, Robert E. Donovan of Hingham and William E. Donovan of Franconia, N.H.; two daughters, Barbara A. Kehoe of Hingham and Betty E. Jewell of Plymouth; two sisters, Rose DeMello and Margaret Kelley, both of Cohasset; 13 grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Wednesday, Dec. 20, in St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery.

Funeral arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset. Donations may be made to Children's Hospital, 300 Longwood Ave., Boston 02115.

Scott D. Sandblom

Memorial service Saturday

Scott Danforth Sandblom, 35, of Cohasset, a regional sales manager for Litecontrol Corporation in Hanson, died Dec. 15 in San Francisco.

Mr. Sandblom had been in California since 1991 to establish a West Coast office for Litecontrol.

Born and raised in Cohasset, he graduated from Middlebury College in 1982 and received a master's degree in business from Babson College in 1990.

He leaves his wife, Rhondi (Eitreim) Sandblom; two sons, Derek J. Sandblom and Jake D. Sandblom; his parents, Russell Joseph and Carol (Danforth) Sandblom of Cohasset; a brother, Peter Sandblom of Scituate, and two sisters, Jodi Sandblom of Charlestown and Lauren Christensen of Lunenburg.

A memorial service will be held Dec. 23 at 1 p.m. in Second Congregational Church. Burial will be private.

There are no visiting hours.

Funeral arrangements have been made by McCormick & Son Funeral Home, Laguna Hills, California.

Donations may be made to the American Heart Association or to the Scott D. Sandblom Memorial Scholarship Fund at Cohasset High School, Jack DeLorenzo, Cohasset Gridiron Club, 143 Pond St., Cohasset 02025.

Red fox sighting reported

Civilian dispatcher David Weeks noted that a South Main Street woman spotted a red fox at about 10:51 a.m., Friday (Dec. 15) near the Scituate line.

Champagne heist at Curtis Liquors

Police said two cases of champagne, valued at about $240, were stolen from Curtis Liquors in Tedeschi Plaza at about 1:52 a.m., Monday.

"The front window was smashed and the champagne was taken from a display in the window," Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police are investigating a possible connection between that crime and an attempted break-in at 1:10 a.m., at Liquors Unlimited in Cohasset Village. A resident, who called on the 9-1-1 line to report banging noises in the vicinity, alerted police to the attempted burglary, Jackson said.

Drive slow in slippery conditions

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson reminded all drivers to slow down now that winter weather has arrived.

"We've had fender-benders because people are driving too fast for the conditions," he said. "During the first couple of storms, it seems that people forget how to drive in the snow."

Jackson also pointed out that four-wheel drive vehicles are not immune to snow and ice.

"It takes them the same distance to stop as any other car," he said.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. XVIII No. 9 | COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY | December 28, 1995 | 1-800-649-6661 | 75 cents

Train is year's biggest story

Cohasset Heights, Shaw's supermarket, water pressure, and the town hall elevator also make 1995 headlines

Cohasset's Ken Jason holds a pro-train sign outside Lantana's in Randolph where Gov. William Weld made his announcement last month about restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad. Greenbush dominated the headlines in 1995.

As Cohasset says goodbye to 1995, it's a good time to reflect on the past 12 months. It was a year of change at the harbormaster's position and Cohasset learns its long-time town counsel will step down. Selectmen provided the most Monday night entertainment ever, as individual personalities and politics clash on the five-member board. It was a time when voters opted to raise their taxes to pay for a new DPW garage and to cover a budget deficit. The proposed transformation of Cushing Plaza by Shaw's Supermarkets appears to be closer to reality and the village gets a new bank in an old landmark.

So here's a look back with text, quotes and photos from stories that appeared in the Cohasset Mariner in 1995. But hold on to your hats and stay strapped in because we're sure that 1996 holds a lot for Cohasset. And here at the Cohasset Mariner, we promise to be there covering the news and bringing you the features and photos that you've come to expect.

January

Selectmen, still reeling from what they say was Eastern Edison's unsatisfactory handling of Cohasset's Christmas weekend power-outage crisis, planned to ask power company officials some hard questions.

They stopped short of requesting that the attorney general's office and state department of public utilities launch a full investigation into the matter. After nor'easter hit town in the wee hours of Christmas Eve, many Cohasseters lost power which was not restored in some cases for 12-to-18 hours. Selectmen will meet with Eastern Edison's vice president of operations and director of distribution on Jan. 17.

Plans to switch to civilian dispatch when enhanced 9-1-1 comes on line in the spring has local firefighters concerned. They are worried that less manpower on shift will result in a lower level of service. Reducing manning at the fire department from five to four per shift, selectmen opt not to fill three firefighter vacancies in 1995. They say the firefighter who currently works the desk won't be needed when civilian dispatch comes on line.

'We were sound asleep and all of a sudden it started to rumble, it went on and on forever.'

— Motoko Deane.

Although ten percent fewer homes were sold than the prior year, sales of Cohasset homes was healthy in 1994, local real estate agents report. The average price was $315,207 as compared with $297,634 in 1993.

Frustrated by having the plug pulled on efforts to light the town common for the holidays, about 60 local citizens signed a petition which will put the issue before the people at town meeting. Stephanie Church, program director of the South Shore Community Center, said she was surprised when requests to light trees on the town common for the Center's Jingle Bell Walk were denied. Selectmen opted just to have a single tree lit on the common, so Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon sent the center a letter saying one tree was all that was going to have lights.

There's no shortage of environmental companies lining up to help the town walk through a state feasibility study on restoration of the Greenbush Line. Officials from three firms tried to persuade selectmen this week that they can provide the best analysis of the Environmental Impact Report to be released this spring.

Oronde Khary Allie, a 1992 Cohasset High grad who was gunned down in Atlanta, was honored with a billboard on Route 3. Stephen Carroll of Cohasset, who is employed with Stoneham-based Ackerly Outdoor Advertising, used his connections to look into having a billboard painted to honor the 20-year-old college student's life.

State Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield) reports that public transportation assessments may not be affected if rail service is restored on the Old Colony Line. Hynes, who sits on a special commission on MBTA financing, says there is great concern that the present financing system of the MBTA doesn't work and that current assessments are inequitable.

As department heads and committee chairman take the hot seat in front of selectmen and the advisory board to present their budget requests for fiscal year 1996 which starts July 1, a sizeable deficit picture is emerging, town officials warn.

Nan Roth, chairman of the advisory committee, said her board may have to revisit every budget in town to see what can be trimmed.

Shawmut National Corporation said it plans to sell the Cohasset Savings Bank building, assessed at $474,200, at 13 Elm Street. Last year Shawmut purchased the outstanding shares in Cohasset Savings for $16 per share for a total of $16.9 million.

'We are awe-struck by the numbers we see coming.'

Robert V. Davenport of Sohier Street will serve as interim member of the board of health replacing long-time member William Baird who stepped down. In a majority vote, selectmen and remaining members of the board of health appoint Davenport who will serve until the April 1 town election.

Last year's opposition to the zoning relief and liquor license granted to the South Shore Playhouse Associates appears to have subsided as Music Circus officials seek a renewal of both the special permit and license that would allow them to serve beer and wine at events in the upcoming season.

Michelle Buckley, local disabilities commission chairman, reports the town and commission have worked well together on accessibility issues and were well prepared for the Jan. 26 deadline to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Winter finally arrives with almost six inches of heavy, wet snow falling before warmer temperatures dropped almost an inch of rain on top of it.

Police reported that Eastern Edison crews were right at it and there was no repeat of the long power outage over the Christmas weekend in December.

Anti-Greenbush activists blast the Citizens Advisory Committee, appointed to comment on the environmental feasibility study on the train. The CAC met for the first time since voting last March to support the train with a short tunnel under Hingham Square. Members of the Coastal Coalition charged the MBTA had not studied boats and other alternatives adequately.

Later this month,the Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC), which once voted unanimously to recommend revival of the Greenbush commuter line with a tunnel under Hingham Square, comes down on both sides of the issue. This time the committee voted to send a minority report along with the old majority report to the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe, who will make the final decision on the environmental aspects of the restored line. Two of the four signers of the minority report, Deborah Cook and Ed Fegreus, are from Cohasset, and would not join the majority until "a multi-modal non-rail transportation alternative has been studied."

'The biggest problem (his department faced) was cars travelling on the roads when they should've been home.'

— Harold Litchfield.

State Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes says a short tunnel under Hingham Square is too expensive and not viable. A final decision on a preferred alternative for Greenbush is expected in May.

This year there are no contested races on any elected board, but officials say there's bound to be a lot of interest in an override ballot question or questions which will appear in a special election later in the spring.

A new plan to allow parking on one side of the streets around the inside of the town common is considered by selectmen.

The parking plan was prompted by the Rev. Clifford Cutler of St. Stephen's Church who was inundated with complaints from parishioners who were ticketed on a recent Sunday.

Brian Leahy of Shaws Real Estate Division gives the plaza project high marks at a meeting before the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. The redevelopment of Cushing Plaza with Shaws as the focus represents a salvation for the struggling shopping center, Shaws officials believe.

Selectmen pare $150,000 from the town's fiscal year 1996 budget, leaving about $400,000 to be raised if voters approve a Proposition 2-1/2 override.

Title V regulations (state clean water regulations) could soak homeowners, officials warn. The new regulations which go into effect in March, will require board of health inspections on septic systems in homes for sale within nine months of all title transfers. Homeowners who take out building permits for additions and renovations to their homes will also be subject to inspection. Septic systems that do not meet the state's standards must be upgraded within a year of the inspection.

March

When Cohasset instituted its policy of assessing fines for false burglar alarms, police expected the number of false alarms to decrease. Instead, the number has increased, which has meant more fines collected by the town. Last year the town collected $1,950 for 622 false alarms as compared with $1,370 in fines for 587 false alarms the prior year.

Selectmen ask the town's DPW garage committee to go back to the drawing board and trim about $1/4 million off the price tag of the proposed new 16,800 square-foot garage. The committee told selectmen the total cost of constructing the garage at the town's transfer station is about $975,000 which is about $225,000 over original estimates.

An abandoned puppy whose life nearly came to a tragic end, has found a new home with the Cunninghams of Norfolk Road. The coonhound, named Quigley after Cohasset Animal Control Officer William Quigley, broke the hearts of volunteers at the Scituate Animal Shelter whose all-out publicity campaign to find Quigley's owner met with success. A veterinarian's exam turned up bite marks on Quigley's body and rescue workers opted not to put the six-month old coonhound to sleep. His former owners did not offer to reclaim the dog but were able to verify his inoculation history opening the door for adoption.

Cohasset selectmen will join their Scituate counterparts in appealing to the state's congressional delegation to oppose the proposed shutting down of the Coast Guard Station in Scituate.

Selectmen said the closing would translate to diminished safety for the town's boaters and fishermen.

Steve Gaumer's sticker campaign for a seat on the health board, launched less than a week before Saturday's election, wasn't enough to boost him into office, but may have set the stage for a run next year. This Was Cohasset's Bank for 100 Years!

Now, It Is Again!

We've been helping South Shore residents with their banking needs since 1834. As of Monday, December 11, 1995, we have a new home in Cohasset. We're located at 13 Elm Street in Cohasset Village, the site of the former Cohasset Savings Bank.

If you step inside, you'll see that extensive renovations have restored this building to its original character and charm; you'll find friendly, helpful people and personal service. This is the kind of service you just don't get from those big regional banks.

You'll also find a 24-hour ATM and a night depository.

If you step inside soon, you'll find out about our free offer for stadium blankets and canvas tote bags for qualified depositors.

As a locally owned and managed community bank, it's our goal to provide you with quality financial products and superior service. Your deposits help us provide loans for families and businesses right here in Cohasset.

some confusion.

If past override elections are a gauge then the turnout May 13 will be considerably higher than the 18 percent who voted in the town election this week. And coupled with two questions on restoration of railroad service to Cohasset – an issue which deeply divides the board of selectmen and many residents – the special election could be a real vote-getter. The override will ask voters to a allow the town to assess an additional $358,000 in real estate and personal property taxes in fiscal year 1996 to cover a projected deficit.

'It was a whole lot of fun to put a week-long campaign together and come away only 37 votes shy.'

— Steve Gaumer.

While many neighbors remain apprehensive about the size and proximity of the Shaw's supermarket proposed for Cushing Plaza, there appears to be a consensus building among officials and residents in support of the $5 million plus project.

What was supposed to have been a question and answer session on the return of the Old Colony Railroad erupted into a shouting match several times at the train meeting, as opponents of the project accused the MBTA representative running the meeting of being ill-prepared and condescending. Andrew Brennan, manager of Environmental Affairs for the MBTA, conducted the 90-minute session which discussed financing, safety, pollution and transportation policy.

To bring more continuity to the school year, the school department will eliminate nearly all early-release days starting in 1995-96, Supt. Stephen Hart said. There will also be a single vacation week in March instead of the February and April vacation weeks.

Joseph D. "Joe" Buckley is honored as Citizen of the Year at a special reception at Kimball's by the Sea.

The Shaw's proposal for Cushing Plaza appears caught between a rock and a wet place, as the conservation commission asks that some of the parts of the plan be moved north, away from protected areas or be eliminated entirely. They estimated that the proposal increased the impermeable (buildings and pavement) area 40 percent over the current plaza and thus would create additional runoff into nearby Bound Brook.

After nearly 40 years Cohasset is more than due for a full harbor dredging, says Harbormaster Shawn Kelly, who hopes the job will be done this fall. There have been recent concerns that the $300,000, secured last year by state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and Sen. Brian McDonald for the project, could dry up.

Former cemetery committee member Glenn Pratt is determined to keep alive the possibility of building a cemetery in the 10-acre town-owned site off Red Fox Lane.

The Department of Environmental Protection recently approved a number of "alternative" septic system designs that may allow homeowners to comply with the state's tough new Title V regulations without facing financial ruin.

Grappling with what they see as Draconian cuts to the town's public safety services – selectmen will reluctantly recommend one police officer and one firefighter be laid off if the May 13 override fails. The cuts would save about $60,000 or 1/3 of the amount the advisory board recommends be slashed from the municipal side of the town budget if the $358,000 does not pass muster with voters in a special election next month. The school department could also should $180,000 in potential cuts.

May

An architectural designer/inventor from Cohasset has proposed a novel concept to provide commuter rail service to an even greater population than those who would be served by the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush Line. He suggests a three-mile commuter-rial spur be constructed at the Route 3-228 interchange on Hingham Street in Rockland and run three miles westward to the Old Colony Plymouth Line in South Weymouth.

Engineers from the company Cohasset hired to analyze the MBTA's environmental impact report on the restoration of the Greenbush Line, recommend the town ask that train speed be reduced to less than 40 mph through the village area to mitigate noise impacts.

Mario Susi & Son, a Dorchester construction company, bought the land and buildings at the former site of Webb-Norfolk Conveyor off Rte. 3A for $1.3 million, the real estate firm handling the property reported.

The conservation commission unanimously agrees to allow pesticide spraying on Straits Pond to combat an anticipated infestation of midges, tiny gnat-like insects which swarm in dense clouds. Able to pass through screens, midges have become so serious a problem on Straits Pond in recent summers that the Hull Board of Health has declared a public health emergency.

Planning board and some conservation commission members have informally agreed to try to work out their differences over the parking requirements for a Shaw's supermarket proposed for Cushing Plaza. Shaw's plans 75,225 feet of retail space in three separate buildings. Under town regulations, that space would require 644 parking spaces. Shaw's has only asked for 440 spaces, with the additional 204 in reserve to be built if necessary.

As the bells toll across Europe in celebration of VE Day, one decorated Cohasset veteran looks back with pride and sorrow on the victory he helped make possible. Fifty years ago this week, Austin "Bud" Ahearn, Jr., 75, was sitting in the field near Germany's Elbe River drinking vodka with Russian soldiers.

Taylor Strecker of Cohasset plays the title role in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of 'Annie' on stage at Scituate High School.

percent or 2,829 of the town's registered voters cast ballots. The town overrride questions — one for the public works garage (debt exclusion/estimated at $752,000) and the other to cover the town's projected deficit ($358,000) — both won with 56 percent of the vote.

Grappling with the new Title V regulations had presented a new set of problems and more work for the health department and local real estate agencies. Chris Ford of the Cohasset office of Hallmark 100 sums up the Title V regulations in one work: "nightmare."

In the face of evidence that Cohasset remains one of the easiest towns on the South Shore for minors to buy cigarettes in, the board of health agrees to consider tough new regulations on the sale of tobacco.

In a recent test by the Tobacco Control Program of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, a teenage girl was able to buy cigarettes at 10 out of 17 locations giving Cohasset a 59 percent purchase rate, now the highest of the 14 towns in the program.

Despite loud protests form students, the school committee refused to reconsider next year's controversial new schedule, which results in the loss of one week's school vacation. In November, the committee unanimously voted to eliminate one week of school vacation by replacing the February and April vacations with a one-week break in March. The number of school days will remain the same at 180.

On a Memorial Day, that occurred 50 years after the end of World War II, 40 years after the Korean War, and 20 after Vietnam — those who participated or watched Cohasset's observances were reminded of those soldiers who died unknown or who are missing in action.

With less than two years on the job, Cohasset Harbormaster Shawn Kelly says he's had enough and will resign. He cited selectmen's lack of support for and "micro-management" of his position as his reason for resigning.

The last day of classes is one that English teacher William Kite won't soon forget. About 70 junior & senior high school students gave Kite a send-off that was geared to get attention. The English teacher is being laid off and the students think the school committee and administration are all wrong for not keeping their beloved teacher.

After working on the language of the various conditions the board intends to attach to their approval, the planning board approves the Shaw's supermarket proposed for Cushing Plaza.

Charging that Supt. Stephen Hart is not leading during a period of tight finances and stress caused by the implementation of the state education reform, the teachers' union gives Hart of a vote of no confidence.

Supt. Hart says the release of the statement and the silent protest staged by some 40 teachers during the school committee meeting, makes for dramatic headlines but does not provide the basis for solid dialogue.

After a selectman and resident publicly argued over a perceived credibility gap between town officials and ordinary citizens regarding Cohasset Heights Landfill, landfill owner Paul Barry says he's had enough.

'Let's go to court and take all this off the public officers in the town,' the frustrated Barry said at a joint meeting of selectmen, conservation commission, and health board. Two lawsuits Cohasset Heights has launched against the town have been on hold pending discussion of a recent "global settlement" offered by CHL which tied resolution of the lawsuits in with issues surrounding the operation of the landfill and the proposed landfill expansion.

There are many more questions than answers for South Shore residents as state transportation officials continue to pitch the Greenbush "busway" as an innovative, exciting and feasible transportation alternative.

It's official, the planning board approves the Shaw's supermarket proposal for Cushing Plaza.

Selectmen will ask the state to schedule a public hearing within the next few weeks to help citizens understand how to comment on a new report Cohasset Heights Landfill has filed with the state on its proposed expansion. Through the Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) report, owners of the privately-owned landfill hope to obtain state environmental approval which could move the expansion process out of the study stage.

Studies continue to move forward on sewer solutions for Cohasset, including a plan to connect homes within 200 feet of Straits Pond to Hull's waste water treatment facility.

quated system of pumps, pipes and water mains. And again this summer residents along the so called "Gold Coast" in the Linden Drive/Rust Way area – which is the farthest point form the town's water supply – turned on their faucets or tried to flush their toilets to no avail.

Under new management, the water department along with the town's board of water commissioners have the solution to the town's water pressure problems in sight. Once the Forest Avenue water main loop is complete, the lack of water pressure along the coast will be remedied, Richard Cohan, operations of Cohasset Water Services, says.

The Hingham Institution for Savings, with assets of more than $162 million, plans to open branch offices in Cohasset and North Scituate sometime this fall, according to president and chief executive officer Robert H. Gaughen, Jr.

A Cohasset home at the north end of Sandy Beach designed by world-famous architect Walter Gropius may be listed on the prestigious National Register of Historic Places. John H. Winters III, a former Merchant Marine, is appointed harbormaster to fill the vacancy created by the recent resignation of Shawn Kelly.

The sewer commission holds a public information meeting to discuss the pros and cons of three sewer options under consideration for the town. Under a "court agreement for judgement" by the state, Cohasset must develop an approved sewer system for about 1/3 of the town or 650 homes and that system must be operational by April 1, 1999.

Members of the cemetery committee proceed with an engineering study on the expansion of Beechwood Cemetery and will talk to abutters about buying land to build a road to reach the Red Fox Lane site off Rte. 3A.

It's hot, it's humid, but so far there hasn't been the distinction of an official heat wave. Mariner weather man Bob Skilling, said many coastal towns like Cohasset have only flirted with readings of three consecutive days of 90-degree weather, which is the standard for the heat wave.

The Minot's Light Replica on Government Island could become even more authentic if the town can obtain the only surviving classical lens form the lighthouse. But the sticky point is the Coast Guard has valued the Fresnel lens at $250,000 and wants the town to insure it for that amount.

The mixed reaction to the recently announced changes in Title V regulations indicates that the Weld administration will not receive clear sailing on the stormy issue anytime soon. Critics continue to call for an end to Title V altogether, and while business leaders generally support the new rules, representatives of the state's powerful real estate and construction industries nonetheless less say more regulatory change is needed.

The Conservation Law Foundation reports that the Old Colony project, which includes the Greenbush line, is mitigation for Boston's Central Artery Project. In an agreement with the state, CLF agreed to allow work on the the "big dig" to continue as long as mitigation terms, including restoration of all three lines of the Old Colony railroad, are met.

Police Chief Brian Noonan says he would like selectmen to clarify the issue of "flaggers." He is considering a town warrant article that vests authority for police details or civilian flaggers with the police chief.

The recreation department's summer production, 'Beauty and the Beast,' is on stage at town hall.

A plan creating a parking lot and a picnic area at the Hagerty property receives mixed reviews from selectmen. The project is expected to cost between $160,000 and $200,000 and could be accomplished in three phases.

Police theorize that a 911 caller was actually a dog. All police could hear was heavy breathing and when they got inside the house, found a dog by the phone. The owner confirmed that no one was home except the dog when the call came in.

New principals at Cohasset High and Deer Hill will greet students when school opens next week.

Recycling is up at the town recycling transfer facility, officials report. Recyclables are now a pretty significant source of revenue for Cohasset and will help offset the cost of incinerating the town's garbage. The town pays $60 per ton to incinerate its 'unrecyclable" trash.

Joe Slotnick to play varsity hoop at Vassar College

Boston College High School sends us great news this week – we certainly have scholars living in our town! We are talking about Robert C. Morgan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Morgan of 698 Jerusalem Road and Benjamin T. Smoot, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Smoot of 175 Hull Street. We certainly congratulate you men. We know it is a lot of hard work!

Thomas S. Allen, a senior, was awarded a letter in varsity football at Suffield Academy's fall athletic awards assembly Nov. 29. Tom is the son of Zuline Gray Allen of Jamaica Plain.

Straight from Poughkeepsie, N.Y. – Joe Slotnick of Cohasset (CHS) has been selected as a member of the 1995-1996 Vassar College men's basketball team. The team has launched the season with a second-place finish in the Hudson Valley Tournament.

We wish Holly Pompeo a Happy Birthday – just because Holly was born right before the Christmas holidays does not mean that we don't think of her! Every day! Love you, Holly!

Didn't Jack Livingston and his able crew do a super job painting the Hingham Institution for Savings? The detail painting makes the building look magnificent, and you must be sure to take a look at it!

We give a round of applause to the local Appalachia Service Project volunteers. Did you know they sent 12 families gifts? They repaired their homes last summer and really got to love them. There are 84 volunteers who are involved, and we really have to thank Rev. Gary Ritts and his wife, Judy, for their involvement in making people happy.

Oh, boy, is Mary Londergan happy! Don't try to call her – she is out shopping for Ellen Mary Londergan, who was born Nov. 21. Mom and Dad, Mike and Mary, are so glad to present their girl (Mary has five grandsons) to her. Ellen Mary has two brothers, Thomas, 3, and Patrick, 5.

Tara and Rich are here, and Hap and Leah Pompeo are thrilled! So are Krissy, Lynn, Danny and Brian. Oh, gosh – is Sage precious! Only one wish – stay!

Happy birthday greetings to to Millard McNeill!

We surely hope that Dick Wheeler is feeling better. (He has had a bought with pneumonia.) Just stay tucked in and cozy!

Here's a look at the toys that Herb Jason and Greg and Jon Small were able to buy for the U.S. Marines "Toys for Tots" program through the $3230 in cash the men raised through donation cans at local coffee shops and asking Bradlees patrons for contributions. Hat's off to Herb, Jon and Greg who helped make many needy children's Christmas a happy one again this year!

Here's to Renee Prisble, who has done an outstanding job at the Art Institute of Chicago. Renee was nominated as a merit scholar! She is working as a jewel apprentice, so she will always be busy!

Hey, we have to give a standing ovation to Harold Litchfield and his men for making our roads safe to travel on – the sand, the salt, the plows – great job!

Happy New Year – make part of your resolution to call with your news – everyone loves it!!

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

Not long ago, we all enjoyed Mary Sease's borders of bright pink Cosmos standing tall and waving in the breezes of summertime. Now, for the holiday season, Mary has decorated her home at 134 South Main Street with swags of evergreen tied with red velvet bows matching the wreath on her front door.

At year's end we look back and remember all the beautiful homes and gardens we have showcased in The Grand Tour. We look forward with great anticipation to next year's garden delights which we will share with all of you who live in the lovely community of Cohasset. Happy New Year!

Highway department winter reminder

The Cohasset Highway Department reminds all residents that it does not have the funding or the manpower to open up driveways that have been plowed in by snow plows while clearing the roads.

It is suggested that residents wait until the roads are cleared before shoveling the ends of their driveways, whenever possible. The Highway Department regrets any inconvenience this might cause.

The Old Man and the Kid

The Old Man in the sash that read "1995" sat at his desk and watched the last grains of sand drain out of the hourglass.

In a few moments it would all be over – the few successes, the many failures, the things left undone – and he would be off to . . .

Say, where does an old year go to die, anyway?

There was that terrorist bombing in Oklahoma. He certainly would be remembered for that even though there was nothing he could have done about it.

There was the trial of O. J. Simpson. Was justice done? The question was still unanswered even though just about everyone had an opinion about it.

But there was also the tenuous peace in Bosnia that was worked out in Dayton. He had high hopes for that one. He wished he could hang around and see.

But his time, like the sand in the top of the hourglass, was running out.

The door opened and the Kid came in. He took the sash that said "1996" down from the hook and drew it on over his diapers. They were clean and new compared to the Old Man's tattered robe.

"Hi, Pops," said the Kid jauntily. "And so long, Pops. Don't let the door hit you in the back as you leave."

"Aren't you going to read my report?" asked the Old Man. "Don't you want the advice of one who has been there and seen it all?"

"Oh. all right. But make it quick," said the Kid. "I've got some people coming over to watch the bowl games."

With nimble fingers, he set up his own hourglass, the one with all the sand in the top. Then he picked up the Old Man's report and opened it.

"Boy, what a mess you made of things," he snorted. "I don't believe this. You let the government go broke, not once but twice. How could you let that happen?"

"Those things are not as easy as they look," said the Old Man defensively, "particularly when you have people like Newt Gingrich and Bill Clinton involved.

The Kid shrugged.

"Don't worry," he said. "I'll take care of it first thing. I'll let Newt ride up front in Air Force One with Bill. That should break the log jam. Why didn't you think of that?"

This time it was the Old Man who shrugged.

"And Yitzhak Rabin," the Kid continued. "Here's one of the pillars of peace in the Middle East and you let him pass away."

"I sort of think of him as being pushed," said the Old Man. "There's not much you can do about that."

"I certainly can," said the Kid. "I don't know what it is right now but I'll take care of it."

"You may not have the time," said the Old Man.

"What do you mean?"

"Didn't they tell you upstairs that you were born in an election year?"

"I think I can handle it. It's just Bill Clinton against that Republican, right? What's 'is name?"

"We don't know yet. They're going to have to nominate him."

"That means primaries, doesn't it?" said the Kid. He was losing enthusiasm for the job now.

"Yes. And not only that but Gerry Studds job is open. And there already are candidates lining up for Bob Hedlund's seat. Not to mention Paul Haley's seat, if Bill Delahunt runs for Congress and leave the district attorney's job open. And that will go on all year long."

"Perhaps," suggested the Kid, "you don't have to go right away. Maybe you could stay for a while."

The Old Man smiled as he watched the last few grains of sand drain from the hourglass.

Three . . . Two . . . One. And he was gone.

Osgood enrollment soars of Straits Pond. A fishing ban is already in place on the Hull part of the pond. Advocates say a fishing ban would help protect the pond's population of fish and eel, which eat midge larvae. Midge infestations around the pond have been a serious problem in recent years.

The conservation commission this week approved a request by the sewer commission to open the tidal gates near Kimball's so the effects on Jacob's Meadow can be studied. The commission will also send a letter to selectmen and abutters urging that the condition of the tidal gates be examined.

The results of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce transportation survey are in and a clear majority of South Shore residents polled want restoration of commuter rail along the Old Colony Greenbush Line.

The chamber hired Atlantic Marketing Research Co., Inc. of Boston to conduct a 23-question telephone survey of 400 randomly chosen Greenbush corridor residents in Hingham, Weymouth, Scituate, Cohasset and in the communities adjacent to the corridor, Norwell, Marshfield and Hull. The results show that 61 percent of those polled favor or strongly favor railroad restoration while only 18 percent oppose building the line with the remainder being uncertain or neutral.

An unexpected surge in enrollment has filled the Osgood Elementary School to capacity, prompting concerned school officials to speculate that portable classrooms may have to be used to provide additional class space next year.

The town-owned Hagerty property off Parker Avenue could become the site of a second marine educational center in as many years. Margin Street resident Kevin Ulmer, who holds a doctorate in biological oceanography, told selectmen that the primary mission of the center will be to enhance and augment the science educational program for Cohasset students and those from surrounding towns. The Maritime Institute, a non-profit headed by teacher Jack Buckley, leases the antique boat house at the site and uses it as an educational center.

Rail opponents and proponents urge that the Greenbush problem come to a solution. Both sides are not enthusiastic about the busway proposal floated by state Sec. James Kerasiotes' office.

Tenants at Cushing Plaza temporarily move to new locations in preparation for construction of a new Shaw's supermarket. When their new shops are built, most will have the same amount of space they currently occupy, officials say.

Residents will be asked to appropriate $4,500 at the town's November special town meeting, to pay for naming traffic islands or squares in honor of Cohasset soldiers killed in the Vietnam or Korean Wars.

Sunday's showers were a welcome soaking, but they may have come too late for some of Cohasset's trees. Tree & Park Supt. Peter Laugelle said three trees were felled by the weekend rains and other mature trees had lost branches from the storm, again attributable to the weakened conditions of the trees due to the drought.

The conservation commission unanimously votes to ask selectmen to designate its members as "special municipal employees." But selectmen aren't sure it's such a good idea. The issue arose because two conservation commission members may have the appearance of a conflict of interest and under the state ethics regulations, special municipal employees have more leeway.

The school building committee airs its interim report on school space needs at the town's three schools. Voters at the special town meeting will be asked to appropriate funds to continue studying solutions to the problem of overcrowding especially at the Osgood School. School space plans are narrowed to three including building a new school.

A large contingent of residents and officials from Hull met with the Cohasset Conservation Commission to discuss the ongoing midge and water level problems at Straits Pond.

A Washington author looks for clues to link Cohasset Beach, Washington with Cohasset, Mass.

The future of the Hagerty site is pondered at the public forum on plans for the two-acre town-owned site.

As Cohasset's harbor continues to fill in – making it rough sailing for both commercial and recreational boaters – the town's dredging picture becomes murkier. The funding that will be needed to cover a majority of the dredging work in the federal channel is not yet in place and new and ongoing environmental concerns could increase both the delay and the cost of the project.

The Cohasset School Department sends out 39 surveys to find out why some parents decided to enroll their children this fall in schools other than the Cohasset Public Schools.

School lunches are on a low-fat diet, officials report, and have radically changed since most parents were in school.

Next month's special town meeting will take up where the zoning board of appeals left off on the subject of fast-food restaurants. The ZBA recently tied the development of Shaw's to future use of the Bergson's restaurant, stipulating that if Bergsons' ever closes, only a restaurant similar to it could operate there.

Plans to open a farmers' market at the old North Cohasset fire station may not come to fruition. Selectmen and the project's proponent learn the sewer department may need the building to use as a pumping station.

Residents have 30 days to comment on a controversial proposal to reduce the size of the town's only boatyard, the Mill River Mariner Railway, Inc. off Border Street.

'I could go crazy or get angry – so I got angry.'

Richard Henderson, 53, announces he will step down as Cohasset town counsel, a post he's held since 1982.

The Hagerty committee gets the go ahead to pursue permitting to shore up the riprap, grade the parking lot, and complete the walkway at the two-acre town-owned harbor-front site.

November

Michael Kennedy's name is floated as a possible contender for the 10th district Congressional seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds (D-Cohasset). John and Carolyn Stouffer of Hingham hold a reception for the popular congressman, who announces he will not seek a 13th congressional term.

Long-time town hall employee Patricia Walsh is trapped in the town elevator for 37 hours over the weekend. There's a cabinet inside the elevator for a telephone which was never installed.

The possibility of a Sohier Street driveway into Cohasset Plaza is off the table for the time being. In a letter to the planning board, an attorney representing plaza owner Donald Staszko, said his client requests to withdraw the application for the new access way because four of the five planning board members are opposed to it.

Cohasset tobacco retailers, stunned in earlier compliance check by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program, get a perfect score in a "sting operation" this time around.

Fourteen attempted purchased were made by out-of-town teens and all 14 were turned down.

A town cemetery off Rte. 3A off Red Fox Lane near the Super Stop & Shop is still an option, Joseph Jerz of the Cemetery Study Committee tells town meeting this week.

The Historical Society notes that record numbers visit the society's Wilson House and Maritime Museum this past summer. Newly elected president David Pottenger said the society has several activities planned for the winter months.

Town meeting voters approved four warrant articles that grant an additional $103,000 to complete the construction of the new high school athletic field, with improvements to the adjacent Milliken and Lillard Fields.

Voters also okay $95,000 for special legal counsel to represent Cohasset regarding Cohasset Height Ltds.' application to expand its landfill.

Cohasset's drug and alcohol committee faces an uphill battle in a town where heavy drinking is tolerated and denial about teenage drug use is commonplace, Craig Muir of the town's Drug and Alcohol committee warns.

With a decision on the expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill expected Dec. 1, both proponents and opponents step up their activity. Owner Paul Barry recently submitted some 200 pages of additional information to state authorities, which he wants added to the original application for expansion. The citizens' group, SAFE, has stepped its already vocal campaign against the project, encouraging residents to call the state office of Environmental Protection, DEP, which will make the decision.

Gov. William Weld will be on the Greenbush hot seat at his upcoming breakfast before the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. Chamber officials speculate Weld, who will challenge U.S. Sen. John Kerry for his senatorial seat next fall, must make an announcement on the railroad project.

The North Cohasset Fire Station is slated for use as a pumping station for the town's sewer project ending hopes for a farmer's market to be located there.

December

Gov. Weld announces the Greenbush line of the Old Colony railroad will move forward. His decision gets mixed reviews — proponents love it and opponents are angered by it.

The state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) gives qualified approval to the controversial 27.5 acre expansion project proposed by Cohasset Heights Landfill. Town officials and local environmentalists are angered and feel betrayed over the DEP's finding that the site proposed for the expansion is suitable for construction and demolition debris.

Bishop gets hoopsters on track

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers journeyed to Harwich Friday night to face the Roughriders. Coming off an emotional loss to the Scituate Sailors, Cohasset thrashed Harwich, triumphing by a score of 76-65.

After falling behind 6-0, the Skippers got going when sophomore guard Paul-Michael Quintin popped a three pointer and senior Captain Jared Hardwick knocked down a pull-up jumper. J.L. Williams, a junior forward, hit a trey of his own, bringing the tally to 8-6 in the Skippers' favor. Hardwick further displayed the visitors' long-range shooting prowess with a three-pointer.

Center Ryan Bishop, who would play what coach Ron Ford called "the best basketball he's ever played," stuffed a driving Roughrider and Williams came up with a nice stuff of his own. Williams' block led to his pull-up jumper on the other end. Yet the Skippers fell behind again, thanks to the emotional playing of the hustling Roughriders.

The Skippers appeared to be in trouble until Hardwick showed his leadership and took over. Hauling down an offensive board and hitting a reverse lay-up, he triggered a Skipper rally. Grabbing a defensive rebound on the other end, he went coast-to-coast for two more points, got fouled and sank the foul shot. Bishop upped his

Hard Day's Night

Gymnasts wobble by Scituate to remain unbeaten

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Blame it on the history of the two teams.

After all, it was Cohasset which shared the South Shore League gymnastics championship with the seemingly invincible Scituate squad two years ago before winning it outright last winter to end the Sailors' reign.

Neither team has quite been able to put the other out of its mind during the regular season. When the Skiippers go up against the Sailors, there is still a sense of urgency that they have to prove themselves all over again. For some unknown reason Cohasset always has a hard time when it comes to performing against Scituate.

Thankfully, a "hard time" by the Skippers' standards is not as much of a problem as it is for the run-of-the-mill gymnastics squad.

Cohasset wasn't nearly as sharp as usual, but still managed to pull off a close 121.55 – 120.95 victory to raise its record to an unscathed 3-0 on the season. Scituate dropped to 1-1 with the loss.

Skipper head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni knew her squad wasn't at its best, but she savored the more than any other this season.

"It wasn't our best overall performance, but it was a decent score," said Ardizzoni. "It had nothing to do with the day off. They felt the pressure. I don't know why they feel this way against Scituate."

The Skippers were shaky through the entire meet, but had enough strong scores to take the meet. Jodi Colwill and Captain Tafana Fiore finished two-three on the beam with scores of 8.0 and 7.8, respectively. Cohasset's Lauren Genovese had an exceptional night on the event, setting a new personal best with her 7.6

Colwill was the lone Skipper to place on the vault (second, 7.95) and Erica Hettstrom's third-place finish in the All-Around (30.9) made her Cohasset's only finisher in the top three. Erica's sister Tara took third on the bars (7.5) behind Scituate's top-two finishers.

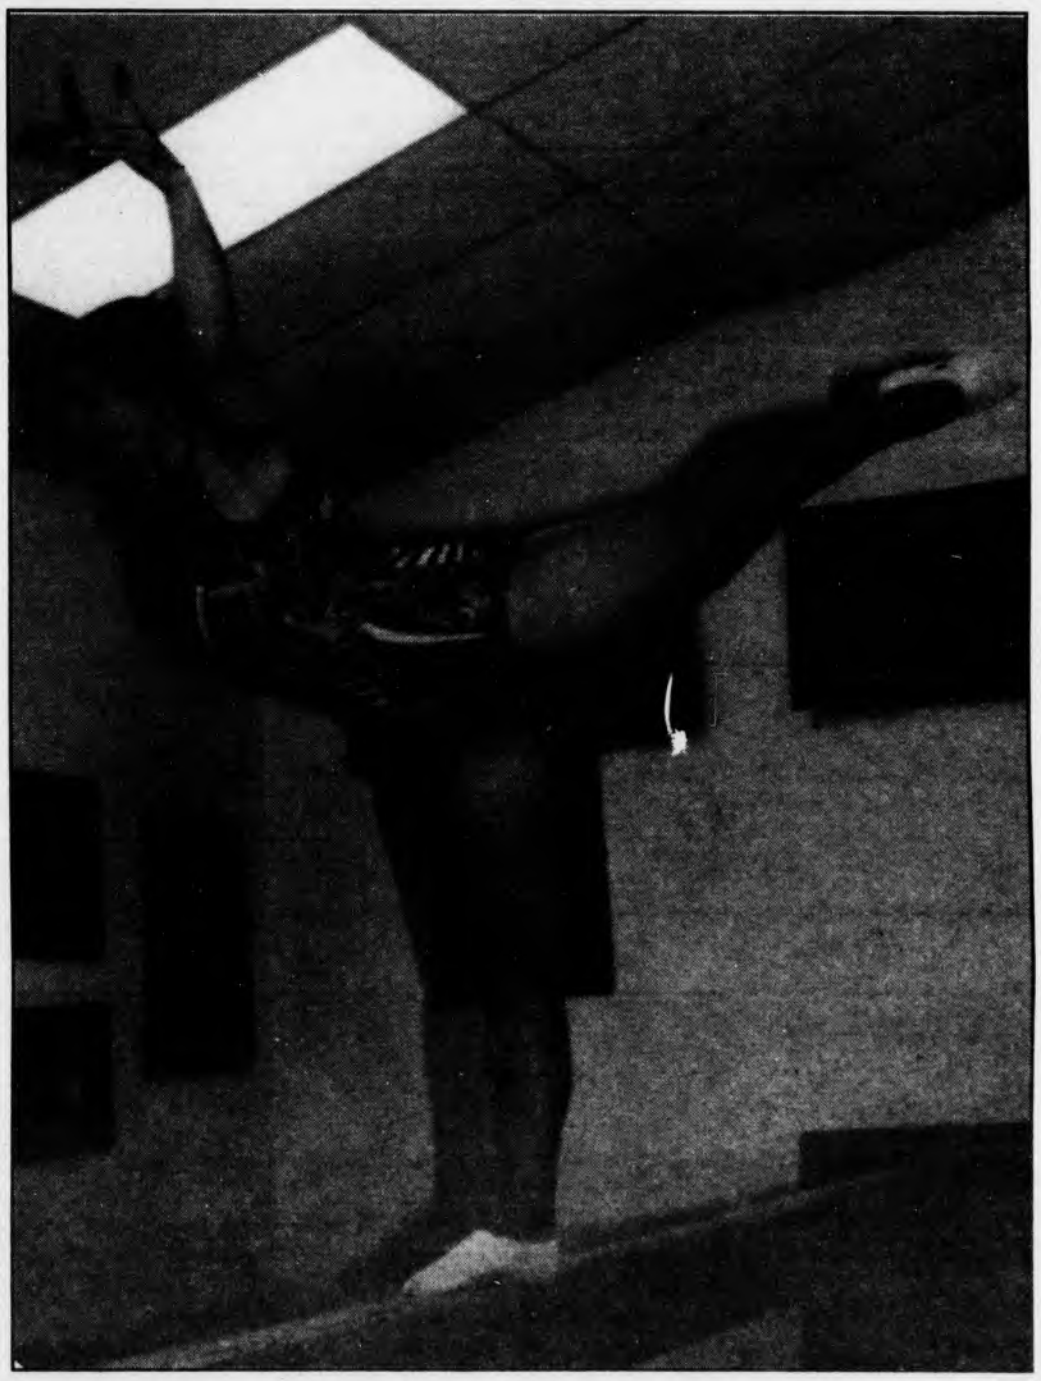
Tara edged Erica for second, 8.2 to 8.1, on the floor routine and the Skippers had win No. 3 wrapped up.

Ardizzoni believes the girls don't score their top marks against the Sailors because they are unable to totally relax during the meet. And despite winning the SSL the past two years, she thinks the intimidation factor still plays a part for Cohasset.

"They knew during the meet they wer haveing a struggle," Ardizzoni said. "I'm hoping they'll develop some more confidence in themselves

"I think they were trying so hard to do well it threw them off."

But not off far enough to go down in defeat.



Captain Tafana Fiore performs a perfect scale on the balance beam at a Cohasset gymnastics team practice. The Skippers kept their undefeated record intact with last week's 121.55 – 120.95 win over Scituate. Fiore finished third on the beam with a solid score of 7.8.

Wrestlers break long drought with sweep

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There's nothing like heading into the Christmas holiday with a smile on your face.

The Cohasset High wrestling team must have been grinning from ear to ear.

The Skippers completed a sweep in last Friday's pre-Christmas tri meet and broke a dubious streak in the process.

With their 42-37 win over Marshfield, Cohasset ended a seven-year winless drought against the Rams. The Skippers' 44-34 victory over Duxbury gave Cohasset an impressive 4-1 record on the season.

"We haven't beaten Marshfield in a while and it's always nice to beat Duxbury," said assistant coach Steve Buckley.

The Skippers were helped along by the strength of six double winners in the meet. Mike Baird (112), Tucker Gledhill (119), Jordan Fiore (130), Kevin Duffy (135), Doug Sheerin (140) and Justin Buckley (171) all recorded two wins each in the meet. The victories left Baird, Duffy and Buckley undefeated on the season in their matches.

Ben Littauer slammed his 125-pound Duxbury opponent to the mat in a pin victory and Mike Bossi's win at 145 pounds was his first varsity victory ever. Heavyweight Nate Caldwell also won his match with a pin victory against Marshfield.

The Skippers get another crack at the Rams and hope to prove their win wasn't a fluke when they compete in the two-day Marshfield Christmas Tourney. The 14-team competition gets underway on Dec. 28 and continues the next day.

Scituate ends Cohasset's reign

Hughes optimistic in girls' future on court

BY JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

When Cohasset High girls basketball coach Cori Hughes gets depressed or frustrated with the Skippers' 0-4 start, she quickly stops herself and puts things into perspective.

And when that happens, Hughes instantly begins to feel good about the future of the girls squad and the players she hopes to rebuild it with.

"I'm really pleased with their attitude," said Hughes of her very young team. "I hope the younger kids realize this is just the beginning and they can be very competitive.

"Overall, it's just a real inexperienced, young team."

After losing four of five starters to graduation, Hughes knew the Skippers would be in for a rough ride in the South Shore League this season. What Hughes didn't bank on was how strong the rest of the teams in the league would be. She figured several of the other squads would also be going through some sort of rebuilding season.

"I thought we'd have a hard time," Hughes said, "but the other teams haven't drop off like I thought they would."

The SSL has always prided itself in the quality of its basketball teams, both boys and girls.

This season is hardly an exception.

Hull, which went all the way to the Division 4 state finals, is as strong as ever. Hanover has already won as many games as it did all last year with its 3-1 start. Norwell is its usual strong self and squads from Scituate and Norton can virtually make their postseason reservations now.

Unfortunately, that doesn't leave much room for error for the Skippers. But the young players can gain mountains of experience going against tournament-calibre teams twice a week.

The Skippers' biggest problem has been in the scoring department. It's easy to see just where Hughes has to focus the most.

Cohasset averaged 40 points per game last winter. The seven seniors who graduated accounted for 30 of those points. So far, the Skippers haven't been able to make up the points with this season's team, averaging 22 points an outing. Catie Campbell, the team's most consistent scorer, is the only starter back from last year. Campbell is the only player able to put some sort of dent in making up the points of a year ago. She currently leads Cohasset with eight per game.

Despite its lack of scoring, Hughes is pleased with the way her team has played. The simple truth is that many of the girls just aren't 100-percent ready for the varsity level.

Effort has not been a problem and the team has shined on defense for much of the year. The Skippers have shown they can handle the fast break and press defenses the majority of the time. And the squad moves the ball up the court very well.

Hughes credits Co-Captain and point guard Andrea Mercurio with much of Cohasset's success in getting the ball into the opposition's zone. Mercurio rarely turns the ball over and is a strong dribbler.

"She's probably the best fundamentally-sound girl I've ever coached," Hughes said.

Tammy Maitland and Caitlan Connolly form the nucleus of the squad with Campbell and a surprising newcomer whose hell-bent play has caught Hughes' eye. Freshman Megan Connolly has shown no signs of intimidation or hesitation on the court despite her limited experience. The scrappy player definitely fits into Hughes' plans for the future of the team.

"She's really aggressive on defense," Hughes said. "She has no fear."

Freshman Katie Devine has played well and the sophomore tandem of centers Whitney Cook and Janet Hoyler will be big building blocks in the coming seasons. They're both 5-foot-11 and could be the Skippers' answer to a consistent inside game.

Forward Rachael Begley, a junior, has contributed to the squad and sophomore point guard Lauren Dooley can get the ball downcourt as fast as anyone on the team.

This year the defense did the job against Scituate by holding the Sailors to 50 points. Scituate scored 70 points against the Skippers last season. The big difference, however, was that Cohasset didn't score nearly as many points as last winter.

Hughes believes the Skippers are rushing their shots out of nervousness and inexperience. The team is setting up well and many of the girls have good form with their shots. At this point, Hughes says, it's just a matter of time before the shots begin to drop.

Hughes can't help but get excited about Cohasset's future.

Bishop gets hoopsters on track

game as well, coming up with a monstrous rejection, much to the delight of the onlooking junior varsity squad, who also triumphed earlier in the afternoon.

Junior Matt Belson, meanwhile, was busy playing tenacious defense, and helping to set the tempo for the offense. Ford was pleased with Belson's play. "I went to Belson early, and he really played well. He impressed everyone with good defense and really helped us maintain our composure out there."

Bishop's block set up a Hardwick lay-up for two more points. Then Hardwick, never one to be outdone, stuffed another frustrated Roughrider. Williams and Bishop both sank free throws to bring Cohasset within three points. Hardwick slashed to the hole for two more, then rattled off four straight points, before giving way to guards Fred Howard and Burke Davis. Howard, a senior, was the fourth Skipper to pick up a blocked shot, elevating and slapping a foolishly hoisted player into the stands.

Davis swished a three pointer and forward Brian Kilroy tore down a rebound, outletting to Hardwick, who drove the lane once again. Davis' blind pass to Bishop for two points and Kilroy's rejection closed out the half, with their squad out in front by a score of 36-30.

Howard hit a jump shot to open the second half and Hardwick, who had picked up 20 points in the first half, knocked down the Skippers' fifth three of the evening and Bishop's lay-up gave Cohasset a 43-30 lead. Davis' entry pass to Bishop resulted in another basket for the 6'8" junior. Hardwick's three-point play the old-fashioned way put the visitors up by 16 points.

His next play, a break-away tomahawk slam dunk brought roars of approval from the crowd and pumped up the squad. Howard picked a pocket and Hardwick's offensive rebounding resulted in two more points. Davis drove for two more points. Howard picked up another steal and Davis nailed another one from beyond the arc. Williams sunk a foul shot.

But Harwich showed heart, reeling off a gutsy run, igniting the home crowd and bringing the Roughriders within six. Bishop took control then, going on a run in which he outscored the entire Harwich team, 9-4. He started his Godzillian rampage with a humble lay-up and free throw. Tearing down rebound after rebound on both ends of the court, he sank two free throws. Howard's steal led to a gorgeous move by Bishop in the post for a turnaround jumper. Davis threaded the needle to Bishop.

The big guy's run ended when Hardwick nailed a three, but that was fine by Bishop. When pressed by an obnoxious young reporter after the game, he grudgingly admitted that, "It was probably the best half of basketball I've ever played. But, I couldn't have done it without my teammates."

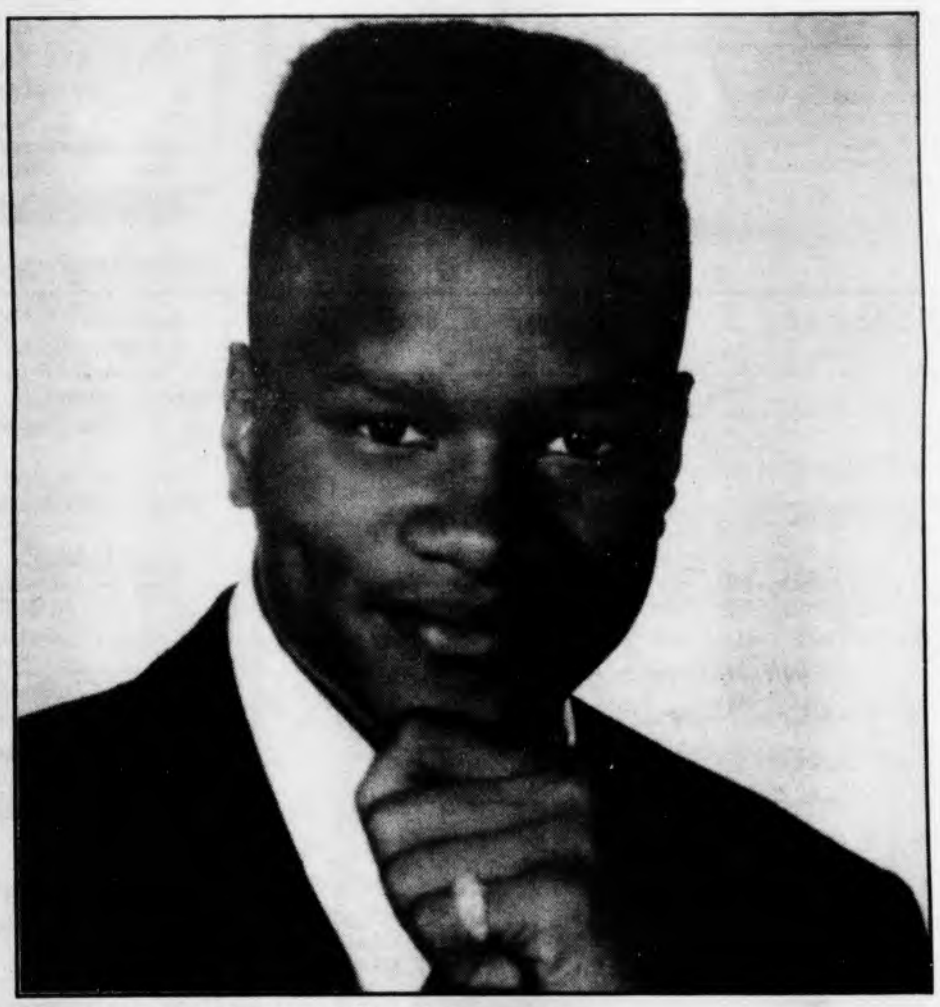
Bishop's exceptional play did not stop there, however. His offensive rebound, lay-up, and ensuing free throw put the game out of reach, despite gallant efforts by the Roughriders, including a flying Bruce Lee kick of the gym doors, a move which resulted in the player flying out the doors and landing, safely, in the snow.

Grant Emde and Lutz Grunwald came in during the second half, playing tight defense and running the offense efficiently for the Skippers.

Davis picked up a steal and hit a hustling Bishop with a pass. Bishop capitalized, as did Howard, who hit a free throw to pick up the Skippers' final point.

Ford was enthusiastic about his team's play, viewing it as "very similar to last winter's games against Cambridge Ringe and Latin and Durfee. We played two games (Scituate and Harwich) against two very tough teams, picking up a win and a loss. It was a very good experience for us."

He was particularly delighted with the play of Hardwick, who poured in 35 points for the night, Belson, and Bishop, whom he called "immense."



Keep on Running

Former Cohasset High star Ray Jones rushed for a team-high 907 yards and nine touchdowns for the Trinity College football team. Jones averaged a whopping 5.2 yards per carry and also chalked up 101 yards on receptions. The rushing total is the third best in 111 years.

Jones was a two-time ECAC Division 3 Weekly Honor Roll recipient. He had a 98-yard run against Bowdoin, the second longest in the school's history.

Happy Holidays From The Staff At Mariner Newspapers

McAuliffe commemorative is announced

For every generation there exists a defining moment, a life-changing experience, a public event that touches our lives and somehow changes us. This event is shared by all Americans as a reference point, for years, for decades, for lifetimes.

The milestone that marks the lives of the generation now finishing college or just entering the work force is the explosion of the Challenger space shuttle. School-aged America was watching the lift-off on Jan. 28, 1986, because of Christa Corrigan McAuliffe.

Christa, originally from Framingham, Mass. and a 1970 graduate of Framingham State College, was flying this mission for the school children of America. To honor her pioneering spirit, Framingham State is planning to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Challenger mission by sponsoring a series of events entitled Christa's Legacy.

To help recognize and restore the enthusiasm Christa brought to teaching, the Cohasset Mariner and 96 other Community Newspaper Co. newspapers covering Eastern Mass. are joining FSC and the Christa Corrigan McAuliffe Center in Christa's Teachers, a teacher recognition program. This program is designed as a way to say thank you to a special teacher who made a real difference in your life.

The Mariner encourages you to recognize that special teacher by submitting a nomination describing in a few paragraphs why a particular teacher has made a difference. Your nomination will be put on permanent display, along with others, in a special honor roll at the McAuliffe Center at Framingham State College.

A selection of letters will also be included in a commemorative exhibit, Christa Remembered: The Mission Continues, held at the Statehouse Jan. 22 to Feb. 2 1996. This exhibit is free and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

In addition, for a $50 donation to the McAuliffe Center, a handsome three-inch bronze Christa McAuliffe Medallion, personalized with your teacher's name, will be sent to your teacher or the school if that teacher is deceased, in your name. The donations will assist the Center in its mission to improve education and support teachers and teaching.

All nomination, donations and requests for medallions should be sent to Christa's Teachers, Christa Corrigan McAuliffe Center, Framingham State College, 100 State Street, Framingham, Mass. 01701.

Christa's Legacy also includes a program "Christa, This One's For You and The Challenger Crew", on Friday, Jan. 26, where teachers nationwide are being asked to include a teaching segment about the first teacher-astronaut and the Challenger crew in their curriculum.

Other programs include an contest to name the Space Shu the McAuliffe Center and a scholarship program.

Bible discussion group to meet

A new Bible Discussion Group will meet Friday, Jan. 5, from 7 to 8 p.m. in Cohasset Town Hall, in the small meeting room next to the elevator. The group, sponsored by Cohasset Community Church and led by its pastor, Rev. Robert Hurlbut, will meet each week at the same time and location. Relationships will be the topic of discussion.

Cohasset Community Church, sponsored by Community Baptist Church of Weymouth, is a new evangelical church which has been holding a home discussion group in the community. The new group is being formed to give more people an opportunity to participate.

The new church is affiliated with the Baptist Convention of New England, and Redland Baptist Church in Derwood, Maryland, has offered to help by sending people and resources during the new year to assist the new church minister in Cohasset. For further information, call the church at 383-9761.

Book signing at Pasquales Dec. 31

Pasquales Prints, 8 Nantasket Ave., Hull, will host a book signing Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. Authors Dave Ball and Fred Freitas will sign their latest book, "Warnings Ignored! The Story of the Portland Gale – November, 1898." The book covers all major aspects of the storm from Hull to Plymouth.

We keep track of what medications to take and when.

Individualized personal care plans.

Enjoy a good book or magazine from our community library.

Three nutritious, freshly-prepared meals each day.

Your own apartment, surrounded by your favorite things.

24-hour assistance and emergency response.

A Choice You Can Feel Good About.

Most people think mothers like to cook. But with Mom living alone these past few years, things had changed. She got tired of grocery shopping and fixing her own meals. We began to worry about her eating properly. Bathing and taking her medications on time were becoming difficult, too.

That's when we looked into assisted living at Allerton House. Allerton House is managed by the Welch family, a trusted name on the South Shore for over 45 years. Our first visit convinced us. This was a choice we all felt good about.

Last month, Mom moved into her own private apartment at Allerton House. Tomorrow, she's having us over for dinner. And she won't have to lift a finger.
